THE PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

OF THE

FIFTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

VOLUME XXXVIII, PART II.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FIFTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

according to the arithmetic of Mr. HILL, just 9,000 votes more popular than Mr. HILL is. [Laughter.] Of course, difference in population accounts for the difference in vote.

Now, let us see what the average vote is in the State of Connecticut. The average vote in 1902 for five Congressmen was 31,837 to the district, provided it is divided into five districts instead of four. In my district, out of a population of 197,370, there were cast in 1902, an off year, on one of the worst days for election that I ever saw in my life—almost raining frogs—33,361 votes, 1,524 more votes than the average vote cast in the State of Connecticut for a Representative in Congress.

Let us carry this analysis a little further.

In 1900 Missouri had a population of 3,106,665; Connecticut, 908,420. That year Missouri cast for President 683,656 votes; Connecticut, 180,140.

Under the census of 1900 and the apportionment thereunder Missouri has sixteen Representatives in Congress; Connecticut, five.

Under the present apportionment in the whole country the ratio for a Representative is 194,182. In the entire State of Missouri the ratio is 194,166. In the Ninth Missouri district, which I have the honor to represent, the population is 197,370.

In Connecticut the ratio is 181,684. In 1900 in Connecticut there was one vote cast for President for each 4.98 persons; in Missouri one vote for each 4.31 persons.

So that it required sixty-seven hundredths more of a person to cast one vote in Connecticut than in Missouri, the difference being due to the fact, no doubt, that in Connecticut the proportion of females to males is larger than in Missouri, due to the well-known fact that males migrate in greater numbers than females.

The vote of 1900 was the last full vote in either State. Stating the case as though Connecticut elected five Representatives to Congress that year instead of four, and that Missouri elected sixteen instead of fifteen, the average number of votes cast for a Representative in Connecticut would be 36,028, whereas the average number in Missouri would be 42,728.

This difference grows partially out of the fact that the ratio for a Representative in Missouri is very slightly below the ratio in the entire country, while in Connecticut it is considerably below the ratio for the whole country, Connecticut gaining somewhat in the matter of fractions. The question may be asked, and not unreasonably (as Mr. HILL declares they have self-government up there), why does not the legislature of Connecticut, which is Republican in both branches, redistrict the State? I will tell you why. Because they are afraid that the Democrats will carry two of those districts, perhaps three. That is exactly the reason for it.

They have self-government up there, have they? I will tell you what kind of self-government they have. The way the Republicans control the legislature in the State of Connecticut is that they have the same apportionment for legislative purposes substantially that they had when the Indians were driven out of the woods. The whole thing is based on the town or township system.

I was informed by quite a respectable constituent of Mr. HILL—and I am under great obligation to my brother HILL for giving me a fine recommendation when I went there to lecture—that there was a town up there near Bridgeport—a township or town, whatever they call it—that elects a State senator and two representatives to the Connecticut legislature, though it has only 28 votes in the whole township. [Laughter.] I think the number was 28—at any rate, it was very small. The representation is based on the town. Originally the towns were somewhat equal in population, but in the lapse of time some have gained in population and some have lost, which accounts for the disproportion.

That is the kind of self-government that they have in the State of Connecticut in order to keep it Republican.

Let us take another case. In nearly every State in the Union the man who receives a plurality of votes for a State office is elected; but up in Connecticut a man must get an absolute majority to be elected to a State office.

A few years ago the Democrats elected their candidate for governor by a clear plurality of all the votes. Their candidate, however, did not receive a majority. Then the matter went to the legislature, and that Republican legislature, although there was never any dispute that the Democrat had received a large plurality of all the votes, the legislature kept him out of office for all time to come.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman is fifty years behind the time. That has all been changed up there. A plurality elects in our State now.

Mr. CLARK. I am glad to hear it; but you have not changed that "rotten-borough" system of choosing the legislature.

Mr. HAY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND].

Mr. LIND. Mr. Chairman, I was very much disappointed that the gentleman from Connecticut, who just took his seat, did not tell us that when he reached England in addition to riding in parlor sleeping cars of American make he also dined on bread made from American flour; that he went to bed by an American candle; that he ate American bacon; that he spread American butter on his American bread, and likewise had an American beefsteak for his breakfast—all of which is true, is it not?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Oh, no; not at all. [Laughter.] I think the gentleman is working on a wrong basis, and has been all the afternoon.

Mr. LIND. Were you joking when you made your statement?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. No; not at all. I came through what will be inside of fifty years the greatest agricultural country in the world.

Mr. LIND. What country do you mean?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Siberia.

Mr. LIND. I am speaking about England. [Laughter.] What I have stated was true when you reached England, was it not?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I was unable to distinguish exactly what sort of food I did eat in England. I took what came along.

Mr. LIND. But you believed it was American. Even the drinks, I presume, were in part American, because I think Kentucky has made some conquests over there. [Laughter.]

Now, I want to read what our Republican Secretary of Agriculture said in his last report. After giving all due credit to American industrial exports, because they are entitled to some credit, and we all rejoice to find that they are making progress, the Secretary continues:

> During the last fourteen years there was a balance of trade in favor of farm products, without excepting any year, that amounted to $4,806,000,000. Against this was an adverse balance of trade in products other than those of the farm, of $865,000,000, and the farmers not only canceled this immense obligation, but had enough left to place $3,940,000,000 to the credit of the nation when the books of international exchange were balanced.

That is what makes me solicitous over the results if Mr. Chamberlain's policy should prevail, so that under their new fiscal system they would be in position to discriminate against our agricultural products. We can not deny them the right to do so if they choose. It is the American farm products that have contributed and maintained the balance of trade in our favor and made us strong financially; and I say that any scheme that threatens to close the doors to the continued demand abroad for American farm products is a menace, not only to our prosperity, but to our very comfort.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Will the gentleman pardon me a question? I ask him to say frankly whether he thinks it would be good policy for the American Congress now to revise the tariff on Democratic principles before it is determined what Mr. Chamberlain's policy is going to be?

Mr. LIND. I think it would be good policy for the American people to forestall Chamberlain's policy.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Do you think that anything we might do would affect his policy at all?

Mr. LIND. We can forestall that policy in either of two ways: First, by extending fair treatment to Canada (because Canada is of necessity the corner stone of Chamberlain's imperial policy) and keep her out of it. Secondly, we can say to England: "For half a century you have given us absolute freedom in your markets to the millions, yes, the billions, of agricultural products that we have produced. We appreciate that fact, and it is only fair that we should discriminate in favor of your industrial goods."

I would say that, rather than let Chamberlain exclude from their markets our farm products, we should give English industrial goods preferential rates in our market so long as England continues to admit our farm products free. Carry out the policy suggested in one of the sections of the Dingley law, which I have been told was designed to serve such a purpose. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HAY. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five minutes, and yields it to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I sought to interpolate a question when the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] was speaking, but his time was not sufficient for him to address himself to the House on the subject that he was discussing, and I was unable to do so. I will present it now, and I am sorry the time can not permit an answer to it in the time that I now have, but the gentleman can do so in his own time. It is this:

Does the gentleman from Connecticut not know that the Dingley tariff schedules, which he glorifies so much, by reason of their operation in sheltering trusts in this country, compel manufacturers of agricultural implements of Akron, Ohio, in the district of the distinguished gentleman from that State [Mr. DICK], and compels the shipyards and the shipbuilders in Maine, represented by the gentleman from that State [Mr. LITTLEFIELD]—does he not know that the tariff schedules, affording a shelter to trusts as they do, compel those people to go to London and across the sea to secure American steel, which they do, at a cheaper rate after paying cost of shipment than they can purchase that same American steel in the United States?

And if the gentleman does not know that, and as it is about the time of adjournment, and it will take a little time to inquire of those informed, I will refer him to the statements made by those two gentlemen upon this floor in the caucus of the Republican party within two years as reported by the reliable press of Washington, in which they warned their party to reduce the sacred tariff schedules covering these commodities. And does he not know that that applies not only to steel, but to general commodities manufactured and sheltered along these lines? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HULL. Read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1905:

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10760, the army appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

BOARD OF REGENTS OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Library be discharged from the further consideration of Senate joint resolution 32, and that it now be considered by the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the following joint resolution, which will be read by its title, be now considered by the House, and the Committee on the Library discharged.

Mr. HAY. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know what it is.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution (S. R. 32) to fill the vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

Resolved, etc., That the vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than Members of Congress, shall be filled by the reappointment of John B. Henderson and Alexander Graham Bell, residents of the city of Washington, whose terms of office expire on January 24, 1904.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have the resolution that I send to the Clerk's desk considered now.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be authorized to have printed and bound whatever papers and documents in connection with subjects under consideration by the committee may be necessary to the transaction of its business; also, that the committee be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

S. 465. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to permit the Pintsch Compressing Company to lay pipes in certain streets in the city of Washington," approved May 19, 1896;

S. 652. An act making Chester, Pa., a subport of entry;

S. R. 31. Joint resolution authorizing the erection and maintenance of a monument in memory of the late President Benjamin Harrison, upon land owned by the United States in the city of Indianapolis, State of Indiana; and

S. 1496. An act supplemental to the act of February 9, 1821, incorporating the Columbian College, in the District of Columbia, and the acts amendatory thereof.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate concurrent resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 37:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of New Meadows River, Maine, with a view to its improvement from the head of navigation to deep water in Casco Bay.

to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, reference of the bill (S. 2418) granting a pension to Marit Johnson was changed from the Committee on Invalid Pensions to the Committee on Pensions.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CROWLEY, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. HULL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the brig William, Thomas Farnham, master, against The United States—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of James F. Rust, administrator of the estate of Isaac Rust, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

There being no objection, the resolution reported by Mr. KEAN on the 20th instant was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate be authorized to employ one clerk in the Senate post-office at a compensation of $1,200 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided by law.

EMPLOYEES IN THE GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2665) to provide for the allowance and payment to the employees of the Government Printing Office of the same leave of absence as is allowed to the clerks and employees of the Executive Departments of the Government, to report it unanimously, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and to submit a written report thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed substitute will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. The amendment of the Committee on Printing is to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That from and after the date of the passage of this act the thirty days' annual leave of absence with pay in any one year to employees of the Government Printing Office authorized by the existing law shall be exclusive of Sundays and legal holidays: Provided, That the existing laws relating to the granting of annual leave with pay to clerks and employees in the Executive Departments shall apply to clerks and employees of the Government Printing Office who are paid annual or monthly salaries or compensation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT of New York. I ask that the accompanying letter from the Public Printer be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. Pending that, I should like to hear the letter from the Public Printer, which the Senator from New York asks shall be read. I do not quite understand the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE,
OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC PRINTER,
Washington, D. C., January 19, 1904.

Hon. T. C. PLATT,
Chairman Committee on Printing,
United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 9th instant, calling my attention to the bill (S. 2665, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session) providing for the allowance and payment to the employees of the Government Printing Office of the same leave of absence as is allowed the clerks and employees of the Executive Departments of the Government.

Replying to your request that I furnish the Committee on Printing with an expression of my views in respect to the feasibility of the enactment of this bill into law, stating about what cost would be entailed, I have to advise you that as the law is at present administered, under decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury, the employees of this Office are allowed pay for not exceeding twenty-six days accrued in any one fiscal year. It is estimated that it will require $328,000 to pay the leaves accrued to June 30, 1903. Four additional days would add four twenty-sixths to this sum, or about $50,500.

In the event that the Committee on Printing shall agree that such legislation is desirable, I would suggest that the language of the proviso in section 4 of the legislative act of February 24, 1899 (30 Stat., 890), be followed. The additional law will then read, "That from and after the date of the passage of this act the thirty days' annual leave of absence with pay in any one year to employees of the Government Printing Office authorized by existing law shall be exclusive of Sundays and legal holidays."

It would facilitate the keeping of individual accounts in the office if a proviso should be added as follows:

"Provided, That the existing laws relating to the granting of annual leave with pay to clerks and employees in the Executive Departments shall apply to clerks and employees of the Government Printing Office who are paid annual or monthly salaries or compensation."

Respectfully, F. W. PALMER, Public Printer.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Printing, Mr. President—possibly it is an unnecessary question—whether this bill carries any arrears of pay.

Mr. PLATT of New York. It does not.

Mr. GALLINGER. And it simply puts these employees on the same basis with the clerks and other employees in the several Departments?

Mr. PLATT of New York. Exactly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I see no objection to it.

Mr. CULLOM. I only want to say that I believe I myself introduced a bill for the exact purpose, as stated by the Senator from New Hampshire, to treat all the clerks and employees alike.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to ask——

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to its consideration?

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to ask the Senator from New York a question for information. I notice that there is a distinction drawn between clerks and employees who draw an annual or monthly salary and those who do not. I should like to inquire if the Senator can inform us what proportion of the employees are paid by the day or week.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I do not know what the proportion is, but I know that this bill will increase the appropriation $50,000.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator one other question. Is there any provision, any positive provision, in the bill that it shall not be construed as authorizing or admitting any claim for arrears of pay?

Mr. PLATT of New York. I do not think there is any such provision in the bill, but I will accept that amendment.

Mr. HALE. After the bill has been read, I will prepare an amendment which will cover that point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read. The question before the Senate now is whether it shall be considered.

Mr. HALE. Let it be read again.

Mr. TILLMAN. As I did not hear it read, before I give my consent for its consideration I should like to know what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Committee on Printing, striking out all after the enacting clause, will be again read.

The Secretary again read the proposed substitute.

Mr. ALLISON. Is that all there is of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is all there is to it.

Mr. ALLISON. It is proposed to strike out the text of the bill and insert the provision which has been read?

Mr. PLATT of New York. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What has been read is a substitute for the bill as originally introduced.

Mr. ALLISON. These matters of leaves of absence and pay are usually disposed of in appropriation bills. I think it will turn out that if this provision is made applicable to the Government Printing Office it will also later on be applied to a great many people who are not included now.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it is quite impossible for anyone to understand what the effect of the bill will be. I understand that it has just come from the committee. If there is an opportunity to object to it, I want to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is. Objection is made.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say that I do not know that I am opposed to the bill, but I do not know what the bill is, and I can not satisfy myself by the hasty reading at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes to the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. Before it goes to the Calendar, I will offer the amendment, that it may be printed and go with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the proposed substitute the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as authorizing or admitting any claim for arrears of pay or compensation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed, and it will be regarded as pending.

Mr. HALE. As pending.

MISBRANDED SALMON FISH.

Mr. FULTON. I am directed by the Committee on Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (S. 220) prohibiting the introduction into any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, from any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia, or from any foreign country, or shipment to any foreign country, any misbranded salmon fish prepared or intended for use as an article of food, to report it with amendments and to submit a written report. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Oregon. It is hard to catch the full effect of the bill in its reading. Does this proposed penalty for shipping misbranded fish apply to people who have bought the fish in market, who have no means of knowing whether they are misbranded?

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, it does not apply to them. It only applies to persons who buy fish for the purpose of misbranding or knowing them to be misbranded.

I will state briefly the effect of the bill. It does not require the article or package to be labeled, but if it is labeled it requires that it should be labeled truthfully. It applies to only one article, and that is salmon fish, and prohibits mislabeling or misbranding as to the locality where the fish are taken, the season of the year when taken, or the species of the fish.

The practice has grown up on the Pacific coast of labeling all salmon as being the very best fish in the Columbia River. For instance, the Columbia River chinook salmon are supposed to be the very best salmon, and probably the Puget Sound sock-eye are the next. Very inferior fish are taken in other waters, but they are seldom ever labeled other than Columbia River chinook salmon or Puget Sound sock-eye salmon. The object of the bill is to require them to label the fish exactly what they are and the season of the year in which they are taken, because a fish taken in the springtime is far superior to one taken in the fall. So it should be labeled spring or fall. that is, if labeled at all.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. TELLER. I want to object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Before the Senator objects——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made——

Mr. TELLER. I will waive the objection, in order to give the Senator from Connecticut an opportunity to make a remark.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The bill appears to apply to everybody who may in the usual course of business buy canned salmon which may have been misbranded. I think the bill ought to go over, that we may have an opportunity to look at it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The consideration of the bill is objected to.

Mr. TELLER. I object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes to the Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3752) for the relief of the heirs of James W. Wilkins; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. ALDRICH submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $152.13 to pay the salary due Franklin Moses, as register of the land office at St. Michael, Alaska, from May 31 to July 7, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,500 for consul at Colonia, Uruguay, intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FAIRBANKS submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the Assistant Secretary of the Department of the Interior from $4,000 to $5,000, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

RECESS APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, in pursuance of the notice I gave yesterday, I ask leave to call up Senate resolution No. 51, in order that I may——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the resolution indicated by him may be brought before the Senate for consideration. It is one that has been lying on the table.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to make some remarks on it before asking whether the Senate will pass it or not or seeing what they will do with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does not the Senator desire to have the resolution read?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, sir; I want to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the resolution being taken from the table now for consideration?

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no objection to its being taken up for discussion.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is all I want.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is before the Senate. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. TILLMAN December 11, 1903, as follows:

Whereas Article II, section 2, of the Constitution of the United States provides:

"The President shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint * * * all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for and which shall be established by law."

And further:

"The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies which may happen during the recess of the Senate by granting commissions, which shall expire at the end of the session;" and

Whereas it is known that certain officers appointed during the recess of Congress from March 4 last to November 9, and whose appointments were not confirmed by the Senate, are now in possession of and exercising the powers and functions of said offices: Be it

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee of the Senate be, and it is hereby, authorized and instructed to report to the Senate:

First. What constitutes a "recess of the Senate," and what are the powers and limitations of the Executive in making appointments in such cases.

Second. What legislation is necessary to prevent the holding of an office by any person or persons whose commissions issue or are held by Executive exercise of unlawful authority, if any there be.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, there has been considerable confusion. Most Senators are familiar with these two quotations from the Constitution anyway, but I notice that in the print there are two mistakes. I should like to have those corrected and to have a reprint of the resolution ordered, even if the Senate puts it in the wastebasket.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator will call the attention of the clerks to the mistakes they will make the corrections he desires.

Mr. TILLMAN. The resolution is not lined, but in the second paragraph the word "which," in the second line, should be "that;" and at the end of the third line the phrase "at the end of the session" should read "at the end of their next session." The Constitution is quoted wrongly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those corrections will be made.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I trust Senators will not consider that this is an academic proposition or a moot question which I have submitted here; and I would beg, if possible, that no one shall inject into it any partisan feeling or any suspicion that I am actuated by partisan feeling. To quote the language of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] yesterday evening, he did me the honor to say that I am an adroit debater and sometimes change the point of attack. I want to say that this is not a new attack on the Executive, who has been under fire for some time. In other words, I wish to impress Senators with the fact that in bringing this subject to the attention of this body I am actuated solely by a desire that we shall not, by negligence or seeming acquiescence, establish a precedent in the construction of the Constitution and the interpretation of it by the President, which will be of immense danger and harm in the future.

Now, why did I introduce this resolution? I simply want to find out what the Senate itself thinks of the new doctrine of a constructive recess. We have been passing along the road of our national life for one hundred and twenty-odd years, and never before has any President, or Vice-President who succeeded to the office, undertaken to claim that this clause of the Constitution is not perfectly plain and, to an honest mind, unmistakable in its meaning. Let me read it:

The President shall have power to fill all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session.

Language can not be made plainer. Nobody in the past has had any doubt about the meaning of these words, but it has remained for our present Executive, under that excess of knowledge which has been given to him alone, apparently, or that insight into constitutional law which enables him to see farther than other people, to claim or assert a right and exercise the power of making appointments between 12 o'clock and 12 o'clock of the same day.

In other words, there is at least one officer holding an important position, and I think a good many others, though I have not taken the trouble to verify my information, who hold commissions to-day which are said to have been given in the recess of the Senate, who, under those commissions, are exercising the powers and functions of their offices, and who are receiving or will receive compensation for their work.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do.

Mr. HALE. I did not know, Mr. President, that the President of the United States had in any way by any act of his committed himself to the proposition that when the extra session called by him closed at 12 o'clock on December 7, 1903, and immediately the regular session began there was a constructive recess between them. I have not learned, and have yet to learn, that the President has committed himself to that proposition. Appointments afterwards were made where the commissions had expired. But I had supposed the whole question whether or not if anybody—not the President, but if any officer appointed afterwards—whose nomination was sent to the Senate and confirmed claims that he has the same right, the same salary that he would have if there had been an actual recess, that the Comptroller would settle that.

I have never doubted, Mr. President, that the Comptroller would make short work of this question. The Constitution does not deal in tricks and surprises. The recess contemplated in it is an actual recess, a recess that may be used properly in the administration of the Government when there is time, and should be, in order that a new appointment be made.

I never took any stock in the theory that there was a constructive recess between 12 o'clock and 12 o'clock, and I do not know, but I doubt, whether many or any Senators have taken that ground. Therefore I say that I am rather surprised that the Senator from South Carolina states that the President of the United States has committed himself to that proposition. I did not so understand, and I hope that he has not.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am making a statement of facts.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator state just what the President has done?

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, my dear sir, will you not let me proceed in my own way?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator does not want to answer the question, very well.

Mr. TILLMAN. I expect to answer any proper question presented in the proper way, and in my own way.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I certainly owe the Senator from South Carolina an apology for asking him a question from my seat. I should have risen and asked him the question. I merely asked him to give us information as to just what the President had done of which he complained. But, further, I will say to the Senator that I have merely asked the question for the purpose of getting information. I do not know what information the Senator possesses to vindicate his comments in this case.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator has now complied with the requirements which are sometimes observed here when the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] is in the chair; and I was not protected, as he usually does protect the Senator who has the floor, by the present occupant of the chair [Mr. FRYE], who is always lenient and kindly in dealing with all Senators, including me, who am—well, a chronic breaker of the rules, not intentionally, but through ignorance or from lack of aptitude to learn them, or something of that sort.

I want to answer the Senator's question; I want to answer frankly, and I want to answer without any tinge of resentment or any indication whatever that I have any feeling in the matter, for I have none.

I was interrupted in my answer to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I am sorry that I have mislaid for the moment a letter which I received in reply to an inquiry I addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, in which the matter is put in official form. I will either get the original, which I am having looked up, or I will send to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury and ask for a copy. But, as I recall the facts, they are these: I directed an inquiry to Mr. Shaw as to when or on what date a commission was issued to William H. Crum as collector at Charleston. He had been appointed, I believe, four or five times, but he had never been confirmed.

I asked Mr. Shaw to tell me whether Mr. Crum was now holding office, and, if so, under what authority. In answer to that, he replied, giving the date when Mr. Crum received his recess commission, and then went on to state that he was now in office and the authority for it was that precisely at 12 o'clock on the 7th of December a new appointment was made and a new commission issued under it. So we have one of the Cabinet officers—and undoubtedly under the instruction or by the authority of the President—taking the position that such a thing as a constructive recess between the adjournment of a session of Congress and the convening of a session, even though there be no time intervening, is one of the things which we have come to have in our governmental affairs.

Now, so far as Mr. Crum is concerned, it may be considered by Senators that I am interested in the matter because of his connection with it. That is not the case. I am interested in it because of the fact that the Constitution of the United States does not recognize, according to my interpretation of it, any such thing; and the presence in the office of collector of customs at the port of Charleston of this man, under a commission issued by the President of the United States, exercising its functions and performing its duties, and who in time is to claim its emoluments, is a direct violation of the Constitution itself and of the law also.

That is my contention and that is my idea. I would contend for the rights of Congress and of the Senate just as quickly and as promptly and as zealously if my State was not interested as I do now. I simply want this body to take cognizance of a new interpretation of the organic law of the land and to decide what it will do to protect its ancient rights. That is all.

In examining into the status of this question to see what had been the habit and custom heretofore, and whether such a thing as this had ever been attempted, I came on some very, very interesting history. I found that before the expiration of the Thirty-ninth Congress, by an act of Congress approved January 22, 1867, Congress itself enacted a law which changed the time of the meeting of the following Congress from the first Monday in December to March 4; in other words, the expiring Congress called its successor by law to meet the moment that it itself died.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do with pleasure, always.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator contends that there was no recess, then, as I understand him?

Mr. TILLMAN. When the President pro tempore arose in his seat and announced that the time for the assembling, as I recall his words, of the first regular session of the Fifty-eighth Congress had arrived, he said: "I declare the extra session adjourned sine die. The Senate will come to order." If any man who claims to have any common sense can stand up and undertake to say that there can be any recess under those conditions I do not understand the meaning of the word "recess."

Mr. SPOONER rose.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not know what the Senator is going to contend, of course, but if he should now, contrary to all of my anticipations and expectations and my most valuable admiration for him, destroy it all, why, of course, I shall have to take whatever comes. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPOONER. Of course, Mr. President, it is not for the Senator to say how valuable his admiration for me is. It is for me to say that. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. No, it is for me to give my estimation of it, my friend. I do not give my admiration without it is deserved first; therefore it is valuable.

Mr. SPOONER. And that is why I value it. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. Thank you.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not intend to disappoint the Senator from South Carolina in anything I may say. I do not intend to give approval to the notion that there can be a constructive recess.

Mr. TILLMAN. I know that you can not. But I will sit down until the Senator gets through.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator once in a while is an accurate prophet. The law takes no account of the fraction of a day and the Constitution takes no account of the fraction of a minute; but the point to which I desire to attract the attention of the Senator for only a moment, and not by way of argument, is this: He contends that the President had appointed this officer in an actual recess.

Mr. TILLMAN. I did not contend it. I only stated that the Secretary of the Treasury had informed me of the facts.

Mr. SPOONER. But when we adjourned at the last regular session—I mean the session ending in March—there of course was a vacancy.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. The officer not having been confirmed he was recommissioned; and that was lawful.

Mr. TILLMAN. He was reappointed and commissioned.

Mr. SPOONER. He was reappointed and commissioned.

Mr. TILLMAN. And that was lawful.

Mr. SPOONER. That was lawful. Now, here is what troubles me: His name was sent in again for confirmation, was it not, when Congress met in extra session in November?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes; for confirmation as a recess appointment.

Mr. SPOONER. For confirmation?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, if there has been no recess since that time, there has been a continuous session, and would he not hold until the adjournment of this session? If that be not true, then is this difficulty not presented, that where one session runs into another, with no moment of time intervening, the office would be vacant on the Senator's theory? Does not the way the Senate is constituted prevent that?

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator make that point?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is the finest one I have ever heard my friend make, but it will not go. [Laughter.]

Mr. HALE. Let me ask a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. HALE. I want to put before you the whole scope of the suggestion.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not justifying a new commission.

Mr. HALE. That is the point I was coming to. The actual result of that would be that if there were no recess, no interposition of a recess, and the Congress continues straight along, the old appointment would hold good.

Mr. SPOONER. That is what I say.

Mr. HALE. But the old commission, received in an undoubted recess, which was lawful, would run over and still live. That would be the Senator's idea?

Mr. SPOONER. And that office would be vacant after the adjournment of this session.

Mr. HALE. That would not justify a new appointment.

Mr. SPOONER. No; and that is the only question.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is the sharpest legal point or quibble I have ever known the Senator to raise here, but he himself, if he will just dismiss the idea that I am attacking his party or his President and will discuss this question and analyze it as a lawyer——

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not impugn the Senator's loyalty to his convictions, but I hope he will not get up and defend himself until I attack him. I relied on him a moment ago and he did not disappoint me, and I am going to rely on him again, but I want to elucidate my position a little before he proceeds. [Laughter.]

Let us look at the language of the Constitution itself. It declares that—

> The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session.

Not during the recess. Now, the fact that we never did adjourn the extraordinary session, the fact that the two sessions merged, can not by any legal quibble be distorted into the contention or the acknowledgment that the two sessions created a recess, or that because the two sessions did not separate, except for a moment of time while the Chair announced the death of one and the beginning of the other, therefore there was no end of the other session.

Mr. SPOONER. I agree——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from South Carolina upon the question of a constructive recess. I only presented to him what presented itself to me as a matter of the practical consequence—I do not undertake to solve it—of the situation. I do not pretend to say what the law is about it, although I do say it would seem to be clear that where the nomination of a person who had been appointed in actual recess, and whose nomination had been sent to the Senate at an extra session, and he was in possession of the office under the recess appointment, he would continue in possession of the office until the adjournment of the Senate without his confirmation. If where the sessions run into each other he is not to continue to hold, then the office is without an occupant. There is nothing technical about it. I am not controverting the position of the Senator.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator is endeavoring to help me throw light on this question, I will give him the credit of that until I discover that he has got a cat in the meal tub somewhere.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not keep cats. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator will excuse my homely comparison, but the Senator is so sudden and so resourceful, he is so keen and shrewd and alert and adroit, and all that kind of thing, that I sometimes fear him even when he brings me gifts. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator does me injustice.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then I apologize and take it all back. I believe that we are all honest and that the Senator agrees with me. Now go on.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina—and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] sees the point that troubles me about this——

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator let me cut the Gordian knot? I can do it in a second.

Mr. SPOONER. One moment. I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that there is a distinction between the Senate and the House of Representatives.

Mr. TILLMAN. That the Senate never dies. I know that.

Mr. SPOONER. That is right. The Senate is a continuing body.

Mr. TILLMAN. But a commission does die.

Mr. SPOONER. But I am not talking about a commission. My question is whether a man, having been commissioned in an actual recess, having taken possession of an office and being in the discharge of its duties—this being a continuing body—whether, where two sessions of the Senate run into each other, there being no interregnum, he does not of necessity and to safeguard the public interest, as intended by the constitutional provision, continue to discharge the duties of the office until the end of the session?

Mr. HALE. Under his old commission?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. TILLMAN. In a moment, Mr. President, I shall be glad to have all the light I can get from any quarter, because I have a great deal of it here that I am going to give you gentlemen before I get through. I have got some startling stuff here for you. [Laughter.] Now I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. DANIEL. I thank the Senator from South Carolina.

In the case referred to would not the trouble have been obviated if the next morning the President had sent a new appointment to this body and let the former appointment drop at the end of the extraordinary session?

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. DANIEL. Just let me state my point. If the last commission had expired with the last moment of the extra session, could not the President have sent in a new nomination to the new Senate just as easily as to have interpreted a recess and made the appointment in that so-called recess?

Mr. TILLMAN. Let me show you how far wrong all you lawyers are. [Laughter.] Who held the office and who performed its duties prior to the issuing of this commission? I found this vacancy had existed more than a year. This Crum matter has become one of the causes célèbres of this country. It has involved in it that miserable race question, which is to plague us for a million years, it appears. Crum was appointed and reappointed, but never in a recess, until we adjourned last March; yet the Government went on and the duties at Charleston were collected. There was a man there, the deputy collector, who performed the duties of the office, and who was ready to step back and take the place of his chief as soon as the Senate refused to confirm him. That contention about a vacancy will not do.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. But the office was vacant.

Mr. SPOONER. I was not making the suggestion with reference to Crum.

Mr. TILLMAN. That will answer.

Mr. SPOONER. It does not answer.

Mr. TILLMAN. It answers as an illustration of the point the Senator is contending for.

Mr. SPOONER. No; it does not. I do not say what I am contending for; but suppose during a time of war the question involved the man who should be at the head of the Army, directing the affairs and operations of the Army in defense of the country, what then?

Mr. TILLMAN. Let me answer that. There are always certain officers to hold over until their successors are "appointed and qualify." No general in command of an army will ever give up his position and go off and leave it without a head until his successor has been appointed, has presented himself to take command, and is able to state, "By order of the President, I am to succeed you." So that case will not do; it is absolutely too far-fetched, and the Senator will have to try again.

I want Senators who may be in doubt, as perhaps some of them are honestly in doubt, not to forget the words of the Constitution itself:

> The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session.

The Constitution says the appointment can only be made in the recess, but if the Senate has had the opportunity to pass upon it and has failed to do so the man goes out. You can not successfully dispute the lawfulness and justice of my contention.

This is a session of the Senate. Why, look at your own acts here. Look at your CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which shows that the first session of the Fifty-eighth Congress adjourned, disappeared, went into history, on the 7th of December, and a new session, the second session, began. You are contending against all the precedents from the foundation of the Government until this time.

But let me go back to my record. I read a moment ago the act of Congress approved January 22, 1867, at the time when the meeting of Congress was changed from the first Monday in December to March 4. Why? An examination into the history of those times will show you that the then sitting Congress felt unwilling to adjourn on the 4th day of March, and leave this Government in the hands of Andrew Johnson between March and December, with no lawful authority in itself to convene. The debates all prove it.

The next Congress met on March 4, the day on which it was called together by law, and on March 30 adjourned until July 3. They would not adjourn until the December date, but they went to July, feeling that they had sufficiently handcuffed the President or had terrorized him or hedged him about so that he could accomplish nothing detrimental between March and July.

They met on July 3 and remained in session until July 20, when they adjourned, or, rather, took a recess to November 21, 1867, when they adjourned on December 2, without day.

They met again in regular session on the same day, December 2, 1867, and remained in session until July 27, 1868. In other words, the regular session began just as our session this year began, the minute the extra session or the adjourned session ended. They met again on the 21st of September, 1868, and adjourned on the same day to October 16. They met again on October 16, 1868, and adjourned on the same day to November 10. They met again on November 10 and adjourned on the same day, without day. In other words, they had accomplished their purpose. They had passed all the laws they thought needful. They had tried to impeach the President and failed, but had sufficiently hamstrung him or terrorized him or done whatever you choose to call it, so that they did not feel that he could do any more harm.

But all this did not happen without discussion, and I want to read from that debate. I was very much interested, when I came across these speeches in the RECORD, to see how differently men can look at things when they allow supposed party advantage to bias them or to cause their minds all to go in one direction.

On the 21st of March, 1867, a resolution providing for adjournment sine die being before the Senate, Mr. Sumner took the floor in opposition, and used the words I will quote.

I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will remain in the Chamber. While he may not have very much respect for Mr. Sumner as a lawyer, he must have great respect for him as a statesman, and I want him to catch Mr. Sumner's idea of constitutional limitations.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator care particularly precisely what part of the Chamber I am in?

Mr. TILLMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I took it for granted he was going out.

Mr. SPOONER. No.

Mr. TILLMAN. My friend is always so fascinating and is such an exhilarating adjunct to my talks that I like to have him around.

These are the words of Mr. Sumner, in discussing this proposed adjournment:

> You must not forget that our President is a bad man. This is the first fact. He is a bad man, who is the author of incalculable woe to his country, and especially to that part which has been most tried by war and most needed kindly care. Search history, and I am sure that you will find no ruler who, during the same short space of time, has done so much mischief to his country. He stands alone in bad eminence. Nobody in ancient or modern times can be his parallel. Alone in the evil he has done, he is also alone in the maudlin and frantic manner—> the maudlin and frantic manner which he has adopted. Look at his acts and read his speeches. This is enough.

I want you to watch those adjectives—

> Such is the fact. And now I ask, Can Congress quietly vote to go home and leave this bad man without hindrance of any kind? These scenes are historic. His conduct is historic. Permit me to remind you that your course with regard to him will be historic. It can never be forgotten if you keep your seats and meet the usurper face to face; it can never be forgotten if, leaving your seats, you let him remain master to do as he pleases. Most of all, he covets your absence. Do not indulge him.

Looking along in the discussion in regard to these various recesses and adjournments from day to day, I came on another interesting and meaty sentence or two. Speaking of this same President, the then Senator from Michigan, Mr. Howard, uses these words, and he is putting words in the mouth of the President himself as illustrating the feeling, the purpose, the idea, the ambition, the self-reliance, and all that which actuated President Johnson; and he makes Mr. Johnson say:

> I am he who holds your destinies in his hand; I must be obeyed; I am the infallible judge of the Constitution. I have unrolled it; I understand it; I am conscientious; Congress and the so-called loyal people are not conscientious; I am patriotic; they are not; they are traitors; I am great; they are small; they must be put down; I must be put up; and you must remain in your present condition until I have had my way.

There are suspicions abroad and intimations from very respectable sources that history is repeating itself. But I do not want to be partisan and I am not making any attack on our Executive. I am trying to get the Senate to discuss and dispose of this new issue which has arisen without considering the present occupant of the White House, and solely as great lawyers and great statesmen, as leaders of a great party who have made history and who are to-day being watched to see how far they are going to allow these usurpations to go before they cry, "Halt!"

There was another discussion in regard to the adjournment and the dangers that might come from a constructive recess, the very milk of the cocoanut, so to speak, of these old speeches. I quote:

Mr. GRIMES. I offer the following resolution for adoption:

"Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House do adjourn their respective Houses without day on Monday, the 2d of December next, at half past 11 o'clock a. m."

I will state here that Monday, the 2d day of December, was the first Monday in December, when Congress, under the Constitution, was to convene in regular session.

Mr. SUMNER. I would suggest "at 12 o'clock."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not wish to object to its consideration, but I have a serious question whether we should leave even the break of half an hour between the two sessions. The point in my mind is just this: Will you leave the President of the United States one half hour within which he may take advantage of the absence of Congress and issue commissions which would then run perhaps—I do not undertake to decide the point now, but which I say might run then to the last day of the next session of the Senate.

Just what is being contended for here now.

That may be midsummer or autumn. We may not leave here before autumn. I take it that an appointment made during that interim of half an hour might possibly be valid to the last day of the next session of Congress.

Mr. Sumner did not think the vacancy in the office would create any legal question at all.

Mr. MITCHELL. What became of the resolution?

Mr. TILLMAN. Wait; I am going to give you the history of it. I am going to read the debate. This ancient history is valuable, because as we pass along and new headlights come up, new ideas take possession of us as a people, and as we go crazy, seemingly, with this new, dazzling dream of empire and all that sort of thing, we must, as Mr. Webster says, be guided by the lamps of experience if we are to go right; and if we lose our heads and permit some men to go ahead boldly and rashly their way there is no telling where we will land.

Mr. Edmunds, in answer to Mr. Sumner, said:

But the law takes no notice of parts of a day.

Other lawyers knew that as well as the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SUMNER. Why open the question? That is a technicality.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not think the question is worth having a debate about, and I am content that any amendment should be made to the resolution which the Senator from Massachusetts chooses to suggest.

Mr. SUMNER. Why not say "12 o'clock?"

Mr. GRIMES. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa so modify the resolution?

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, sir.

Then Mr. Sherman, another great statesman of this country, one of the greatest that it has ever known, a leader whose work for good or bad is here to stay as an enduring monument to his intellectuality and his hold upon the public confidence, said what I shall read.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure. I hope the Senator does not object to my paying a compliment to Republicans.

Mr. SPOONER. But I object to your always waiting until after they are dead.

Mr. TILLMAN. I just paid the Senator from Wisconsin one compliment, and as nice a one as I could frame. If it does not suit him, I will write him one, and I will just lard it down with sweetmeats. Have I not just now said that you are great lawyers and great statesmen? And I am waiting to see whether you are bound hand and foot to the President's chariot wheel and are going to be dragged in the mire of loss of self-respect, and all that sort of thing, by yielding to this constructive recess proposition. I do not believe it. I am going to wait and see. I have faith that there are yet statesmanship and patriotism among the great men on that side.

Mr. Sherman said:

I can not see any object in passing this concurrent resolution. The Constitution provides that the regular session of Congress shall be on the first Monday of December, and according to law, I believe—or, at any rate, such is the usage—the hour for meeting on that day is 12 o'clock. We shall meet at that time in a new session. The recent law has not changed that regular time of meeting, and the result is that the next session of Congress will commence necessarily at noon on Monday. Why not allow the two sessions to merge? Why not have this session go on and expire by the necessary limitation fixed by law and the Constitution? I think that would be better. I do not see any object to be gained by passing a resolution for adjournment sine die. I would vote with pleasure for a recess until Monday at half-past 11 o'clock, and let one session blend with the other. I see no objection to that course, while the passage of a resolution for adjournment sine die may raise questions which we will have to meet hereafter. I have not examined the question, nor thought about it, but I have supposed that by a recess or some process of that kind this session would be continued till Monday and terminate at the beginning of the other without a formal vote.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It strikes me that there should be, in accordance with universal usage—though, to be sure, this is rather an exceptional case—a joint resolution fixing the time when this session shall terminate. I am perfectly agreed that it is not advisable perhaps to have any very appreciable interval of time, or any very considerable time, at any rate, between the termination of this session and the commencement of the next regular session. Still, I think that there should be an appreciable distinction, and that we should fix the time of adjournment and adjourn accordingly. I have no very fixed opinion in relation to the matter that I am not willing to give up to the opinion of others if they choose to take the responsibility. I see no objection to fixing the time at five minutes before 12 o'clock, if you please, so as to have some little interregnum or interval between the expiration of one session of Congress and the commencement of another. This is the idea I have entertained and expressed to several gentlemen in conversation on the subject, and my own opinion is that it would be better, because in accordance with usage. I do not think that five minutes would be a time within which any very great harm could be done. It is with reference rather to the record, and to keeping things in order on the record, that I suggest that it would be well to have the usual joint resolution of adjournment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I merely desire to say that I am indifferent as to what particular time we adjourn sine die. This session, I suppose, will close at some time, and individually it is immaterial to me whether it is to-day or next Monday; but I wish to put in my protest against any such reason as is advanced here in the Senate. I think the Congress of the United States should pursue the even tenor of its way, and while we have a President, I am for treating him as President, and I will not anticipate that he is going to do some terrible thing during five minutes between 11 o'clock and 55 minutes next Monday and 12 o'clock. Let him take the consequences of his acts. Let us legislate, do our business, and adjourn without any reference to any rumors about the town that a certain thing is to be done and not to be done. I care nothing about it. I do not believe this country is to be ruined or destroyed in any five minutes, and therefore I hope that whatever time we fix, and I am indifferent about it, will be fixed in reference to our own convenience and the convenience of Congress, and not in reference to what somebody may suppose that some other department of the Government is going to do.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope that what we may do may be done with reference to the welfare of the country and with no particular reference to any rumors or reports. There I agree with my friend; but then I do not agree with him when he says, "Give the President another chance." We have already been giving him chances, and we can not act now in any way without taking into consideration his character and position. Those are now matters of history. I wish to speak with proper delicacy, with proper reserve, when I allude to him, but I must speak under the responsibility of a Senator. A large portion of our country believe the President to be a wicked man, of evil thought and unpatriotic purposes, and in spirit and conduct the successor of Jefferson Davis, through whom, at this moment, the rebellion is revived. Those are the sentiments of a large portion of our people.

Mr. DIXON. I desire to ask the Senator if that is the opinion of a majority of the American people, in his judgment?

Mr. SUMNER. Well, that does not belong to the question. I say it is unquestionably the opinion of a large portion of the people of the United States, whether a majority or not, the future may disclose. I do not wish to go in advance or anticipate any such judgment. I speak now simply with reference to what is before us. The question is whether we shall give him another opportunity. I say "No." In arriving at that conclusion I do not act on any rumor that is afloat to which the Senator from Illinois refers. I act with reference to the character of the Chief Magistrate as displayed in his public acts, and it seems to me that it will be something like rashness in the Senate if they concede to him another occasion to practice on the country in the carrying out of his policy as we know that he has practiced in times past. I feel that we ought to stop the way. We should not give him a day; we should not give him five minutes—I am ready to say that—not five minutes for the chance of an exercise of illegitimate power. I will not allow him to exercise it and then take my chance hereafter of applying the corrective. "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure." Such is an old saying, and now is an occasion for its application.

And that brings me to the exact point as to whether the present session should expire precisely at the time when the coming session begins. I see no reason why it should not. I see no reason why we would interpose the buffer even of five minutes. Let one session come right up close upon the other, and then we shall exclude every possibility of evil consequences from the character of the Chief Magistrate. It is well known that in other governments, when, for instance, the king dies, the moment the breath is out of his body power is in his successor, so that there is a common saying, "The king is dead; long live the king." Now, I know not why, when this session expires, we may not at the same time announce its expiration and announce the beginning of the new session.

Now, Mr. President, all of that discussion of constitutional law and interpretation of the Constitution has but one meaning, that this doctrine of a recess or of a vacancy that might arise by reason of the expiration of a commission and all that kind of thing, which has just been announced by the Senator from Wisconsin, was thought of by those men. They would not give Andrew Johnson one minute, for they felt if they did he might appoint some one in the interim who would, under his construction and contention, hold the office until the expiration of the succeeding session, as the Constitution provided.

Mr. HALE. Was not this the substance of it? It is in the line of what the Senator said, and his reading has been very interesting, bearing upon the exact subject before us. It seems that at that time the question arose whether any interval should be allowed between the extra session and the regular session, and to avoid any possible question and utterly to put down and extirpate any idea that there could be recess, the farthest process was taken, to merge the two sessions.

At that most interesting point in our history the very question which is raised by the Senator from South Carolina came up, and it was deemed conclusive that all questions as to there being a recess were set at rest by the two sessions being merged, the one immediately succeeding the other. What was good law then is good law now.

I am glad the Senator has introduced this matter. I do not agree with him, perhaps, in what he intends to invoke in the way of similarities between persons at that time and this; but the occasion was a great occasion, an important occasion, and it seems to have been settled that if the two sessions were merged, nobody, not even a refractory President, as I believe there was at that time, who took great responsibilities, would for a moment intimate that there was a recess, an instantaneous recess. That seems to have been settled by the precedent which the Senator from South Carolina has invoked, and I am very glad he invoked it.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from South Carolina has not told us what became of the resolution.

Mr. TILLMAN. They passed it. The resolution was passed unanimously merging the two sessions and adjourning the first session at 12 o'clock, when its successor met immediately, just as we did here at the expiration of the special session called to meet on the 9th day of November.

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But in our case there was no resolution of adjournment.

Mr. TILLMAN. The two sessions went together, as they contended, and the law was settled, as the Senator from Maine has said; at least, it appears to have been settled, because the President took no chance, and nobody contended that there was a possibility for him to make an appointment between the second of time of the adjournment of the one session and the convention of the other. I can not see how there can be any difference of opinion here as to the final result.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from South Carolina will allow me, they were making and were engaged in a hand-to-hand fight with the then President.

Mr. TILLMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HALE. They wanted to take the measure that would be most absolutely conclusive as to giving him an instant when he could exercise his appointing power; and the method they took was to merge the two sessions.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator from South Carolina permit me?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think the Senator misunderstood the remark I made in my seat. I called attention to the fact that I supposed that Congress was adjourned by resolution of the two Houses, and that we had no such resolution. I do not claim that it makes any difference. But there was that difference in fact.

Mr. TILLMAN. We adjourned at the expiration of the extra session on the 7th day of December just passed. They passed a resolution adjourning at 12 o'clock. There was a proposition to adjourn at 11, then at half past 11, but Mr. Sumner and Mr. Sherman both contended that they did not want to give the President the opportunity of five minutes or one minute in which to do anything which might pester them afterwards, and they preferred to prevent an improper appointment rather than to undertake to undo it afterwards or to apply the corrective or the remedy.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think perhaps the case now is stronger than that was, because that Congress passed a resolution of adjournment. It was passed by the two Houses of Congress. In this case no resolution was passed. The Senate simply was declared to be adjourned just a moment before 12 o'clock.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was not here during the interesting contention, which I saw mentioned in the papers, when an effort was made by somebody somewhere else to make us do business according to other methods than our own, and the unhappy controversy as to whether or not the Senate should remain in session because other men wanted the House to remain. But I notice that we did not adjourn and that we did not vote and that we proceeded on the even tenor of our way and that the Cuban reciprocity bill became a law in due time. But it was not born before the Senate got ready that it should be born.

The only difference I can see in the situation then and now is this: At that day and time there was an overwhelming majority, two-thirds and more, considerably more than there is now, of the same party as the President, and who had elected him Vice-President, and of course had to acquiesce in his accession to authority upon the death of Mr. Lincoln. They took these steps to hedge him about, to halt him, to stop him.

Now, the President has this large majority behind him, willing, apparently acquiescing in all his acts, indorsing them, approving them, applauding them, urging some of them perhaps. There is the difference.

So far as this little case of Crum is concerned, Crum might be the most important officer in the United States Government. My friend from Wisconsin is very prolific in suggestions that great harm might come in the case of the head of the Army. Suppose justices of the Supreme Court were appointed under these circumstances of a constructive recess; that there was a case involving most vital interests before that court, and that the court was evenly divided, with these new men going in and holding the balance of power and being able to turn around the law in its interpretation, what harm could come?

I am only giving that as one of the possibilities, and my purpose, as I said in the beginning, is not to call attention to the necessary parallel in the minds of some, or to the possible dangers; but I am endeavoring to keep a precedent from being established. I am endeavoring to keep the Senate, in a trivial cause, one that has not and can not work any harm, from allowing its authority and the accepted interpretation of the Constitution to lapse; from giving the temptation to some usurper hereafter, or the excuse to some usurper hereafter, to say, "Why, in the Administration of Mr. Roosevelt this was permitted. It was passed over by the Senate, and thereby acquiesced in; and it is all right!"

We all know what a precedent in law is. Precedents are very, very troublesome things, and I, in my feeble way, have tried to call attention to what I consider a very grave constitutional question. While in its present shape it works no harm and can work none, yet if we do not now stop and have the Senate declare what it knows and means to be a recess, what it considers the power of the Executive in making appointments during a recess and issuing commissions thereafter, we will in the future, or our children will, come to that day when it can be said sadly:

> It is the little rift within the lute
> That by and by will make the music mute,

We Senators here have grave responsibilities. We are intrusted with the liberties of this Government and of its orderly constitutional administration. Let us not, in the mad haste to give approval to this man or that, for supposed party necessity, ignore this little thing now. Let us stop it.

Mr. HALE. Now, let me interrupt the Senator for a moment. The Senator has not succeeded—I will not put it in that way, for I know he did not want to bring out from this side any expression of a recognition of this new proposition that there was a constructive recess when the two sessions merged. On the other hand, everything that has been said upon this side of the Chamber is in dissent from it. No Senator on this side has, whatever may be his partisan feeling, indicated it. I think, with the Senator from Connecticut, that the present case is even stronger than the case in 1867, to which the Senator has referred.

I say again, I do not know of any Senator who adopts or proposes to adopt or act upon the suggestion that here was a constructive recess upon which the President might act as if it had been a longer recess.

The Constitution does not deal with surprises and evasions and subtleties. It has been found on an examination of the records that the nominations—Mr. Crum's, General Wood's, and others—that were sent to the actual session, the present session, the regular session, were not sent in as recess appointments. If the Senator will go back he will find that these same appointments that were made after our adjournment in March were afterwards sent in at the extra session: that they were sent in in November as recess appointments. That the Senator does not object to?

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, not at all. That is the law.

Mr. HALE. That is the practice.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is customary.

Mr. HALE. That is the practice. It is the law. Now, the appointments that were sent in at this session, after the two sessions had been merged, the appointment of Mr. Crum, of General Wood, and others, were not, as I understand from an examination which has been made of the records, sent in as recess appointments, but they were sent in in the manner suggested by the Senator from Virginia, as regular appointments.

I started, when I first interrupted the Senator, by saying that I did not know that the President had committed himself to this doctrine of a constructive recess. His appointments, his nominations—that is the technical word—sent to the Senate at this session do not assume to have been sent in as recess appointments. They are sent in as new appointments.

Now, the question as to who takes possession of the office and gets the salary——

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will allow me, do I understand him to assert or to only express the hope that these appointments are of this character?

Mr. HALE. The papers show——

Mr. TILLMAN. The papers show the contrary, at least the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury to me, and the papers in the possession of the executive clerks will demonstrate whether I am right or not.

Mr. HALE. I have not made the examination, but it has been stated to me during the debate that those papers have been looked up and it is found that the appointments sent in at this session were not sent in as recess appointments but as new regular appointments; and I was going on to say that if that be so——

Mr. TILLMAN. I deny it, upon the authority of Mr. Shaw, as far as Crum is concerned.

Mr. HALE. I do not make the statement——

Mr. TILLMAN. I further deny it from the fact that Mr. Crum is now in office, and he could not hold it a moment after the expiration of his commission unless he had been given a new one, and he could not be given a commission while the Senate was in session. So it was a recess appointment.

Mr. HALE. I have not said that I have examined the papers, but I have been told that the appointments which were made at this session when sent in to the Senate (and an inspection will easily settle that) were not sent in as recess appointments but as original appointments. Now, I am not prepared to say that that is true. It has been so stated here, and it can easily be settled by looking at the original papers.

If that be true, the only question to come up will be as to who is entitled to perform the duties of collector during the time that is now going on—whether the new appointee or the deputy collector. If the new appointment was not sent in as a recess appointment, if the new appointee claims that he has the right under the proposition that there was a constructive recess, the whole question will be fought out before the Comptroller, who will decide upon the whole law, and, as I have said, I have no doubt that that officer, who is a very able and a very worthy man, of the highest integrity, will make short shrift of the proposition that there was a constructive recess. But it will be settled by him and by nobody else.

Between this time and whenever the resolution will come up again—for it will go over at 2 o'clock for the present—an examination can be made as to what the appointments were that were sent in.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TILLMAN. I had hoped to get the resolution acted on, but that will not be the case if the debate continues.

It is a very interesting and a very important matter, and I want all the light I can get on the question. I know the Senator from Colorado will shed some, and I yield to him.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think the question that is presented by both the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Wisconsin has been in effect decided by the Supreme Court of the United States—not in a case that is almost parallel to this, but in a case that rested upon a statute whose language as to the termination of an office is identical, I think, with the language of the section of the Constitution that is under consideration. The decision went as to the responsibility of sureties on the bond of a collector, and without taking the time now to read the entire case, I will simply suggest the name of the case, so that other Senators may examine it.

Without undertaking to read it, I will state, briefly, what the facts were. The question arose in an action of debt on a collector's bond. It is the case of United States v. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheaton, 720–738. Mr. Reed had been appointed to the office of collector, and the name of the surety was Kirkpatrick. The collector was appointed to the office by the President on the 11th of November, 1813, and by the terms of his commission he was to hold his office during the pleasure of the President and until the end of the next session of the Senate of the United States, and no longer. Early in the year following his appointment, in January, 1814, the President sent in his name, making a second appointment of the same person. He continued in the performance of the duties of his office, proved to be a defaulter, and an action was brought by the Government against the principal and the sureties on the bond.

One of the defenses that was made was that he could not be responsible on his bond for acts that were done after the termination of the session of Congress to which his nomination had been sent in. The judge of the trial court held that he could be, as his possession of the office continued. He gave no new bond when his second appointment was made and confirmed. The Supreme Court reviewed that proposition, and the language of the Supreme Court it seems to me will place it more clearly before the Senate than I could in the use of my language. The decision was rendered by Mr. Justice Story. I will read about a page:

> The act under which this appointment was made authorizes the President, in the recess of the Senate, to make appointments by granting commissions, which shall expire at the end of their next session.

That is practically the language of the Constitution.

> The first commission is, as has been already stated, in conformity to this provision of the act, and is, by express terms, limited to continue to the end of the next session of the Senate, and no longer.

The commission used the words "and no longer."

> It follows, therefore, both by the enactment of law and the form of the grant—

Replying, of course, to the commission—

> that the first commission must have expired of itself at that period; and, as the next session of the Senate ended in April, 1814, that is the utmost extent to which it could reach. The bond in question was given with express reference to this commission; and its obligatory force was, consequently, confined to acts done while that commission had a legal continuance, and could not go beyond it; and here would have been the natural termination of the liability. But in the meantime a new appointment was made by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, and as soon as that was accepted by the collector it was a virtual superseding and surrender of the former commission. The two commissions can not be considered as one continuing appointment without manifest repugnancy. The commissions are not only different in date, and given under different authorities and sureties, but they are of different natures. The first is limited in its duration to a specified period; the second is unlimited in duration, and during the pleasure of the President. If the latter operated merely as a confirmation of the former, then it confirmed its existence only during the original period fixed by the law. But such an effect is not pretended, and would be irreconcilable with the terms and intent of the commission. It has been suggested that the practice of the Government has been to consider such commissions as one continuing commission. But whatever weight the practice of the Government may be entitled to in cases of doubtful construction, it can have no influence to change the clear language of the law. In short, if the nomination to and approval by the Senate was a mere confirmation, and not equivalent to a new appointment, there was no necessity for the second commission; and yet the argument supposes that it could not be dispensed with, for if no commission had been issued the first, by its own limitation, would have expired.

It seems to me that this case establishes this proposition at least, beyond any question, that where an appointment is made under language such as was used in this law and such as is used in the section of the Constitution that has been read, the appointment or the possession of the office must absolutely end with the arrival of the period at which the commission expired under the law, and that time is at the expiration of the session of the Senate, if the appointee has not been confirmed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There is no question about that.

Mr. PATTERSON. Now, if his bond would not continue after the expiration of the session of the Senate, if his bondsmen would not be liable for malfeasance in office after the expiration of the session of the Senate, then surely we may properly deduce that he is not permitted to perform the duties of the office, but that that office is vacant, its duties to be performed by some deputy or some other person until, an appointment being sent in during the session of the Senate, the Senate has confirmed that appointment.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me—it is almost 2 o'clock—I think that is law and unquestioned law, and I am glad the Senator has brought that decision here. I want to look at it still further. It will be found, I think, on a complete examination that that is a clear assertion of unquestioned law that has been recognized ever since, but I doubt whether it reaches the precise conditions under which we find ourselves. However, there will be an opportunity when the resolution comes up again to go more fully into that question.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the Calendar of General Orders.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may go back on the table, subject to the same call for future discussion. In other words, I do not want it to go to the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would go to the Calendar unless the Senate otherwise ordered.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that it shall remain on the table, subject to the same rights it has had heretofore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the resolution shall lie on the table without prejudice. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

RELATIONS WITH NEW GRANADA OR COLOMBIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution which will be stated. The Chair is assuming unanimous consent whenever he lays this resolution before the Senate.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 73, by Mr. GORMAN, calling upon the President for certain information touching former negotiations of the United States with the Governments of New Granada or Colombia, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I have intended for some days, if I could get an opportunity to do so, to submit to the Senate some observations on the questions which have been debated in connection with the resolution of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. I have listened with patience and with great instruction and profit to everything that has been said. A good many speeches have been made, none of them irrelevant to the question and many of them full of research and of learning. I have found pleasure in listening to them all, although I am bound to confess that some of them were a little long for the ordinary uses of a world like this.

The subject-matter of the debate is not new to anyone. Among my first recollections of public questions was the project of the Nicaragua Canal, and speeches upon that subject made by the honored President of the Senate [Mr. FRYE], then a Member of the House of Representatives, at the beginning of his great and useful public career. When I first came to this Capitol, whenever I wanted to secure a sense of repose and calm, I used to wander over to this Chamber and seldom failed to hear my honored friend from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] impressing upon the Senate and upon the world his ideas of the Nicaragua Canal.

I never heard a word spoken or said that did not appear to me to be wise and reasonable; and yet I never saw in all my contact with the outside world that anybody in the United States not in Congress appeared to take the slightest interest in the canal question, ably and fully as it was presented during a whole generation. I confess that it made very little impression upon me.

None of us probably ever saw a moment when we did not think that some time and somewhere and in some way a canal would be dug across the Isthmus. I never took any acute interest in the subject, and never met anybody else who did, until the occasion of our intervention in behalf of the colonies of Spain, when Captain Clark, of the Oregon, under orders, left Mare Island and steamed down one side of South America and up the other just for the luxury of getting in two or three shots at the Cristobal Colon.

From that day the isthmian canal was already in sight. From that day it has been a live question. The argument for the canal has interested everybody. It may even be described as having become a burning question, as many gentlemen certainly on the other side of the Chamber can testify in their present contact with their constituency.

It never seemed to make much difference to me whether the isthmian canal was dug at Nicaragua or at Panama until the last session of Congress. I confess that I was in favor of digging it at Nicaragua, because I had never heard anybody else mention any other place to dig it, and I supposed, as everybody else did, that the ground at Panama had already been occupied by other people.

My convictions on the subject of the Panama Canal date from the morning when somebody, I suspected at the time the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA], whose credentials of reelection to the Senate, read in the Chamber this morning, have brought gratification to our hearts, hung upon the wall there a map of the Isthmus of Panama, and I confess, without any intentional disrepect to speeches long or short, that that map did more to convince the Senate and to convince the world that we had been seeking to make a canal at the wrong place on the Isthmus than all that has been spoken in debate in these thirty years.

Nearly everybody bases his practical views of things primarily on his theology, and the moment I saw that map, indicating the coast line and the lay of the land at Panama, it appeared to me to be absolutely conclusive that the good Providence which is above us, if He ever intended the canal to be built there at all, intended it to be built where the Isthmus is 49 miles wide and not to be constructed where it is 183 miles wide.

I do not believe that any argument, any report of engineers, any inherited enthusiasm on the subject could disturb the opinion of anybody who made a study of that map hanging on the walls of this Chamber. From that day to this the practical question is whether the canal shall be built at Panama or not built at all. I confess that, in common with the people of the United States everywhere, I have acquired not only an interest but an earnest zeal for having the isthmian canal dug, and dug promptly, without further delay.

A good many people think that the Government of the United States has been engaged in very unbecoming and unseemly performances of an underground character at Panama. I have never even taken an interest in those suspicions which have been scattered broadcast over the world. The very nature of the subject makes it morally incredible that the people of the United States should desire to do anything either by indirection or by subterranean methods of any kind.

We are not doing there a thing altogether for ourselves. When I come to meditate upon what we have in hand there, it appears to me that we have placed the Republic of the United States upon a moral level the like of which has never been occupied by any nation in the whole history of the world. We are proposing to take our own money, to employ our own labor, taking our own risk, and constructing at Panama a public work, not at the cost of millions, but of tens of millions, and it may be of hundreds of millions, and having done that, we propose to donate it to the human race and dedicate it for all time to come to the uses of the world's commerce and business upon exactly the same terms for its use that we claim for ourselves.

In view of a situation like that it appears to me to disparage and to impeach the very national character to suppose that anybody, from our highest public official down to our lowest, would care to smirch that transaction with any questionable methods of procedure. Therefore, I for one have been sorry that this great discussion which has gone peacefully and solemnly on now for nearly seventy years in the United States should, in the last stages of it, become the subject of a mean and petty personal and partisan contention.

I have never seen a minute when I attributed to a President of the United States, whether he belonged to my own political faith or the faith of our adversaries, a dishonorable or low motive in the transaction of the business of the people of the United States. It is one of the guaranties of our form of government, one of the monuments of our national character, that from the first President to the last, though some have been great and some not entirely great, we never have had a President whose motives could be successfully impeached at the bar of American history.

It is to be regretted that in the midst of learned discussions, such as have been made here by the two Senators from Colorado, discussions in no sense wanting in dignity and in the respect which belongs to this place and to the coordinate branches of the Government, there should have been noises heard here and voices raised here altogether out of character either with the subject or with its surroundings.

I listened with a good deal of humiliation to speeches charging that the President of the United States had made the revolution at Panama unanimous by conducting it himself. I heard a Senator say in this Chamber that in what has been done every act of the President has been in violation of the Constitution, of the law, and of international law, and of the treaties of the United States; and, more shameful and humiliating than anything else, men have stood here and excused the mobs which pursue men without the process of law, and the anarchists arrayed against all government and against all law, by the example of contempt for law set by the God-fearing, patriotic President of the United States.

I do not propose to stop to answer such a thing as that. I merely allude to it to indicate how far mere partisan contention may belittle a great controversy even in the Senate of the United States. I suppose it is true that wherever speech is free and wherever printing is free our form of government is exposed to that infirmity and to that scandal. Certainly everywhere in the world where there has been free government the arena of partisan politics has been filled all the time, or nearly all the time, by the dust of partisan contention and personal abuse.

The parliamentary annals of Great Britain indicate that that was always so there, especially in the last century, and if a man will read the present discussions going on upon the hustings of England he will perceive that it is still so there. It certainly has been so here from the very beginning of our affairs. Not a single President of the United States has been able to escape, not even Washington, that serene and august figure which stands at the very beginning of our national life, nor Lincoln, nor Grant. Some of our Presidents have been compelled to bear the double misfortune—as in the case of Mr. Cleveland—the misfortune of being defamed first by one political party and then by the other.

I would not intimate that the safety of our institutions or even the dignity of the Senate require any abridgment of the right of speech or of the right to print which belongs to our inheritance and is a part of the body of our liberties. I reckon that however grievous the afflictions have been, arising out of the abuse of these rights, infinitely worse grievances would arise out of their abridgment, certainly in the Senate of the United States.

I have alluded to the matter only for the purpose of bringing into view a higher ideal of political life, an ideal which I hope will one day enable us to hold the little differences of our partisan opinions in an atmosphere of gentlemanly kindness and good will.

The President of the United States is accused of violating every obligation which it is his duty to enforce and to observe. One Senator accuses him of violating the Constitution of the United States.

I do not intend to discuss that for two reasons. I have made up my mind that while I expect to keep up my study of the Constitution, reading as many law books as I can, and listening to as many arguments as my strength will bear on the subject, I never intend, unless under provocation that I can not now foresee, to buffet the Constitution of the United States about in a Senatorial debate. Others, abler men, will take care of that; others, with a more natural taste for it, can take care of that on both sides.

In this particular case I feel that everybody here is more or less relieved because one of the great constitutional lawyers on the opposite side of the Chamber, who I am sorry not to see present to-day, has already notified his constituents that, rather than change his convictions, he will retire from public life, and has distinctly omitted to charge that any violation of the Constitution has occurred in this connection. That being so, the Constitution certainly needs no guardian on this side of the Chamber to protect it against these imaginary infractions.

But we are told that the President of the United States has violated the law; and one Senator stands here by the hour pointing out that the Spooner Act has been violated. I was here when the Spooner Act was passed. I have read it again and again; but I confess a certain humility and timidity about offering myself as its interpreter; but I have come gradually to the opinion that if anybody is likely to understand what the Spooner Act means, the author of that act is the man to whom we should go with our anxious inquiries.

He is, as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has just said, a great lawyer, and the author of that act probably approaches as near the area of competent interpretation of it as any man in this Chamber. When I heard him the other day take up that act, line by line, and prove, with such satisfaction to the Senate that everybody acquiesced in it, and with such conclusiveness to the other side that my honored friend the Senator from South Carolina, in a more or less panic-stricken manner, departed from the Chamber rather than be disturbed by any further demonstration of his error, I made up my mind that that act needs no defense here from anybody else.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. DOLLIVER. With great pleasure.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have always regarded my friend from Iowa as being a fair man, and he must recall the fact that under the constant appeals of the ticking of the clock and that shaking of the hand by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], which is so effective in a personal interruption, I had pledged myself not to speak and bother him any more, and that, when I went out, I announced that my departure was because I could not sit still and listen any longer to his wild vagaries without breaking my pledge.

Mr. DOLLIVER. And the Senator from Wisconsin rejoined, as you were passing through the door, that it was a very serious reflection for him that he had lived long enough to have his vagaries reprimanded by the Senator from South Carolina. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. Which I did not hear.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Unfortunately you did not.

Now, Mr. President, the Spooner Act looks to me plain. It may not be. We had here one day a canon of interpretation of the Constitution of the United States that struck me as very interesting and very novel.

A Senator stood up here and said that where the Constitution was difficult to understand, where it was complex and appeared ambiguous, he was willing to take the opinions of our fathers and the precedents of the national history upon it; but where it was so plain that almost anybody could understand it he proposed to take his own opinion, notwithstanding it might not follow the judgment of our ancestors or the practice of the Government. It looks as if the Spooner law is plain enough for nearly anybody to understand; but if there is dispute about it, if it is ambiguous, if there is an element of uncertainty in it at all, when I want to get at the real meaning of it I propose to sit down with the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin and ask everybody to keep quiet until he can give his views of what he meant by the language of that law.

That law required the President to negotiate with Colombia for an isthmian canal. Men have discussed that subject as if the main object of that law was to get up a negotiation with the United States of Colombia, and hold us to that Government even if the subject-matter of the treaty passed within another jurisdiction altogether. If I understand it, the object of that law was a canal, and not a tête-à-tête with the foreign minister of Colombia, so that the moment the canal zone passed into the hands of Panama the negotiation followed the subject-matter and not the name of the countries.

No man can take this record of the proceedings of the Colombian Government in dealing with this treaty and say that at any time in that negotiation, from the time the treaty was sent to the Colombian Senate until the extraordinary session of the present Congress convened, the President of the United States could have turned aside to deal with Nicaragua without a violation of the law and a flagrant disregard for the recognized and well-settled policy of the Government of the United States in locating the isthmian canal.

So that when a man bases his criticism of the President on the ground that he treated the Spooner law with contempt, it seems to me that he needs to more thoroughly investigate the circumstances which surrounded this treaty with the United States of Colombia.

Again, it has been said that the President has trampled upon international law. If that charge were true, it is a grievous charge to make against the Government of the United States, because the peace of the world, the orderly progress of the world, the great interests of civilization, require a careful observance of the recognized principles of international law; but if I have got hold of the right text-books, international law is not as exact a science as there is in this world.

International law, if my researches have given a correct light on the subject, is rather a statement of what the nations of the world from time to time have done rather than a codification of precepts applicable to all cases and under all circumstances.

If the President violated international law, how did he violate it? It is said that he recognized an immature and what has been described here as a comic-opera republic in Panama.

It is true that the President of the United States recognized the independent existence of the new State of Panama, but, in my humble opinion, it is not true that in doing that he violated any international law. Again and again it has been pointed out in this debate that the United States has in times past recognized—without formality or delay—new states, the result of revolutions and other political convulsions. The fact is that the motive that governs a nation in recognizing a new state is essentially a motive lying in the heart and conscience of that nation itself, and has little if anything to do with any precepts of international law.

We recognized the French Republic after the Franco-Prussian war, notwithstanding the fact that the French Emperor had 100,000 veteran soldiers in the field ready to defend what remained of the Government of France, and yet Mr. Washburne said distinctly that he felt the necessity of immediately recognizing the French Republic, though it had not taken on any international relations at all and was menaced by the remnants of the imperial army of Napoleon and also in the streets of Paris by the mob proposing to reestablish the Commune.

He recognized that government almost instantly under direction from our State Department, first, because of our sympathy with republicanism in France, and, second, because the President's recognition was necessary in order to prevent the people and Government of France from being plunged into an interminable civil conflict, beginning with a reign of terror in the streets of Paris.

We recognized almost instantly the new Government of Brazil. I remember very distinctly meeting one night the minister from Brazil, representing the benevolent and amiable Emperor Dom Pedro, and the very next night the minister appeared at the banquet of the Loyal Legion in this city, bearing the commission of the new Republic of Brazil. Nobody said that was incorrect or a violation of international law. Why? Because our sympathies were with republicanism in South America, and we seized the first opportunity, upon the deportation of Dom Pedro, to do what we could to make permanent the new republican régime at Rio de Janeiro. There has arisen on this side of the water an American international law applicable to our own hemisphere.

We were not in much of a hurry to recognize the new states of South America. I have taken the pains to examine the old debates and find out what motives were at work to prevent the Congress of the United States from plunging into a recognition of the South American republics. Not even the eloquence of Henry Clay could get a minister accredited to one of those states created by the most favored and successful of these revolutions. Year after year passed, and nothing was done.

Señor Romero, who for so many years honored his country as the minister here from Mexico, in an article in the North American Review many years ago, pointed out that the United States had contributed little or nothing to the independence of the Latin-American states either on our continent or in South America. The reason of it was that no interest was involved, no motive was involved, and no service could be rendered to mankind by a premature recognition. They were feeble; they were without organization, without political experience, and it was thought better by the level-headed men who managed our Government in those days that those people should be left to fight it out.

One man said, I remember, in one of those debates: "You can not give a nation liberty. They have got to fight for it and bleed for it and endure all the vicissitudes of the struggle for national life." Therefore the wisest men we had said: "Let them struggle; let them organize; and at the end of their struggle, having won their independence for themselves, they will have a stability, an anchorage, and a permanence in the world that they never could have if we started out by intervening in their behalf and presenting them their liberty at the point of the guns of our own Navy;" and I believe they were absolutely right about it.

So there has grown up on this hemisphere an American diplomacy in respect of the right of recognition of revolutionary states. We have had more experience in that matter here than they have had anywhere else in the world. We have had for the last seventy years an almost daily atmosphere of revolution in our relations with the struggling little republics of South and Central America, and we have found out more than any other nation about the law of recognition as applied to those states.

I undertake to say, having carefully studied the history of our diplomatic relations with South America, that no violence was done to any tradition or precept of our international history in the act of President Roosevelt of last November.

I am not speaking entirely on my own authority in saying that we have an international law which may be described as strictly American, applicable to this hemisphere and especially to the revolutionary crises which have claimed the attention of our State Department now for nearly seventy-five years.

I find that away back in 1856 Franklin Pierce, who, while he may not have been a very great man himself, had one of the greatest men of our national history for Secretary of State, pointed out distinctly that our diplomatic relations with South America were unique in our diplomatic record and history.

Here is his message sent to Congress May 15, 1856, curiously enough upon this very subject, in which he discussed the question that had bothered him about recognizing a couple of ministers from Nicaragua who had appeared in this town about the same day.

One of them was an American adventurer who had gone down there with Walker's expedition. They had hurriedly organized rival governments, and he had started out for Washington. About the same time the first got here another man appeared, claiming to be the representative of the actual de facto Government of Nicaragua; and the President of the United States did not waste a minute to inquire which was the actual representative of the de facto Government of Nicaragua. He looked the two men over, and, as we had exigent business to transact with Nicaragua, he picked out the native of Nicaragua, and, without inquiring at all into the character of his Government or his revolution, recognized him as the Nicaraguan minister to this capital. In reporting the proceedings to Congress, he said:

> It is the established policy of the United States to recognize all governments without question of their source or their organization, or of the means by which the governing persons attain their power, provided there be a government de facto accepted by the people of the country, and with reserve only of the time as to the recognition of revolutionary governments arising out of the subdivision of parent states with which we are in relations of amity.
> We do not go behind the fact of a foreign government exercising actual power to investigate questions of legitimacy; we do not inquire into the causes which may have led to a change of government. To us it is indifferent whether a successful revolution has been aided by foreign intervention or not; whether insurrection has overthrown existing government and another has been established in its place according to preexisting forms, or in a manner adopted for the occasion by those whom we may find in the actual possession of power.
> All these matters we leave to the people and public authorities of the particular country to determine; and their determination, whether it be by positive action or by ascertained acquiescence, is to us a sufficient warranty of the legitimacy of the new government.

And then he goes on:

> During the sixty-seven years which have elapsed since the establishment of the existing Government of the United States, in all which time this Union has maintained undisturbed domestic tranquillity, we have had occasion to recognize governments de facto, founded either by domestic revolution or by military invasion from abroad, in many of the governments of Europe.
> It is the more imperatively necessary to apply this rule to the Spanish-American republics, in consideration of the frequent and not seldom anomalous changes of organization or administration which they undergo and the revolutionary nature of most of these changes, of which the recent series of revolutions in the Mexican Republic is an example.

Then he cites a circumstance which seems almost incredible, that in his Administration, in the course of a few months, he recognized successively five revolutionary governments in the Republic of Mexico—at the rate of more than one a month. If the rule which my friend the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] laid down, that a nation must stand off in a calm, philosophic way until it is determined by competent evidence that a proper organization of a state has been made, and that it has grown to that stability which enables it to discharge international obligations and to take care of internal affairs, the Administration of Mr. Pierce would have expired before that brilliant series of Mexican revolutions had passed into history.

And yet Franklin Pierce, acting under the advice of Secretary Marcy, recognized in the course of about four months five separate revolutionary governments of Mexico, one after another. Do you tell me that you have got to go back to Grotius and the old writers on international law to find precepts to justify a situation like that? I say it is nonsense.

The duty of this Government in respect to the revolutionary surroundings which we have had in Central and South America has been determined not by law written in Europe one hundred or one hundred and fifty years ago, but it has been determined year by year and step by step by what has occurred along our own coasts on this hemisphere.

So much for that. Again, it is said that the President of the United States entered into a sort of conspiracy with certain persons, most of them disreputable, for the purpose of establishing the new Government of Panama. I intend to speak about that, because I believe it is the most important question that there is in this discussion. Everything else is done, accomplished beyond revision or recall. Only debate remains—acrimonious disputation about the right or wrong, the credit or disgrace of the proceedings.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that all the cases he has cited to the Senate in his speech up to this time have been cases in which the United States has recognized de facto governments where there has been a revolution of the government itself, and no case that he has cited is a case of secession or rebellion of the inhabitants of what is simply a part of the country.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That is very true, Mr. President.

Mr. PATTERSON. Just one moment. That is the distinction that has been made here by every Senator who has spoken in opposition to the treaty. It is the distinction that was made by President Roosevelt in his message to the Senate admitting, as he did, that he did not proceed in this case according to the rules of international law.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, what the Senator says is true. I have not been undertaking to dispose of this case of Panama upon these precedents. I have cited them for the purpose of escaping the burden laid upon the present Government of the United States by these precedents in respect to recognitions which have been cited by the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

Mr. PATTERSON. Just one moment——

Mr. DOLLIVER. And I undertake to say that our situation here has created variations of the ancient rules of recognition which must be vindicated, not by the books, but by the uninterrupted practice of the Government of the United States.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. DOLLIVER. With great pleasure.

Mr. PATTERSON. I want to say to the Senator from Iowa that there is really no contention between himself and the opponents of this measure as to the rules of international law which he lays down. Nobody disputes where there is a revolution in a government by which some other party, or by which some other ruler, will take possession of that government, that both in Europe and in this country that new government may be recognized, and it may be recognized as often as revolutions of that kind occur.

So when we recognized the different governments in Mexico—five within a few months—they were all recognized under well-established principles of international law, observed both in Europe and in this country, and it is not American international law or an American law which the Senator has been citing. It is the international law that is observed by all civilized nations.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Now, Mr. President, how does my friend from Colorado account for the fact that all the important nations of Europe, within an incredibly short space of time and before the organization of this State of Panama, have joined us in its recognition?

Mr. PATTERSON. Simply because, Mr. President, the United States set the pattern. The United States has grown so strong and powerful, so many nations of Europe are anxious to acquire the favor of the United States, that they are apparently willing to follow in the footsteps of the United States when it is willing to set the pace.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, has it come, then, to this, that international law in Europe consists in following the blunders and crimes that are committed by the United States?

Mr. PATTERSON. I would suggest also to the Senator, if he will permit me, that European nations recognize the fact that it was the United States that made that new Government; that it depended upon the United States; that without the bayonets and guns of the United States it could not exist; that with them it was absolutely impregnable, and they could not do otherwise.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Therefore they shut up their international law books and went in?

Mr. PATTERSON. That is precisely what they did.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I doubt that very much. I would rather believe that they studied the situation—that they studied the history of this case, and coming to the conclusion that the United States had acted with wisdom, with prudence, and in strict accord with the law of nations, they gladly and cheerfully gave their consent to what had been done.

But I will go further. I claim that nobody can wisely and discreetly discuss this question who treats it altogether as a question of law. I hold that it is a question of fact, and if what I say to-day has any value to anybody it will be from the effort I will make to point out some facts that went before the recognition of the little Republic of Panama.

My friend from Colorado asked a question here yesterday which nobody had the time to answer, because nobody desired to add to his labors and his troubles. He said: "Does anybody pretend that the Republic of Panama could have come into existence without the assistance of the United States or that it would last a minute if the naval forces of the United States were withdrawn?" Now, that is a very practical question, and in my judgment is strategic and decisive of this whole situation.

I hold that this revolution in Panama is several years old. I hold that the sympathies of the whole world should have years ago been drawn to this unfortunate little Republic of Panama, and that the United States, instead of being subject to blame for taking that little community by the hand and helping it out of its troubles, is entitled to the applause not only of our own people, but of the people of the whole world.

I go further. I say that if the United States had kept out of Panama the Republic of Colombia would have lost that most precious of its possessions a good many years ago, and I do not hesitate to say here, without intending to speak a harsh word about the unfortunate people of the United States of Colombia, that the American people ought to be thankful that, after fifty years, the era of our partnership with the anarchy and misgovernment of the Colombian Republic has come to an end forever more in the Province of Panama. So that I hold this to be a question of fact rather than a question of law.

My friend asks, "Would that Republic have existed if we had not helped it?" There is every reason to believe that it would.

I hold in my hand a religious review which was presented to me early in this discussion by the venerable Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], whom I am sorry not to see in his seat just now. But his absence enables me to say of him a thing which I might be deterred somewhat from saying if he were present, and that is this:

He stands here in his old age one of the historic figures connected with this canal controversy. He may not be the man who began the discussion, but for nearly a generation he has kept it up. No man has ever exhibited, within our knowledge, any such marvelous industry, energy, and sagacity as he has put into the argument for the Nicaraguan canal. Day and night he has labored, not with the assistance of others, but personally, often with his own pen writing these speeches which have become the chief part of the agitation which has resulted in unifying public sentiment in the United States in favor of the canal.

I regret more than I can say that he was disappointed in his own personal ambition in respect to the route that was finally chosen. But that does not prevent me from adding that long after the little controversies of this hour are forgotten his name will be connected in immortal reputation with the isthmian canal, wherever it is built, by the people of the United States.

And so I pick up this quarterly review, printed at Nashville, July, 1903, in which he discusses the Colombian Government in its relation to the Republic of Panama. It is a long article, filled with the evidences which have become so familiar to us of his indefatigable industry and research. He shows that for more than a generation the State of Panama has been plucked, robbed, oppressed, and wronged by the so-called Government at Bogota. He shows that that institution for years has been a despotism, a dictatorship, and an organized anarchy.

My friend, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES], day before yesterday, pointed out from the reliable comments of an American minister and traveler in the United States of Colombia just what kind of an institution the Colombian Republic is and has been, and he was answered by the Senator from Colorado by saying that Mr. Scruggs had written about the Colombian Republic very much as a man would write if he confined the history of the United States to the race riots in the South and the railroad mobs in Chicago a few years ago.

I do not believe that anybody can take up that book and rise from the perusal of it with any enthusiastic sympathy left on account of the misfortunes that have fallen upon the Colombian Government. Fortunately we know exactly what it is. We know first that it is a dictatorship. We know the number of constitutions it has had. We know that a constitution is brushed away at every turn in the political tide in Colombia. We know that its people have no participation whatever in the Government. We know that less than 2,000 men constitute the Government of Colombia, and that, there intrenched in the capital at Bogota, they have been cheerfully consulting together as to the possibility of laying still further tribute upon the Treasury of the United States.

In 1900 a revolution broke out in Panama which lasted until practically the beginning of the present revolution. We have the history of that revolution. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has preserved it in this magazine article. It lies in the records of the Navy Department and in the records of the State Department. We know exactly what it is. We know that for three long years the Colombia dictatorship tried to quell the revolution in Panama, and at the end of that time, by the friendly offices of the United States, were enabled, by bare good fortune, to compromise with it.

And when my friend asks me whether a revolution in Panama could have succeeded to-day, I say to him yes, and the only reason it has not succeeded for twenty years is because the Marine Corps and the Navy of the United States have been there, standing between the men fighting for their liberty and for their rights and the Colombian dictatorship at Bogota.

So, it does not require a man even to hate the President of the United States; it does not require a man to have his system so poisoned that he unconsciously has more sympathy with a foreign country than he has with his own; it does not require any morbid state of anybody's mind to understand the present revolution in Panama. It was not needful that the President should stimulate it. It was not needful that the Navy of the United States should participate in it. It was not needful that American residents there should help it along.

It is and for nearly a generation has been the continual and almost helpless expression of the effort of that unfortunate community to be free from the oppression which has its headquarters at the capital of the Colombian Republic.

How was this war against Panama, which began in 1900, conducted? The Senator from Alabama preserves here a military decree levying taxes to carry it on, a decree which he declares is the most cruel act ever performed in the name of a Christian government.

Their system of taxation appears to be simple. My friend the Senator from Wisconsin explained it, reading from a book written by an old minister of ours at Bogota, Mr. Scruggs. He was waived aside because it was not official. Here is the official decree levying taxes upon the Colombian people to conduct their war against the old revolution of 1900 on the Isthmus of Panama.

It consists of sending out gentlemen with a list of people in all the cities and towns and villages in the country, with an estimate of their wealth, and a proposition that one shall pay $500, another $1,000, another $5,000, and another $10,000, 15 per cent of which shall accrue to the gentleman who collects it, and if there is any hesitation about it he is directed to confiscate and destroy the property of the people on the Isthmus of Panama.

Our naval officers report that in obedience to that decree such of the well-to-do citizens of Panama who were able to get away fled to ships of foreign countries, and in that way were willing to sacrifice their entire property rather than submit to a despotism and a tyranny like that. And yet, men stand up here by the day reading international law, and inviting people to sympathize with the misfortunes that have come upon the Republic of Colombia.

I say again that such little sympathies as I have to spare are with that struggling community along the line of our right of way on the Isthmus of Panama, who for more than a generation have suffered the evils of bad government, and ever since its accession to the territory of the Republic of Colombia have been entitled to the sympathy and the good will of every civilized government in the world.

Was the Republic of Colombia able to overcome that insurrection? This record indicates that it was not. Let me read from the reports made from time to time by our naval officers, and especially the pathetic plea directed to the commander of our little fleet there, made by General Herrera, who was the commander of the insurrectionary army of Panama:

In a dispatch of March 22, 1902, Captain Reisinger writes:

"There is another element in this matter that may need consideration before anything else, and that is the turbulent tendency of the troops which have been brought here recently. These men have been operating in the south and in open country mainly, and the massing of them in the city causes considerable apprehension.

"I am informed upon good authority that the Government is getting very short of money, and unless the troops are paid there will be trouble, because the Government maintains no commissary, but pays the troops well, and they must furnish their own food."

September 15 he writes:

"SIR: 1. I have the honor to confirm the following telegrams:

"'September 10. Two thousand men surrendered to revolutionists at Agua Dulce on August 30. Revolutionists reported advancing near Panama.

"'September 11. Government has occupied portion of land belonging to canal company's hospital, anticipating attack immediately, at Panama. This ship can not land force sufficient for the protection of American interests.'"

Thus the civil war raged, destroying life and property on the Isthmus and subjecting the Government of the United States to a continuous and increasing burden in keeping the transit across the Isthmus free from obstruction. In the very nature of the case civil war in Panama means the occupation of the line of transit, since practically all the people of the Isthmus live along the highway between the oceans.

And notwithstanding the fact that the United States by keeping the insurgents off the transit gave to the Colombian Government what little military strength it had in Panama and Colon, yet the autumn of 1902 found the Government at Bogota imploring the United States to use its good offices to bring the insurrection to an end, holding out as an inducement to our Government the consideration that until peace was secured no progress could be made with the canal negotiations. This was shown by the following dispatch of our minister at Bogota:

BOGOTA, September 11, 1902.

SECRETARY OF STATE, Washington:

Minister for foreign affairs desires me to inform you that his Government would appreciate your good offices to bring about peace in the country, especially on the Isthmus, where the revolution is strong. This Government has no new terms to offer, but thinks your good offices may avail to induce revolutionists to accept terms heretofore offered, and thus prevent otherwise inevitable heavy loss of life. Minister for foreign affairs added: Not only is the question of humanity involved, but so long as the war lasts Congress will not be convened, and therefore the continuance of war will delay submission of the canal matter to Congress.

Minister for foreign affairs emphasized this last point as being well to present to your consideration.

HART.

It is no idle opinion of mine that but for the presence of the United States ships that revolution would have been successful. It is confirmed by the following report, made on the 13th of October, 1902, to the Secretary of the Navy by Admiral Casey:

I inclose a clipping from the Panama Star and Herald of October 12, 1902. In this connection I take occasion to inform the Department that I have refrained, as far as possible, from in any way embarrassing the officials of the Colombian Government, except so far as is absolutely necessary in my judgment to maintain uninterrupted and unembarrassed transit and to prevent the line of transit from being converted into a theater of hostilities. I shall decide such questions as the conditions may change from day to day, and when in doubt will consult the Department.

Further, in this connection, I have to inform the Department that I have been unable to learn of any effort on the part of the Colombian Government to crush the revolution in this district just prior to or since my arrival at Panama. On the other hand, it is my opinion that if it were not for the restraining influence of our naval force here Panama would fall an easy victim to the combined land forces and gunboats of the insurgents.

To which he added, on October 20, the following:

Judging from conditions now existing and from information I am able to obtain, there seems little prospect of a speedy termination of this strife. Panama and Colon are practically besieged; troops at neither place dare to go beyond their intrenchments. I firmly believe if our men were removed from shore the insurgents would be in Panama in forty-eight hours. I think the Government, therefore, is very willing that they should remain, making occasional mild objections, which really it does not mean shall be taken seriously.

Great things were expected on Perdomo's arrival; but as he came attended only by numerous generals, of whom there were apparently already a surfeit in the city, I fail to see how he can accomplish much.

It will thus be seen that upon the plea of the Colombian Government, itself entirely helpless to deal with the revolution, this civil strife was brought to an end by the friendly intervention of the United States for a peaceful settlement.

It will be interesting in this connection to read the pathetic plea of the insurgent commander, General Herrera, justifying the motives of his countrymen and uniting in the wish for peace.

The war with us—

is only an act of instinctive and vehement despair. It is a claim for life such as can not be considered to exist in Colombia under a government arbitrary in politics, economically, and in civil matters. Hence the constant desire of the revolutionists to lay down their arms as soon as they can secure something republican, something that they may secure for the country, something that they may draw the country for the state of oppression in all respects, which rendered existence intolerable and dark the future of the country.

For these reasons the revolutionists are ready to die, since what is suggested as peace is simply the replacing of the white for the red terror. Gladly and with enthusiasm did I receive and answer your esteemed communication of the 7th instant. In the mediation of yourself and of the United States I saw a prospect of true peace which might give forth the harmony of interests and the security of rights. But such a peace is not pleasing to our contenders; their ideal exists in the imprisonment of which the Cæsars gave the example.

On the other hand, the mediation of the United States was for me the symptom and the proof of its respectful disposition respecting the sovereignty of the Colombian nation in the Isthmus of Panama, since in that manner it did away with any excuse or any justification for maintaining American troops on the line.

The so-called Government of Colombia through its obstinacy has rendered itself responsible before the nation for the officious guardianship which—why should I hide it?—hurts the feelings of those who know our rights, our duties, and our responsibilities as a sovereign and independent nation.

If, notwithstanding the incident I have mentioned, you should think the conference useful, I am ready to come to an honorable and just arrangement. I accept the mediation of yourself and the United States with full confidence and gratefully.

From other points of view and purposes the conference could fix the basis which might insure the construction of the canal by the United States, which is the universal desire of Colombians, a wish that is condensed into a national interest. If the private parties who have contributed toward your very generous mediation conclude that it is necessary to come to an understanding with me, I inform them that Aguadulce is my general quarters and the seat of the director of the war.

I am, etc.,

B. HERRERA.

It thus appears that in contemplating a cessation of that insurrection by a treaty of peace the thing about which the whole transaction revolved was the isthmian canal, which he says has not only been the long-time aspiration of the isthmian people, "but had been condensed into their chief national interest." And so under the direction of our Navy the insurrection of 1900, which had raged in that Isthmus for a period of more than two years, was brought to an end, not by its defeat, but by a treaty of peace entered into for the sake of the canal, at the very moment of victory.

I have here the treaty, preserved in this article by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and among the terms by which they agreed to stop hostilities and let the insurrection die was a proposal that the Colombian Government should immediately take up and dispose of the question of the isthmian canal. So they did. Not only without the help of the United States, but with our Government unfortunately in practical alliance with their enemies, and doing infinitely more to keep their victory away from them than the Colombian army had been able to do.

They did successfully maintain at the Isthmus of Panama an effective rebellion, lasting more than two years, which was finally compromised under the auspices of the United States by an agreement to immediately facilitate negotiations for the canal.

The Government of Colombia is in vastly worse shape now than it was at the end of that rebellion; poorer in money and other military resources.

So that when Senators offer the opinion that without the countenance of the United States the new Panama Government could not stand up and defend itself in its own territory, I put in evidence the report made by Lieutenant-Commander Culver to the Secretary of the Navy on December 13, 1902.

U. S. S. BANCROFT, COLON, COLOMBIA, December 13, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to report as follows regarding an interview I had yesterday at Panama with Consul-General Gudger:

The consul-general states that political disturbances on the Isthmus can now be regarded as positively over for many months to come. All arms have been surrendered by the insurgents, also their gunboats; and it would take a long time for them to reorganize and reequip, even were they disposed to start another revolution. About 1,000 insurgents are in Panama fraternizing with their late foes—the Government forces.

For the first time in two years the military bands are now permitted to play in the public squares at night, and the people are allowed to be in the streets at all hours.

The Government forces are being slowly disbanded. Forty per cent of them are boys from nine to fifteen years of age. They are stationed at various posts along the route of the railroad, are filthy in person and dress and poorly clad, and appear like a rabble of children.

The consul-general states that, in his opinion, there is not the slightest need of a Government vessel either at Panama or Colon at this time, nor will there be for a long time to come. United States Consul Malmros, at Colon, is of the same opinion.

Very respectfully,

A. E. CULVER,
Lieutenant-Commander, United States Navy, Commanding.

The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Mr. President, there is a picture of military glory truly admirable. Yet this rabble of children was a band of military heroes compared to the garrisons which represented the sovereignty of the Colombian Government last November, when the citizens of Panama, without a dissenting voice, declared their independence, and wound up the military affairs of Colombia on the Isthmus of Panama with a few thousand dollars of Mexican silver.

Now, I say that it does not require any very large knowledge of what has been going on down there for the last twenty years to enable anybody to see that they had their own motives and their own reasons for their insurrection. So they all rejoiced when the President of the United States finally succeeded in getting the Hay-Herran negotiations through. They watched with solicitude every step of the procedure at Bogota.

The testimony which has been preserved here in the correspondence of the Secretary of State indicates that their wisest men there knew exactly what would be the result if the negotiations failed. Men talk to me about the President of the United States stirring up this insurrection! The United States, with all its splendid power, could not have done a thing to stop that insurrection. The United States had intervened to prevent their success only one year before. They agreed to stop fighting when they were almost within reach of the city of Panama, on condition that the canal negotiation should be taken up. They laid down their arms.

They were not confronted by a very formidable adversary. I do not want to speak unkindly of the Colombian people and of the Colombian Government, not because I feel exactly right about them, but because it can do no good to continue irritations that have no material significance from this time forward in this discussion. I do not intend to go into the history of that negotiation at Bogota, but I will go into it far enough to say a word about our young minister at that capital.

I know him well; an Illinois boy, without particular experience in diplomacy, tossed by the accidents of our politics into a position which seemed to be insignificant, but which almost immediately became one of the points of interest under the spot light of the world's attention, and who in the midst of new duties and difficult surroundings has added a bright chapter to the history of American diplomacy and American statesmanship. I will say that in consideration for him.

But every step of that negotiation indicates what was going on at Bogota. At first nobody there cared anything about it. Nothing was said on the streets or about the halls of Congress or anywhere else. Nobody took any interest in it until these gentlemen in charge of that Government, these amiable people who are soliciting the sympathy of the United States against the people of Panama and that stricken Isthmus which connects two continents, until these cheerful politicians at Bogota looked over the Hay-Herran treaty.

They said, "Here seems to be $10,000,000 coming to us." Every one of them knew that it was a gratuity. If they are enlightened, and everybody gives them the credit for that, they must have known that there is not a civilized community in the world which, having been approached by people able to put up the money for building a public work like that, would not cheerfully have granted them the right of way practically without condition. They said, "Here are a people who evidently have plenty of money. They offer us ten millions. A people who will offer us $10,000,000 in so short a time, if we delay this matter, will grow desperate and offer us more."

They knew more about the canal situation than our friends on the other side of the Chamber appear to know. They had a dim kind of opinion that so long as it was only 49 miles across there and 183 miles across up at Nicaragua the "reasonable time" suggested by law would probably be not a week or a month, but may be years before the United States would turn away from that opportunity to build this public work.

So they said, "Having offered us ten millions, we will wait; maybe they will offer us $15,000,000. Having offered us $250,000 as an annuity for the use of this territory, maybe they will offer us $600,000."

They saw a big item—$40,000,000—to go to the New Panama Canal Company. The first article of the treaty arranged for their giving their consent to the canal company selling its own property and concession to us.

There is not a civilized country in the world which would not have gladly paid a bonus to have the concession transferred from that worthless and bankrupt concern to a responsible party, except these politicians at Bogota. But they saw the size of those figures—$40,000,000—and they said, "There are only 2,000 of us, and that is a large sum of money. We are perfectly willing that they should sell this concession to the United States, but we want a little time before it is done to enter into some quiet negotiations with the owners of the Panama Canal franchise."

So they deliberately proceeded to hold up this treaty in order that they might get a chance to steal a portion of the $40,000,000 which the Government of the United States had already appropriated to pay for the property and franchises of the New Panama Canal Company.

I will not go into that further, except to say that no intelligent American can read this correspondence without seeing that if that canal treaty failed at Bogota the Colombian Government was on the eve of an insurrection, the like of which had never occurred in the whole stormy history of that Republic. That word was spoken on the floor of the Congress, and just before the treaty was rejected the helpless and superannuated old dictator of the Colombian Republic, with feeble hand, appointed Senator Obaldia as governor of Panama, and sent him down there in that capacity.

That brave friend of the Istimian canal and that patriotic and home-loving citizen of Panama said publicly in the Colombian Congress that if he went down there as governor of Panama and that Congress defeated the treaty he would himself head an insurrection for the independence of the Republic of Panama.

So I can not understand what is the motive which prompts men to stand here and ask if the President of the United States is not at the bottom of this insurrection. I have heard Senators—and I confess I heard it with pain—disparage the official report of Commander Hubbard and what he had done on the Isthmus of Panama.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. DOLLIVER. With great pleasure.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose the Senator refers to what I said yesterday afternoon?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I have an indirect reference to it.

Mr. TELLER. I merely called attention to the fact that the statement was not made by Commander Hubbard, who stated distinctly that the mayor had told him. Commander Hubbard never even gave it his sanction. He said: "The prefect of the town told me this was the fact."

Mr. DOLLIVER. He gave it this much sanction, that he advised the American women and children in that town to congregate at the railroad station, where they could have military defense; and he says also that foreign residents took advantage of that rumor to retire to convenient warships of Great Britain and other countries which had congregated in that harbor.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Iowa is a lawyer. He knows that is no proof. It was a wise thing probably for the people at that time to do.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Quite.

Mr. TELLER. But it is no proof that the Colombian general made any such threat, and his subsequent conduct in calling upon Hubbard the same afternoon, a few hours afterwards, shows there was probably nothing in it.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I think his subsequent conduct was probably affected by Hubbard's conduct.

Mr. TELLER. All I want to say is that if Commander Hubbard had made report that that was the fact, I should not have questioned it.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I am very glad to hear the Senator say that, for if there is one thing in which we should all take a national pride it is the fidelity and modesty and accuracy with which these naval officers of ours make reports to the Department of what they have done and what they contemplate doing.

I am glad if I misunderstood the honorable Senator from Colorado in throwing suspicion upon an official report of a man who, if this business which he did at Panama illustrates his ability, will rank among the efficient public servants in the Navy of the United States.

We have had within the last few years two of our naval officers who may never become famous, but who, in my judgment, rendered incalculable service to the country. One of them was Admiral Kempff, the man who stood off the coast of China when every nation in the world was deriding him, some of them even calling him a coward, because he would not go into action with other nations and bombard the city of Tientsin, in China, and solemnly, in the fear of God and in the service of his country, said he would not and could not because the traditions of the United States forbade any foreign alliance, and because he would not bombard the coast of a country with which we were at peace.

The other case is that of this young commander of the Nashville, under trying circumstances there, with men, women, and children flying from what they supposed to be danger, gathering together the American residents in the old stone depot, at the outskirts of the city, putting it in a state of military defense, and disembarking forty-two men, not marines, because the Secretary of the Navy tells me he had only a few marine guards on his ship, but disembarking forty-two blue-jackets of the Navy to go from their ship, their home on the water, and to stand between our people and the injuries and losses that might have befallen that community. That I say, whether it is long remembered or not, will some day be discovered by the historian to be one of the bright pages in the glorious record of the little Navy of the United States.

It is not a very big achievement. It is not big enough to justify my friend the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] in describing it as a state of war, in describing us as going to war with the friendly State and the people of Colombia. I confess I was a good deal perplexed the other day to find that distinguished Senator saying here that we were at war or had been at war with the Republic of Colombia. He seemed to be one of the few well-advised people who understood what was going on there.

I have great respect and admiration for his sagacity, but I am not able, even now, to understand how he discovered that we were at war with Colombia, when the Colombian Government itself never seemed to have heard of it, but on the contrary has constantly maintained its peaceful legation at our capital. Yet that is the only act looking like war which occurred there.

Men say the President of the United States issued orders which, if they had ever been received and had ever been acted upon, would have constituted a violation of the treaty and an act of war. I do not believe it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. DOLLIVER. With very great pleasure.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Does the Senator insist that the instructions given to our naval commanders in those waters were not acted upon?

Mr. DOLLIVER. The only action I find recorded is this action of the commander of the Nashville in protecting the lives and property of American citizens in Panama. The other action seems to have been entirely commercial or financial.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Does the Senator deny that Admiral Coghlan informed the commander of the Colombian forces that he had been instructed by the United States Government not to permit the landing of Colombian forces upon her own soil?

Mr. DOLLIVER. My impression is that that occurred after the recognition of the Republic of Panama. But I am here to defend it wherever and whenever it occurred.

I am not one of those who apologize for any item in this transaction. I claim that the present Secretary of State knows as much about international law as any man in this Chamber, on either side.

I claim that his heart is filled with as high a form of patriotism as belongs to any man in this Chamber on either side, and if I was called upon to take the opinion of John Hay and put it against the opinion even of the most learned masters of the law here, I would on such a question, without fear or doubt, take the opinion of the Secretary of State.

So I do not stand here to apologize for one minute either for any order that was issued or for any act that was done in Panama. I hold that our treaty relations with the Colombian Government made it absolutely essential for us to do what we have been doing.

And that brings me to discuss a question which I intend to deal with with very great brevity, unless I find myself a good deal less master of my views on it than I had expected—the treaty of 1846.

I took a very great interest in the discussion of that question by the learned Senator from Colorado yesterday. I could not help but admire the industry and legal wisdom and learning which he had brought to that discussion, and yet I am satisfied from all I can find out that his speech and his discussion of the treaty of 1846 were absolutely wide of the mark. He discussed it as if it were a sort of treaty of commercial reciprocity, and as if this canal business were an obscure incident in it, which had unfortunately become prominent afterwards.

I do not so read the history of that transaction. I maintain that the treaty of 1846 was a canal treaty, and nothing else of importance. It had other items in it. It did provide for mutual reciprocal concessions in the mater of customs duties, etc. But the thing about that treaty which gave it significance and importance in the eye of our Government, and in the eye of the Government of Colombia, was the canal.

It was only a dream then. It has been a mere vision for generations. In 1835 the Senate had taken action looking toward it, and in 1839 the House had acted, on the request of New York merchants upon the subject, but it was a mere dream of the future, and the far-sighted men whose business, as statesmen, it was to deal not with the passing hour, but with all the centuries that are to come, looked forward to the absolute necessity of that canal.

It was at a time when our coasts had been enlarged by the settlement of California and its acquisition from Mexico, and the statesmen of that period saw that it was a part of the national life of the American people to find a better transit through the Isthmus of Panama. If anyone will take up the history of the negotiation of 1846 as a mere reciprocal commercial agreement, he misses altogether the substance and the motive of that transaction.

It was the hope and promise of the canal inspiring both the statesmen of New Granada and the statesmen of the United States which brought that negotiation into existence.

I do not intend to quote the diplomatic correspondence, though I have it upon my desk. The treaty had thirty-five articles in it. The relative importance of those articles is well exhibited by President Polk's message, February 15, 1847, transmitting the treaty to the Senate.

It is as follows, and nobody can read it without perceiving the motive and influence leading up to it:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit to the Senate, for their advice with regard to its ratification, "a general treaty of peace, amity, navigation, and commerce between the United States of America and the Republic of New Granada," concluded at Bogota on the 12th December last, by Benjamin A. Bidlack, chargé d'affaires of the United States, on their part, and by Manuel María Mallarino, secretary of state and foreign relations, on the part of that Republic.

It will be perceived by the thirty-fifth article of this treaty that New Granada proposes to guarantee to the Government and citizens of the United States the right of passage across the Isthmus of Panama, over the natural roads, and over any canal or railroad which may be constructed to unite the two seas, on condition that the United States shall make a similar guaranty to New Granada of the neutrality of this portion of her territory and her sovereignty over the same.

The reasons which caused the insertion of this important stipulation in the treaty will be fully made known to the Senate by the accompanying documents. From these it will appear that our chargé d'affaires acted, in this particular, upon his own responsibility, and without instructions. Under such circumstances it became my duty to decide whether I would submit the treaty to the Senate; and, after mature consideration, I have determined to adopt this course.

The importance of this concession to the commercial and political interests of the United States can not easily be overrated. The route by the Isthmus of Panama is the shortest between the two oceans, and, from the information herewith communicated, it would seem to be the most practicable for a railroad or canal.

The vast advantages to our commere which would result from such a communication, not only with the west coast of America, but with Asia and the islands of the Pacific, are too obvious to require any detail. Such a passage would relieve us from a long and dangerous navigation of more than 9,000 miles around Cape Horn and render our communication with our own possessions on the northwest coast of America comparatively easy and speedy.

The communication across the Isthmus has attracted the attention of the Government of the United States ever since the independence of the South American republics. On the 3d of March, 1835, a resolution passed the Senate in the following words:

"Resolved, That the President of the United States be respectfully requested to consider the expediency of opening negotiations with the governments of other nations, and particularly with the governments of Central America and New Granada, for the purpose of effectually protecting, by suitable treaty stipulations with them, such individuals or companies as may undertake to open a communication between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans by the construction of a ship canal across the Isthmus which connects North and South America, and of securing forever, by such stipulations, the free and equal right of navigating such canal to all such nations, on the payment of such reasonable tolls as may be established, to compensate the capitalists who may engage in such undertaking and complete the work."

No person can be more deeply sensible than myself of the danger of entangling alliances with any foreign nation. That we should avoid such alliances has become a maxim of our policy, consecrated by the most venerated names which adorn our history and sanctioned by the unanimous voice of the American people. Our own experience has taught us the wisdom of this maxim in the only instance—that of the guaranty to France of her American possessions—in which we have ever entered into such an alliance.

If, therefore, the very peculiar circumstances of the present case do not greatly impair, if not altogether destroy, the force of this objection, then we ought not to enter into the stipulation, whatever may be its advantages. The general considerations which have induced me to transmit the treaty to the Senate for their advice may be summed up in the following particulars:

1. The treaty does not propose to guarantee a territory to a foreign nation in which the United States will have no common interest with that nation. On the contrary, we are more deeply and directly interested in the subject of this guaranty than New Granada herself, or any other country.

2. The guaranty does not extend to the territories of New Granada generally, but is confined to the single province of the Isthmus of Panama, where we shall acquire by the treaty a common and coextensive right of passage with herself.

3. It will constitute no alliance for any political object, but for a purely commercial purpose, in which all the navigating nations of the world have a common interest.

4. In entering into the mutual guaranties proposed by the thirty-fifth article of the treaty, neither the Government of New Granada nor that of the United States has any narrow or exclusive views. The ultimate object, as presented by the Senate of the United States in their resolution to which I have already referred, is to secure to all nations the free and equal right of passage over the Isthmus. If the United States, as the chief of the American nations, should first become a party to this guaranty, it can not be doubted—indeed, it is confidently expected by the Government of New Granada—that similar guaranties will be given to that Republic by Great Britain and France. Should the proposition thus tendered be rejected, we may deprive the United States of the just influence which its acceptance might secure to them, and confer the glory and benefits of being first among the nations in concluding such an arrangement upon the Government either of Great Britain or France. That either of these Governments would embrace the offer can not well be doubted; because there does not appear to be any other effectual means of securing to all nations the advantages of this important passage but the guaranty of great commercial powers that the Isthmus shall be neutral territory. The interests of the world at stake are so important that the security of this passage between the two oceans can not be suffered to depend upon the wars and revolutions which may arise among different nations.

Besides, such a guaranty is almost indispensable to the construction of a railroad or canal across the territory. Neither sovereign states nor individuals would expend their capital in the construction of these expensive works without some such security for their investments.

The guaranty of the sovereignty of New Granada over the Isthmus is a natural consequence of the guaranty of its neutrality, and there does not seem to be any other practical mode of securing the neutrality of this territory. New Granada would not consent to yield up this province in order that it might become a neutral state; and if she should, it is not sufficiently populous or wealthy to establish and maintain an independent sovereignty.

But a civil government must exist there, in order to protect the works which shall be constructed. New Granada is a power which will not excite the jealousy of any nation. If Great Britain, France, or the United States held the sovereignty over the Isthmus, other nations might apprehend that, in case of war, the Government would close up the passage against the enemy; but no such fears can ever be entertained in regard to New Granada.

This treaty removes the heavy discriminating duties against us in the ports of New Granada, which have nearly destroyed our commerce and navigation with that Republic, and which we have been in vain endeavoring to abolish for the last twenty years.

It may be proper, also, to call the attention of the Senate to the twenty-fifth article of the treaty, which prohibits privateering in case of war between the two Republics; and also to the additional article, which nationalizes all vessels of the parties, which "shall be provided by the respective Governments with a patent issued according to its laws;" and, in this particular, goes further than any of our former treaties.

JAMES K. POLK.

WASHINGTON, February 10, 1847.

Here was a feeble state, including within its territory what is now known as Panama. It was a feeble state. The nations of Europe were looking toward that Isthmus to despoil it. The French people especially and the English had the eyes of avarice and commercial foresight upon that strategic point on the American Continent, and the people of New Granada felt that if they could get in some way under the shadow of the American Republic they would be enabled to preserve the integrity of their territory and to peacefully work out their destiny.

That was before the age of blackmail and commercial degradation which has since fallen upon that unhappy community.

They were farsighted men, and fortunately we had farsighted men here. When Mr. Polk sent to the Senate the treaty of 1846 he said hardly a word about anything except this dream of the isthmian canal.

For that the Government of the United States undertook to protect the integrity and the sovereignty of the State of New Granada, and in exchange for that the State of New Granada undertook to guarantee by a solemn public grant to the United States, not a mere right of way, not a mere bypath across those mountains to be kept free and open, but they guaranteed the right of free and uninterrupted transit, not only by the means that were then known, but by all the means that were suggested by the hopes of the world over that Isthmus.

Now, I hold that as a question of law my honorable friend from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES], who spoke here the other day, made an absolute demonstration that whatever rights New Granada had by that treaty went by inheritance to the State of Colombia; that whatever rights Colombia had by that treaty have now gone by inheritance to the State of Panama, and that we are bound by that treaty to do for the new little Republic of Panama exactly what we proposed fifty years ago to do first for New Granada and after that for the United States of Colombia.

I hold, further, following closely what I consider as the unanswerable argument of the Senator from Wisconsin, that that grant was in its very nature a servitude upon the sovereignty and rights of the State of New Granada. It was more than a right of way. It was a guaranty that the United States should have rights along that canal route, which in their very nature were a qualification of the complete sovereignty of the Republic of New Granada.

And that is no statement of imaginary international law. My friend from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] the other day undertook to say that when the President of the United States described our rights in New Granada and in Colombia and afterwards in the State of Panama as a property right "carved out of the sovereignty" of these States, he not only spoke words of nonsense, but that he was the only living man that ever thought of such a proposition.

It is, however, a well-established proposition of international law that there is such a thing as a grant of this character, constituting a property right carved out of the sovereignty of the state that makes the grant. I have here one of the ablest works, I think, there is on international law, which expressly describes that situation. So the President of the United States was not either going beyond precedent or outside of the authority of the law when he referred to our rights on that Isthmus as a property right carved out of the sovereignty of Colombia. This author says:

> From their very nature and situation the right to use and enjoy certain classes of state property depends exclusively upon municipal law, while for a like reason the right to use and enjoy certain other classes depends entirely upon international law. A state may limit or qualify its sovereignty and jurisdiction over its territorial property by permitting a foreign state to perform within its bounds certain acts otherwise prohibited, or by surrendering the right to exercise certain parts of its domestic jurisdiction as a protection to others. Restrictions thus imposed upon the sovereignty of a state are known as servitudes, which may be either positive or negative.

Mr. CULLOM. What does the Senator read from?

Mr. DOLLIVER. From Taylor's International Public Law, chapter 3, page 263. That is not only true now, but it was true at the time of this transaction, and I have an idea that Franklin Pierce, who has been described here as not a very great man, had heard something of that carving out of the sovereignty of Colombia and adding it to the sovereignty of the United States.

If he did not have that in his mind, it is a little difficult to find out what he meant in this message of his of May 16, 1856, when, after having described the intolerable situation which would be created if both the transit at Nicaragua and the transit at Panama were stopped up, he used the words which I shall read. He has already described the interruption of the transit of Nicaragua on account of the Walker insurrection down there. He says:

> Further than this, the documents communicated show that, while the interoceanic transit by way of Nicaragua is cut off, disturbances at Panama have occurred to obstruct, temporarily at least, that by the way of New Granada, involving the sacrifice of the lives and property of citizens of the United States. A special commissioner has been dispatched to Panama to investigate the facts of this occurrence, with a view particularly to the redress of parties aggrieved. But measures of another class will be demanded for the future security of interoceanic communications by this as by the other routes of the Isthmus.

Then follows a sentence which I have no doubt the President of the United States had in his mind when he spoke of our rights there as having been carved out of the sovereignty of Colombia. He says:

> It would be difficult to suggest a single object of interest, external or internal, more important to the United States than the maintenance of free communication, by land and sea, between the Atlantic and Pacific States and Territories of the Union. It is a material element of the national integrity and sovereignty.

How did it become a part of the sovereignty of the United States to have free access from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean across the Isthmus of Panama? It either arose by natural right, which has been discussed here in a dim way under the name of international eminent domain, or it arose by this treaty.

I have made such an examination of the documents that accompanied this negotiation and of the history of those times as to make my own mind clear that it was the intention of that small, struggling, feeble little community of New Granada of 1846, as a price for the guaranty of its integrity against foreign aggression, to give to the United States this grant, which is in the nature of a servitude guaranteed to the use of the commercial world.

That leads me to say that the President of the United States has taken no action in connection with this treaty which is not warranted. It is in vain for anybody to read authorities, it is in vain even for a man with such profound learning as the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to array here, as he has so ably done, the whole line of legal precepts and authorities upon this question. It is a question that will be decided now, as it always has been decided, upon the history of the United States.

Somebody says that the Government of the United States never had any right to do anything in the Isthmus of Panama without the request of the Government of Colombia. I deny it. No such construction of that treaty can be made. If that were a proper construction of the treaty, the whole history of the United States in respect to it there has been a violation of that provision of the treaty.

To my mind it is incredible that with this enormous interest at stake the United States should have been called upon by that treaty to stand idly by and see life and property and commerce destroyed without intervening, waiting for the request of the Colombian dictator and relying for reparation upon an action in damages against that bankrupt, helpless political institution. I deny that it has any sense in it, and I deny that it accords with the history of the people of the United States.

If it did, what did President Buchanan mean when he came to Congress and asked the authority of Congress to take an army to the Isthmus of Panama whenever we needed one there? If he had no right to use it except at the request of the insurrectionary peoples inhabiting that neighborhood, what did he mean when he asked Congress to give him an express authority to take the Army of the United States down there and occupy the Isthmus of Panama for the purpose of protecting our property?

I say, then, Mr. President, that we have in that Isthmus, and have had for fifty years, a property right carved out of the sovereignty first of New Granada, and then of Colombia, and now of the State of Panama that warrants every order the President of the United States has issued and every act that has been done either by our bluejackets or by our marines in either harbor of the Isthmus of Panama.

I do not propose to stand here one minute apologizing either for what has been written down on paper or what has been done by the gallant officers and seamen and marines of our little fleet down there at Colon and at Panama. I have got to a point where I propose to stop apologizing for the Government of my own country in order to add to the comfort and solace the feelings of people who reside in foreign countries.

I have reached a point in my patriotism where I propose to stand with the United States and let the other peoples of the world take care of their own governments. Without intending to irritate or disparage anybody, I say to my brethren upon the other side of this Chamber that there is nothing to be made politically by embarassing the movements of the Government of the United States in these great transactions which involve its relations with foreign countries.

I dismiss, as the President of the United States very properly dismissed, with contempt the proposition that the Government of the United States is capable of any untoward, underground intrigue in connection with this great business. I say that the whole history of it is written. It is a history of anarchy and despotism for forty years upon the Isthmus of Panama. If there was no other law of the United States or of nations that justified our conduct, I would suggest the existence of a law which more than once has directed the history of this world, and that is the law of exhausted patience.

The time had come and had long been passed when the United States could any longer afford to be mixed up in an attitude hostile to that little community huddled along the Panama Railroad, fighting for its liberty and longing for the time when it might enjoy the advantages in its commerce and its business which must come from the interoceanic canal. I rejoice that after all these years the time came when with honor and with dignity and with dispatch the Government of the United States could wash its hands of that despotism, could put an end to its alliance with that anarchy, could bid an affectionate good-by to that cunning dictatorship at Bogota, and extend for the first time in its history the right hand of fellowship and defense to the population of the Isthmus of Panama.

For the first time in all this long controversy the canal is in sight. I hope our old friend the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] will live to see it finished, to see the great enterprise to which he has devoted his life consummated in the construction of this public work. It ought to be built upon the sea level. I predict that before we are fully at work upon that canal the progress of electrical science will devise measures to put the canal through upon the sea level at an expense infinitely less than any of the practical engineers of our day even dream of.

It will be built, owned by the United States, defended by the United States, undisturbed by the anarchy at Bogota, in the midst of a grateful, friendly community in sympathy with our interests and with our purposes, enjoying at last the realization of their hopes and of their ambitions. It will make secure the fame of many who have given it help in times when it needed help. It will preserve the reputation of statesmen of both Houses of Congress of all parties and all sections who have looked forward to its consummation. Foremost among them will be the Senator from Alabama, and I hope that his years may be lengthened to see that day.

But among all the statesmen whose names are honorably connected with this superb enterprise there is one—brave, direct, and manly in his life before he entered upon the duties of President; brave, direct, and manly still under the burdens of that great office—for whom above all others history will reserve, after these noises are all silent, its choicest benediction, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant of civilization." [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Applause is not permitted in the galleries.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, before the Senator from Iowa leaves the Chamber I wish to call his attention to a statement he made. I will wait until he has received the congratulations of his friends on his speech.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Iowa for a few moments. The Senator states that this treaty is a canal treaty and nothing else, or words to that effect.

Mr. TILLMAN. The treaty of 1846?

Mr. TELLER. I am speaking of the treaty of 1846. I will not assume that the Senator from Iowa has not read the treaty. Of course I know he has.

Mr. DOLLIVER. If the Senator will pardon me, I did not undertake to say that it was a canal treaty and nothing else. I said it was a very long treaty, containing much matter, but that the thing about it which gave it significance, and practically the only thing referred to in President Polk's message sending it to the Senate for ratification, was this canal.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken. He can not have read Polk's message either. When President Polk sent in his message he did not put it on the ground of a canal at all, if the Senator will pardon me, but Polk's message, he will see, put it on concessions made to us with reference to the introduction of goods into Colombia. I ask some Senator to turn to it.

Mr. DOLLIVER. If the Senator will permit me, Mr. Polk says:

Besides—

Referring to the guaranty of the neutrality of the territory—

Besides, such a guaranty is almost indispensable to the construction of a railroad or canal across the territory. Neither sovereign states nor individuals would expend their capital in the construction of these expensive works without some such security for their investments.

Mr. TELLER. I have not denied that, but that does not make good the statement of the Senator that this was a canal treaty. I wish that my colleague [Mr. PATTERSON], who has the message before him, would read what he said as to the other points in this case.

Mr. PATTERSON. President Polk says:

The vast advantages to our commerce which would result from such a communication, not only with the west coast of America, but with Asia and the islands of the Pacific, are too obvious to require any detail. Such a passage would relieve us from a long and dangerous navigation of more than 9,000 miles around Cape Horn, and render our communication with our own possessions on the northwest coast of America comparatively easy and speedy.

Then he continues:

The guaranty of the sovereignty of New Granada over the Isthmus is a natural consequence of the guaranty of its neutrality, and there does not seem to be any other practicable mode of securing the neutrality of this territory.

* * * * * * *

This treaty removes the heavy discriminating duties against us in the ports of New Granada, which have nearly destroyed our commerce and navigation with that Republic, and which we have been in vain endeavoring to abolish for the last twenty years.

Mr. TELLER. The papers submitted with the treaty will show that the practical point to be secured by the concession that has just been mentioned in the message was not the canal, and the canal is mentioned simply once in that treaty.

If I can not have the attention of the Senator I do not care about discussing it. Mr. President, I do not get up here simply to charge something against the Senator. I think the Senator overlooked the gist of this treaty, and I wanted to call his attention to it; but if the Senator is not at all concerned about it, it is not worth while, perhaps, for me to make the suggestion.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I assure the Senator I am very much interested in what he says. I have been interrupted, without any purpose to be disrespectful to him.

Mr. TELLER. This is a treaty of amity, navigation, and commerce. It consists of a large number of articles. It is one of the most elaborate treaties that we have ever made. It has thirty-six articles in it. The thirty-fifth article is the one that treats of the canal and the railroad. It mentions the canal once. At that time there was no transit at all across the Isthmus at that point, except the trail that went across. There was no railroad. The railroad was built subsequently to that time. This treaty does not profess anywhere in it to be a canal treaty. As I said the other day, it does not give us any canal rights whatever. It does not purport to do it.

The Senator from Iowa says we had a sovereignty in it, Mr. President, that is denied by a subsequent treaty which we ourselves made eleven years later, in which we said then that by this treaty it was the duty of Colombia, or New Granada at that time, to take care of this transit, and not our duty.

The Senator says that we certainly had a property right in it. Mr. President, I assert that neither President Pierce nor any other man ever asserted, inferentially or otherwise, that we had any property rights there in the territory or any right of sovereignty. A right to travel through another man's land does not give me ownership in the land, and when Colombia said to us, "You may go across any canal that may be built, you may go across any railroad that may be built," they did not say that we had the sovereignty.

Mr. President, this was a treaty for twenty years. What would become of the sovereignty we are supposed to have obtained from Colombia if, at the close of twenty years, we should say, or Colombia should say, "This treaty is terminated?" That of itself shows that there was no sovereignty here.

I repeat that the President of the United States is the first man ever found in the United States to suggest—whether he suggested it on his own motion or not I do not know—but he is the first man who ever suggested it publicly.

Mr. President, you do not establish propositions of law any more than you establish propositions of morals by vociferation and declaration—that is to say, unless the declaration is made by a legislative body. The Senator speaks ex cathedra when he says, "Nobody can question what I have said. I declare this to be the law." Of course it may be all right for the Senator to say that, but it comes in conflict with the decisions of the Attorneys-General and of the Secretaries of State of the United States for the last forty years. It puts him in absolute hostility to the opinions of all the publicists of all the ages of the world. He says there is no use in going back to Grotius. I am afraid he has not been there, Mr. President. I think he might acquire some information of value to him if he went there and studied that great authority.

I do not intend to make any speech on this subject, but I want to call the Senator's attention to the matter, because I think, if he will examine the treaty, he will see that this passage is significant:

And, in order to secure to themselves the tranquil and constant enjoyment of these advantages, and as an especial compensation for the said advantages and for the favors they have acquired by the fourth, fifth, and sixth articles of this treaty.

Those are the things which are included in what my colleague [Mr. PATTERSON] read from the message of the President.

That was the gist of this treaty and of its language. As I said the other day, for forty years thereafter we absolutely ignored the proposition that we were to build a canal there. We treated with other nations. When we passed bills, of which we passed three, they were for the purpose of building a canal somewhere else.

Mr. President, it seems to me—and I speak with all deference for the Senator from Iowa—that he was inclined to put me in a false attitude when he said that I questioned the authority of the report which he read from Commander Hubbard. I was careful to call attention to the fact that the statement was made upon a report made to him by the prefect—I do not know whether he was a fat man or a lean man or a mulatto, or what he was; but I know he was a man who naturally had large interest in securing active interference with affairs there by the Government of the United States, and it was but natural for him to say to our officers: "If you do not intervene, you are all going to be killed, for this man is threatening with death and destruction everything American."

I called attention yesterday to the fact that our consul in the voluminous correspondence which he had with the Government of the United States concerning conditions there never mentioned anything of that kind.

This is not a question of the condition of Colombia. It does not make much difference whether the people there are as bad as the Senator from Iowa says they are, or whether the people of Panama are as good as he says they are. This question can not be settled in that way. We have presented the law as we believe it to be. If Senators wish to contest that, of course they have the right to contest it upon their own judgment or they can contest it upon authorities.

I am not disturbed by the frequent and repeated laudations of the Chief Executive and the Secretary of State. All those things are proper to a certain degree, and they may be profitable even beyond what is proper. My relations with the Executive are certainly not hostile; yet I can not subscribe to the statement that this act of the President is a more magnificent, transcendent, patriotic, and beneficial act than that of any previous Administration or of all Administrations, as I have heard asserted.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, in the debate in the Senate on January 14, whilst I was occupying the floor, the following colloquy took place:

Mr. QUARLES. The Executive discretion as to whether a government should be recognized. And, to make my question more pointed, I should like the Senator to indicate to the Senate what act of the President it is that he thinks Congress should disavow. That will bring the legal question exactly down to the point where we can comprehend it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should disavow all of his acts that are in violation of the treaty of 1846—and I have enumerated them—that are in violation of international law—and I have enumerated them—and in violation of the Constitution of the United States—and I have enumerated them. What happens when the disavowal is made?

* * * * * * *

Mr. SPOONER. I appeal to the Senator from Nevada to introduce such a resolution in order that there may be developed here in a practical way a line of action on his proposition.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will take the appeal of the Senator from Wisconsin under consideration.

Pursuant to that appeal, Mr. President, I have prepared the resolutions which I send to the desk to be read by the Secretary, as they present my individual views upon this question. They contain a statement of fact, a recital and disavowal of the acts of the President which constituted a violation of the treaty of 1846, of international law, and of the Constitution. They provide for redress to Colombia and for the immediate settlement of all existing claims of Colombia and the immediate commencement of the Panama Canal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas by the treaty between the United States and the Republic of New Granada (now Colombia), made in 1846, New Granada guaranteed to the United States that the right of way or transit across the Isthmus of Panama upon any mode of communication then existing or thereafter to be constructed should be open to the Government and citizens of the United States, and in return the United States guaranteed, positively and efficaciously, to New Granada (now Colombia) the perfect neutrality of the said Isthmus, with a view that the free transit from the one to the other sea might not be interrupted or embarrassed, and also guaranteed in the same manner the rights of sovereignty and property which New Granada (now Colombia) had and possessed over the said territory; and it was also provided in the said treaty that if any of the articles contained therein should be violated and infringed, neither of the two contracting parties should ordain or authorize any act of reprisal nor declare war against the other on complaint of injuries or damages until the party considering itself offended should have laid before the other a statement of such injuries or damages, verified by competent proofs, demanding justice and satisfaction, and the same should have been denied in violation of the laws and of international right; and

Whereas thereafter the Panama Railroad was constructed under a concession granted by Colombia, by which the Panama Railroad bound itself to transport gratuitously the troops, chiefs, and officers, their equipage, ammunition, armament, clothing, and also the effects that belonged to or were destined for the immediate service of the Colombian Government, and thereafter the control of such railroad was gained by the New Panama Canal Company of France, which, under the concession granted by Colombia for the construction of an interoceanic canal, was obligated to carry gratis, through the canal or auxiliary railway, namely, the Panama Railroad aforesaid, "men destined for the service of the nation, for the service of the State, or for the service of the police, with the hope of guarding against foreign enemies, or for the preservation of public order," and also to transport gratis their baggage or material, armament, etc.; and

Whereas the treaty of 1846 had, prior to the recent occurrences, been uniformly construed by the Government of the United States as enjoining upon the United States the duty and the privilege of protecting the neutrality of the Isthmus of Panama and the sovereignty of Colombia over the Isthmus against foreign attack, and as enjoining upon Colombia the duty and reserving to her the privilege to maintain domestic order and suppress domestic disorder which would injure such freedom of transit; and

Whereas prior to the recent occurrences the aid given by the United States in the maintenance of domestic order was in aid of Colombia, at her request, and in recognition of her sovereignty, as said treaty required; and

Whereas by act of Congress approved June 28, 1902, the President of the United States was authorized to purchase the rights of the New Panama Canal Company of France, and also to acquire the control of the Panama Railroad, and also to acquire from Colombia the perpetual control of a strip of land between the Caribbean Sea and the Pacific Ocean, for the purpose of constructing an interoceanic canal, and it was also in said act provided that, should the President be unable to obtain for the United States a satisfactory title to the property of the New Panama Canal Company of France and the control of the necessary territory of Colombia, and other rights referred to therein, within a reasonable time, and upon reasonable terms, then the President should proceed to obtain control, by treaty, of the necessary territory from Costa Rica and Nicaragua for the construction of the Nicaragua Canal, and should thereupon proceed to its construction; and

Whereas, thereafter, the treaty known as the "Hay-Herran treaty," providing for the acquisition and control of a strip of land on the Isthmus of Panama, was negotiated between the United States and Colombia, which treaty required confirmation by the Senate of the United States and the Congress of Colombia, and such treaty was ratified by the Senate of the United States, but failed of ratification by the Colombian Congress; and

Whereas thereafter the President of the United States, as appears by his message addressed to the Senate, learning that an effort would be made to dismember the Colombian Republic by the secession of Panama therefrom, directed the Navy Department to station certain of the armed vessels of the United States within easy reach of the Isthmus; and

Whereas thereafter, as appears by such message, on the 2d of November, 1903, and prior to the organization of a revolutionary government in Panama, the following instructions were sent to the commanders of such vessels:

"Maintain free and uninterrupted transit. If interruption is threatened by armed force, occupy the line of railroad. Prevent landing of any armed force with hostile intent, either Government or insurgent, at any point within 50 miles of Panama. Government force reported approaching the Isthmus in vessels. Prevent their landing if, in your judgment, the landing would precipitate a conflict;" and

Whereas the landing which the said naval forces were instructed to prevent was the landing of Colombian troops intended to aid in the maintenance of civil government in Panama, and to defend the sovereignty of Columbia against domestic disorder and insurrection, if any such occurred, and the hostile intent therein referred to was the intent to suppress any such intended insurrection, and the conflict which said forces were to prevent was the use of force, if it proved to be necessary, by the Colombian Government to maintain and defend its sovereignty in Panama, and to suppress any domestic insurrection or disorder, if any such existed.

And thereafter certain forces of Colombia, having landed at Colon on the 2d day of November, before such instructions were received by the naval forces of the United States, their commanding officers proceeded on the Panama Railroad to Panama for the purpose of arranging the movement of their troops and were there arrested and imprisoned by an insurrectionary body of men, which had organized a junta and declared the independence of Panama at 6 o'clock on the evening of November 3; and thereafter, on the following 4th day of November, the commander of the Nashville, landing United States marines at Colon, prohibited the transit of the Colombian troops aforesaid to Panama, as reported in the following telegram:

"COLON, November 4, 1903.

"SECRETARY OF THE NAVY, Washington:

"Provisional government was established at Panama Tuesday evening; no organized opposition. Governor of Panama, General Tobar, General Amaya, Colonel Morales, and three others of the Colombian Government troops who arrived Tuesday morning taken prisoner at Panama. I have prohibited transit of troops now here across the Isthmus.

"HUBBARD."

And such prohibition was in express violation, not only of the concessions made by Colombia to the Panama Railroad and to the Panama Canal Company, as aforesaid, but also of the express terms of said treaty of 1846; and

Whereas, thereafter, the President, after preventing by the intervention of the armed forces of the United States, as aforesaid, the Colombian Government from suppressing such alleged insurrectionary movement, did, on November 6, 1903, recognize such alleged insurrection as an existing government and entered into relations with it, and denied the sovereignty of Colombia over said Isthmus, and recognized the sovereignty of such insurrectionary government over the same, and did thereafter, on the 9th of November, notify the Colombian Government that the United States would not permit the Colombian forces to land on the Isthmus for the purpose of asserting its sovereignty and suppressing insurrection against it, and thereafter did recognize M. Bunau-Varilla, a citizen of France, and representing the Panama Canal Company as the minister of the so-called Republic of Panama, and did cause to be negotiated with him as such minister plenipotentiary a treaty between the United States and the so-called Republic of Panama, providing for the construction of an interoceanic canal at Panama, and such treaty has been submitted by the President to the Senate for confirmation; and

Whereas the President, in justification of his action as aforesaid, subsequent to the rejection of the Hay-Herran treaty asserts:

1. That the rejection of the Hay-Herran treaty was a breach upon the part of Colombia of the treaty of 1846, the spirit, if not the terms, of which required that Colombia should grant subsequent concessions for the construction of means of interoceanic communication;

2. That the national interests and safety required it;

3. That the interests of collective civilization required it; and

Whereas the Government of Colombia, after the doings aforesaid, sent a special commissioner to the United States to present the complaints of Colombia against the United States for violation of the treaty of 1846, and for violations of international law, and requested other adjustment of said complaints or the reference of them to impartial arbitration: Now, therefore,

Resolved, That the instructions of the United States to its naval forces aforesaid not to permit the landing of the Colombian troops on the Isthmus, and the intervention of the armed forces of the United States to prevent such landing and the use of the Panama Railroad, and the display of power and force which overawed Colombia and prevented her from defending her sovereignty over the Isthmus, and thus secured the secession of Panama and the dismemberment of Colombia and the creation of a new sovereignty in Colombia's territory, sustained and supported only by the armed forces of the United States, constituted a declaration and prosecution of a successful war upon the part of the United States against Colombia.

2. That such action constituted a breach of the treaty of 1846 in this, that it denied Colombia's sovereignty over the Isthmus of Panama, expressly acknowledged by the treaty of 1846.

3. That it also violated the provision of the treaty of 1846, which declared that neither of the two contracting parties should ordain or authorize any act of reprisal nor declare war against the other on complaint of injuries or damages until the party considering itself offended should have laid before the other a statement of such injuries or damages, verified by competent proofs, demanding justice and satisfaction, and the same should have been denied in violation of the laws and of international right.

4. That the recognition by the President of the United States of a state thus attempting to secede, which was without a government or an army or the ability to sustain itself or to maintain international obligations, and whose existence was supported and sustained alone by the armed forces of the United States, constituted a breach of international law.

5. That the armed intervention of the United States, as aforesaid, was making war against Colombia upon the part of the President of the United States without the sanction of the Congress of the United States, and was in violation of the provision of the Constitution which gives to Congress alone the power to declare war.

And whereas it is reported that Colombia is willing to settle on an honorable basis all her claims against the United States in relation to said occurrences and said Isthmus: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President of the United States is respectfully requested to negotiate a new treaty with the United States of Colombia providing for the cession by Colombia of all rights of every kind and description whatsoever which Colombia may claim to have in connection with the Isthmus of Panama or the treaty of 1846, including all her rights in the concessions for the construction of the Panama Railroad and Panama Canal across said Isthmus, and absolutely substituting by said treaty the United States of America for the United States of Colombia in all respects whatsoever, as far as said Isthmus of Panama is concerned.

Resolved, That said treaty should follow as closely as is feasible the lines of treaties whereby the United States acquired by purchase Louisiana from France, Florida from Spain, and Alaska from Russia.

Resolved, That if it is found impracticable to agree upon the amount of compensation for said cession, said amount shall be referred for determination to arbitration, one arbitrator to be appointed by each Republic, and the umpire to be named by the president or sovereign of some disinterested country; but in case such arbitration is found necessary said treaty shall contain a provision allowing said cession to take full effect upon the exchange of ratifications thereof, without waiting for the result of said arbitration, in order that work upon said canal may be at once commenced.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I do not wish now to indulge in any extended remarks upon these resolutions. I simply wish to say that they express my individual views, without consultation with my associates as to the method by which all existing complications can be settled and the construction of an interoceanic canal across the Isthmus of Panama be immediately commenced. Their purpose is to expedite the canal, not to delay it.

I wish to say also in this connection that it has been stated in the public press that among the other propositions made to the Government of the United States by General Reyes, the special commissioner appointed by Colombia to settle these complications, the suggestion was made that, as compensation for the territory thus taken from Colombia, Colombia would accept the sum of $10,000,000, to be expended in the construction of a railroad from Bogota to the coast.

I wish to say that I can imagine no worthier plan for the expenditure of this money than the one suggested by General Reyes. We all know that Colombia has no adequate means of transportation; that she is suffering from two things—one the lack of proper transportation and the other the lack of a proper medium of exchange, without which no country can reach either a high degree of civilization or of material progress. It seems to me that the Government of the United States could give to this Central American Republic no more substantial evidence of its desire to give adequate redress for accomplished wrongs than by appropriating such a sum for so beneficent a purpose. Our treaties, our diplomatic correspondence, our resolutions, our laws, all attest our desire for relations of friendship and amity with South American and Central American States. Let us add acts to words.

Now, Mr. President, I ask that the resolution lie on the table for future consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution will be received and go over under the rule.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask that it lie upon the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Subject to the call of the Senator?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; subject to my call.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks that his resolution be printed and lie on the table subject to his call. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I do not object to that arrangement, although sometimes the call of a Senator may be inconvenient for other business of the Senate. There is now on the table a resolution of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who yesterday gave notice that he would speak during the morning hour to-day on his resolution, and the consideration of that resolution occupied the entire morning hour. It is, of course, a subject of importance, and I suppose another day will be taken up in its discussion. I only suggest that, in case the arrangement suggested by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] is made, it should be so made as not to interfere with the important business that may arise in the Senate.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Of course I have no disposition to interfere with important business. I am not sufficiently familiar with the rules of the Senate to ask just what ought to be done with the resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. I think there will be no difficulty about it; but it seems to me we have a good many resolutions now lying upon our table that in some way ought to be disposed of. I am perfectly willing that the Senator from Nevada may have his resolution taken up at some convenient time. I only make the suggestion with a view of facilitating the consideration of the regular business of the session.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I only want to say that I suggest to the Senator from Nevada, who, as he says, is not as familiar with the rules of the Senate as some of us are, that the course he has taken as to his resolution was the customary one, and I am very sure that there will be no abuse of the privilege by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the arrangement suggested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If Senators will allow the Chair to make a suggestion, he will say that there are perhaps a dozen resolutions now on the table, which are permitted to stay there until each has had its day in court. The resolution of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has had a day in court, but by unanimous consent it is still permitted to stay here. If the resolution which the Senator from Nevada has offered remains on the table, it will be at the bottom of the list; but the Senator can probably, whenever he so desires, if it shall not be reached within two or three or four or five days, by unanimous consent call it up in the same way the Senator from South Carolina called up his resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. I remember, Mr. President, the suggestion has been made here once or twice that Senators were being denied the opportunity to secure the passage of resolutions calling upon the Departments for information. Now, if there is any information desired as respects the important matters pending before the Senate, I hope resolutions of that character will be considered. That is all I desire to request about it.

Mr. GORMAN. I am delighted to hear the Senator from Iowa say that, if he will permit me.

Mr. ALLISON. I am delighted that the Senator from Maryland is delighted.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand that the resolution offered by myself asking for information after conference is not objectionable to anybody, and I ask that we may now have a vote on it. It is the pending resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending resolution?

Mr. GORMAN. The pending resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senator from Nevada content to have his resolution go over?

Mr. GORMAN (to Mr. NEWLANDS). Yes; that is all we want.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from Nevada wants to make a speech, he can get an opportunity almost any time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the resolution will go over under the rule.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Nevada will have a chance to make a speech whenever he desires.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rule.

Mr. GORMAN. Now I ask for a vote on the pending resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for a vote on the pending resolution?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What is it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the resolution known as the "Gorman resolution."

Mr. GORMAN. Let it be read.

Mr. KEAN. It has been very much amended.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I should be glad to have it read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. Let it be read.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes. It simply calls for the orders of the Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. GORMAN on the 5th instant, as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not in his judgment incompatible with the public interest, to inform the Senate:

First. The date when and the circumstances under which the United States used for the first time, and each succeeding time, a military force in the internal affairs of New Granada, or Colombia, under the treaty of 1846; whether such use of military force was on the initiative of the United States or by the request of New Granada, or Colombia, or in consequence of any official representation of either; and also to transmit to the Senate copies of the letters, or notes, in the Department of State, and of the orders by the Navy Department relating to such use of military force.

Second. Also to inform the Senate whether or not the United States has been asked by New Granada, or Colombia, or any official representative of either, to execute, by armed force, either the guaranty of the neutrality of the Isthmus or of the sovereignty of New Granada, or Colombia, over the same; and if the United States has been so asked, then the dates and circumstances thereof, and to send to the Senate copies of the letters or notes, in each case, conveying the application and what was done thereunder by the United States.

Third. And also to inform the Senate in which, if any, of the disturbances on the Isthmus of Panama, referred to by the President in his last annual message, the United States employed a military force, solely on its own initiative, and uninvited by the Government owning the Isthmus; and also to inform the Senate of the circumstances in each case which required such use of military force, and transmit copies of the orders issued by the Navy Department for such purpose.

Fourth. And also that he will inform the Senate of the dates when and circumstances under which the United States has employed military force in the internal affairs of New Granada, or Colombia, in aid of a revolt, or rebellion, or disturbance of the peace therein, or to suppress such revolt, rebellion, or disturbance.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the last paragraph? I ask the Secretary to read it again.

The Secretary read as follows:

Fourth. And also that he will inform the Senate of the dates when and circumstances under which the United States has employed military force in the internal affairs of New Granada, or Colombia, in aid of a revolt, or rebellion, or disturbance of the peace therein, or to suppress such revolt, rebellion, or disturbance.

Mr. SPOONER. That is rather a peculiar provision. It assumes that at some time the Government has employed military or naval force in aid of a revolt against Colombia. If the Senator from Maryland will qualify that, as I think he should——

Mr. GORMAN. I supposed the resolution was entirely satisfactory.

Mr. SPOONER. I had not observed that subdivision.

Mr. GORMAN. If the forces never have been so used, the President will say so.

Mr. SPOONER. It inquires whether at any time the Government has employed military or naval force in aid of a revolt.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. But the question as put there assumes that there have been such occasions and asks for dates. That is not proper.

Mr. GORMAN. If the Senator from Wisconsin will read the resolution, I think he will find——

Mr. McCOMAS. If my colleague will permit me, I suppose he means to include naval as well as military forces.

Mr. GORMAN. "Military force," I take it, would include either the naval or the military force. At any rate, there is no case where the Army has been employed; it has always been the Navy.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I should object to the passage of the resolution in its present form. It seems to me that the fourth clause particularly is predicated upon a false basis. There is an assumption which, in my judgment, is unwarranted:

> Fourth. And also that he will inform the Senate of the date when and circumstances under which the United States has employed military force in the internal affairs of New Granada or Colombia—> in aid of a revolt, or rebellion, or disturbance of the peace therein.
> How?—

It seems to me that is entirely unwarranted, and, speaking for myself, I am unwilling to send to the President of the United States any resolution of that sort.

Mr. SPOONER. It is contended on the other side by some Senators that recently the United States employed military force in the internal affairs of New Granada or Colombia in aid of a revolt or rebellion or disturbance of the peace therein. That we on this side all deny. I did not understand that the Senator had in this resolution any inquiry based upon the assumption that we are all wrong and that he and some of his associates are right; but that is what this is. I do not think the Senator from Maryland meant that.

Mr. GORMAN. The President of the United States informs us in his message that the armed force of the United States has not been engaged in aid of a revolt or rebellion.

Mr. SPOONER. But, if my friend will permit me, that, to me, only affords an additional argument against the propriety of this subdivision of the resolution, because it could not be anything else than an insult to the President of the United States, of which the Senate ought not to be guilty, to pass a resolution asking him when something occurred which he has explicitly denied ever occurred.

Now, whether what was done on the Isthmus by the President—and there has been a full statement of the facts in regard to it—gives rise to a fair inference for argument that the troops of the United States or the military forces of the United States were used there in aid of a revolt, is a matter for us to discuss here. The Senator entertains one view of it; we entertain another. But the resolution assumes and asks the Senate to assume that our forces were used there in aid of a revolt or rebellion. That is not fair to the President or to the Senate. I can not vote for any such proposition, although I have no objection in the world to the resolution as I supposed it was.

Mr. GORMAN. I supposed the Senator had gone over the resolution very critically and that there had been eliminated all the objectionable features that were in the original resolution. The President has stated emphatically that his conduct and the conduct of the military force at Panama on this particular occasion was in exact conformity with what had preceded. That is controverted. The correspondence and the orders from 1846 to now have never been published in full. All I desired was that all that information since 1846, from the ratification of the treaty down to the present time, should be furnished to the Senate.

I think, upon reflection, that possibly the fourth clause is not absolutely necessary. I think that under the clauses preceding it we will get all that we desire. As the Senator from Wisconsin and the chairman of the committee are perfectly well aware, I do not desire to make any inquiry of the President of the United States which is not perfectly fair. We may afterwards debate his suggestions and criticise them as we please, but in treating with that great office I would not knowingly be the author of, nor would I have the Senate wittingly or unwittingly pass, a resolution which, according to fair judgment, contained the slightest reflection upon him in making the inquiry. Therefore I was careful to insert the usual provision in the very beginning of the resolution that the President be requested to furnish the information if it was not, in his judgment, incompatible with the public interest. I think there may possibly be something which it would not be proper to communicate to the public.

But believing of him, as I believe of all Presidents, that he will deal with us with perfect fairness and give us all of the correspondence and orders, unless there be some great reason of state why he should not, I am perfectly willing to leave it to his judgment.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Do not the first three paragraphs in the Senator's resolution cover all that is really necessary to be obtained, in his opinion?

Mr. GORMAN. I am rather inclined to think, I will say to the Senator from Indiana, that that is true; but in view of the discussion which has taken place and in view of the broad assertion of the President in his message that his recent action was in strict conformity with precedents in the past, I should like to have a full account of any interference on our part to suppress a revolt or a rebellion and the extent to which the military was used. We want full information. If it is considered by our friends on the other side of the Chamber, who, of course, are exceedingly anxious that nothing shall be done in this matter except what is perfectly proper, and I agree with that——

Mr. FAIRBANKS. No; if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The fourth section is not directed merely to information with respect to suppressing rebellion, but includes information with respect to aiding rebellion.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It assumes that our force has been so used.

Mr. GORMAN. There can not be any controversy that in the recent occurrence our forces were used.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. In aid of rebellion?

Mr. GORMAN. They were used to compel the troops of Colombia to quit that part of the territory.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. There is where there is a very serious dispute. We do not agree with the Senator's interpretation of what was done there.

Mr. GORMAN. No. Of course we disagree about it. The President would state the facts and get them in whatever form he desired to put them. But if there is serious objection to the phraseology of the fourth section, and believing that I will get all the information that is absolutely necessary in the consideration of this case, I have no objection to modifying it.

Mr. FORAKER. I was about to suggest a modification, but before suggesting it I wanted to inquire of the Senator whether or not I understood him to say that he is willing to allow the fourth paragraph to go out?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. He said that.

Mr. FORAKER. If so, that is the best modification of it.

Mr. GORMAN. I will omit that part of it.

Mr. FORAKER. I made the inquiry of the Senator as to whether or not he had stated that he was willing that the entire fourth paragraph should go out.

Mr. GORMAN. I said, upon reflection, it seemed to me that possibly I would get all the information without it, and I will omit it.

Mr. FORAKER. I was about to suggest an amendment, if the Senator from Maryland was not willing to have the whole section go out.

Mr. GORMAN. I should be glad to have the Senator suggest the amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. The amendment I would propose is as follows. Has the Senator the resolution before him?

Mr. GORMAN. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. I would strike out from line 20 the words "in aid of a"——

Mr. GORMAN. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. And insert in lieu thereof "on account of any;" and then strike out all after the word "therein" in the twenty-first line; so that it would read:

> Fourth. And also that he will inform the Senate of the dates when and circumstances under which the United States has employed military force in the internal affairs of New Granada or Colombia on account of any revolt or rebellion or disturbance of the peace therein.

That would call for information as to any kind of employment, without regard to whether it was in aid or in suppression of a revolt or rebellion, and would avoid all controversy among ourselves. It calls for the facts without assuming anything.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the Senator from Ohio will permit me, I understood the Senator from Maryland to say that upon further reflection he thinks the information desired by him can be obtained under the three preceding sections.

Mr. FORAKER. I think he is right about that, and I suggested that that was the best way to amend the resolution—by striking out the whole of article 4. But if article 4 is to remain,

I think it ought to be so amended as to assume nothing, but simply to call for the facts.

Mr. GORMAN. I will ask that the amendment of the Senator from Ohio be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paragraph as proposed to be amended will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Fourth. And also that he will inform the Senate of the dates when and circumstances under which the United States has employed military force in the internal affairs of New Granada or Colombia on account of any revolt or rebellion or disturbance of the peace therein.

Mr. GORMAN. I will accept the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland modifies the resolution as it has been read.

Mr. McCOMAS. I suggest to my colleague, although the amendment suggested by the Senator from Ohio has been very properly accepted, that the fourth inquiry is in substance the first inquiry, already in the resolution. It adds words, but it is really the same thing, because the first inquiry calls for information as to the use of military force in the internal affairs of New Granada or Colombia under this treaty. You simply add words by saying "in respect to a revolt." It does not add anything to the first proposition. My colleague's first proposition, to omit section 4, leaves the matter entirely comprehended in the three previous sections. The fourth adds nothing to it. However, I merely make this suggestion to my colleague.

Mr. GORMAN. My colleague will find that there is a very great difference. The first section simply calls for information as to use of our forces at the request of New Granada or Colombia, while the fourth asks whether the employment of force occurred without its request. The Senator will observe the difference if he will look at the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of the Senator from Maryland as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CULLOM. It has been suggested that the Senate adjourn over from this evening until Monday. I am entirely willing to agree to that suggestion if no Senator desires to speak to-morrow on this subject. I should like very much to have the Senate remain in session if any Senator is ready and willing to speak to-morrow on the subject, and I make the inquiry for the purpose of ascertaining what is the fact.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution which has been under discussion for the last ten days has now been passed.

Mr. CULLOM. But the general subject will be before us.

Mr. SPOONER. There is no lack of supply.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; the Chair is informed that there is not.

Mr. GORMAN. There are several other resolutions which relate to the same subject.

I will say to the Senator from Illinois that it was the general impression that we would adjourn over to-morrow, and I think from what information I have that there is nobody on this side of the Chamber who is ready to go on to-morrow. There are Senators who desire to speak the first of next week on some other branches of this subject. So I really think we would save time by adjourning over to-morrow.

Mr. CULLOM. As no Senator seems to be ready to speak to-morrow, I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 22, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HORSES, CARRIAGES, ETC., AT GOVERNMENT EXPENSE.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I have a privileged report which I desire to submit.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

House resolution No. 153.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish this House, at his earliest convenience, a statement showing the number of horses, carriages, and automobiles maintained at Government expense for the officials of his Department, together with a statement showing the cost of said horses, carriages, automobiles, and harness, and the amount of wages paid to men acting as coachmen, footmen, and chauffeurs, whether carried on the rolls as such or in some other classification; also the list of officials entitled to the use of said carriages.

Mr. HULL. There is an amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the word "carriage," in line 10, "and for what purposes such vehicles are used."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HULL. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, the question will be first on the amendment reported from the committee, and then I have no objection to the gentleman from Minnesota offering an amendment, if he so desires.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the resolution be so amended as to give also the dates of the purchase of these various vehicles. At the end of the committee amendment add "and the dates of the purchase of such vehicles."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after the word "used," "also the dates of the purchase of such vehicles."

The amendment was agreed to.

The question was taken on the adoption of the resolution, and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. HULL. I want to ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that all gentlemen who addressed the House yesterday on the army appropriation bill may have five calendar days to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all who addressed the House yesterday on the army appropriation bill may have five calendar days in which to print. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to give notice to the House that to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal, I will move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the army appropriation bill.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of pension bills on the Private Calendar under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of pension bills upon the Private Calendar under the rule.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House, with Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar under the rule. The Clerk will report the first bill.

Marion Gamble, late major of Sixth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, before the word "Sixth," strike out the word "of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES P. WALLACE.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 6442) granting an increase of pension to James P. Wallace.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James P. Wallace, late of Company G, Forty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

FRANCIS E. CHASE.

The next business was the bill (S. 12) granting an increase of pension to Francis E. Chase.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Francis E. Chase, late of Company E, Tenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

EMILY CONKLIN.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4937) granting an increase of pension to Emily Conklin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emily Conklin, widow of James L. Conklin, late of Company A, Fifth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

In line 9, after the word "receiving," insert the words:

"Provided, however, That in the event of the death of the helpless child, Cora B. Conklin, on whose account the pension of Emily Conklin is increased, the pension of said Emily Conklin shall continue only at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said helpless child."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

SAMUEL ALEXANDER.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 610) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Alexander.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel Alexander, late of Company H, Twenty-fifth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "Twenty-fifth," insert the word "Regiment."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

EMMETT COLE.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 198) granting an increase of pension to Emmett Cole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emmett Cole, late of Company F, Eighth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES H. CUMMINGS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 6588) granting an increase of pension to James H. Cummings.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James H. Cummings, late of Company B, Eleventh Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "Infantry" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Cavalry."

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I should like to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee. I know nothing about the merits of this particular bill; but I see that it proposes an increase of this pension to $50. Under a rule of the House we have no "right" to have the report accompanying the bill read so we can act intelligently; we must guess at the merits of the case as the clerk reads the bill at the desk. "Go it blind," as it were—act in the dark on each bill, unless by the grace of the committee we can have read the report——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there is a committee amendment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then I wish to be heard on the amendment. I want to know something about this bill and then I wish to make a general inquiry.

I desire to ask the chairman of the committee reporting this bill why it is that this claimant appeals to Congress instead of the Pension Bureau for this increase?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Because he has received all the relief that the Pension Office can grant under the law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understand, then, that there is no law for this increase, and therefore this man has come here with his application and asks Congress to pass a private act for his relief.

Now, allow me another question. The gentleman will remember that at the last session I asked why it was that so many appeals from the Pension Bureau were made to Congress for relief by special acts, and the gentleman very promptly said it was because the applicants did not get "justice" at the Pension Bureau.

That was under the administration of Hon. H. Clay Evans, who is now an ex-Commissioner, an "X-ray," and making this Government a fine representative in London. Now, what is the difference in the administration of that office under the distinguished gentleman, Mr. Ware, a very charming gentleman, able and just, whom I have met, and the administration of the office under Mr. Evans in reference to doing justice to the claimants before that Bureau? Why are these great cartloads of claims sent or why do they come to the House for relief instead of that being done at the Pension Office? Now, my inquiry is entirely frank and seriously made, and I hope the gentleman will answer it.

Mr. SULLOWAY. These claimants come to Congress because a great many of them have no relief under existing law, and I do not say that any intentional injustice is being done at the Bureau, and do not say who is responsible for justice not being done, but when the claims come here with the evidence and we find that justice has not been done, as a court of equity we try to deal justly with the applicant. Now, the gentleman asks me what is the difference between the administration under a gentleman from his State, whom he says has now become an "X-ray," and the gentleman now at the head of the Bureau. It is the difference between a real man attending to his business and an X-ray at a distance.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Evans is certainly an ex-Commissioner of Pensions. I thought he had a way—an X-ray talent—of seeing a long way into the pension matters which he passed on; did his duty, at least, in a great measure, as much so as he could to receive no moral support from his party, then, as now, in power.

The gentleman said he did injustice to the claimants; hence they appealed to Congress. But the same thing is occurring with Mr. Ware as Commissioner, though I think he is able and honest. What is the matter? You do not say Mr. Ware is doing anyone an injustice, nor do I. But who is the officer who does?

Mr. SULLOWAY. I have no doubt that there are mistakes made in that office. It is impossible for it to be otherwise. It is a great board of clerks and examiners. One has one opinion and another has another opinion; and I have no doubt if the gentleman would think for a moment he would find that the appeals made from the Bureau to Congress are not so numerous as the appeals from United States courts to the Supreme Court of the United States pro rata. Therefore it is not remarkable that cases come here in this way.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, the gentleman told us at the last session in answer to my question that the reason why so many appeals came here was because the claimants did not get justice at the Bureau. There were over 100 bills here on last Friday taken up and passed, and there are 210 to-day, I understand. Now, does the gentleman mean to say that injustice has been done to all these claimants under Mr. Ware's administration?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Not at all.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then why do they not go to the Bureau to have their claims passed upon?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Some of these cases were adjudicated way back years ago, while others have no status for technical reasons, yet they are very meritorious and very deserving.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, can the gentlemen tell us whether injustice has been done to these claimants whose bills are piled up here before us or not? If any, which?

Mr. SULLOWAY. I do not say that they are doing intentional injustice to anybody, but I will say they fail to do justice in many cases. We examine all the evidence, and we dispose of the cases as a court of equity would do, and a court of equity would not do an injustice.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is the present administration not doing justice?

Mr. SULLOWAY. I do not know. The matters go through a lot of hands, and the claimants often do not get what they are entitled to receive, it seems to me.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think we ought to do away with a bureau that permits an injustice and compels the claimants to appeal to Congress for justice and substitute a court of three or five judges, like the Court of Claims, which protects the Government, and whose judgments Congress respects and pays almost invariably?

Mr. SULLOWAY. My friend understands that there is a very great difference between a law court and an equity court. In the Bureau they take the evidence and consider it under the rules of the law. We look at it in the light of equity. We read the evidence and give what we think justice demands. That is the way we do in the committee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Just a word more. The Chair and the older Members will remember it distinctly that I put the question distinctly to the gentleman in charge of these bills and asked him why so many pension matters were brought here last year from the Pension Bureau. He said deliberately and repeatedly that it was because injustice was being done to the claimants at the Pension Bureau, and hundreds and hundreds and even thousands of appeals were made to Congress to do justice here—in other words, to reverse the action of the Pension Bureau. Now, Mr. Chairman, at the opening of the present session of Congress——

Mr. FULLER. I wish to make an explanation here. I think that the law does not reach many of these cases. There are many of them not cases that can get justice done at the Pension Office, but special cases, where the law does not reach. The evidence shows that very many of the cases are very meritorious, but that the parties making the claim are in such a condition that they need the aid of the Government. They might have rendered service to the Government that entitled them to it, and no general law reaches that particular class.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then why does not the gentleman and his party, who are in power, and who have the power now in this House, bring in a general law to give the relief that is needed, instead of unloading on this House every Friday a great pile of these claims that we all know we do not and can not consider, but pass them as rapidly as two men can talk and the chairman say "Aye" from the floor?

I stated a year ago that during his administration Mr. Evans tried to do his duty, but stood unsupported by his party; and now, with a new Commissioner, we had in this House on the last Friday great piles of these claims brought here for our action, and these claimants are coming here saying that they can not get justice done to them at the Bureau. So it seems to me that it has been demonstrated that there was no more injustice done there under Mr. Evans than is being done now, and you are passing bills in same way as when Evans was Commissioner. I do not believe that Mr. Ware is otherwise than an able and efficient officer. I like the gentleman. I have had the pleasure of meeting him. I think he will give equal and exact justice to these claimants at the Bureau, and if they are not able to give them justice we ought to do away with the Bureau entirely and let Congress or a court do this work. If these claimants can not get justice there, then something is wrong and it ought to be corrected. If the clerks are doing wrong, investigate them and find where the wrong is, find who is doing it, and punish that individual or dismiss him.

Mr. Chairman, I say this causes an unnecessary burden to fall on Congress which should be lessened. I want to pass all these pension bills which are proper, and they will be passed, and I am going to vote for all which are just. We do not know whether they are just or not. Who does? Here is a prima facie case of justice because the committee reports it. That is all we know. But I am trying to get from the gentleman from New Hampshire the reason why so many are brought here under the administration of Mr. Ware when as many were brought under the administration of Mr. Evans because he did "injustice" to the claimant.

By implication Mr. Ware is doing "injustice" to the applicants at that Office, because about the same number of cases come from the Pension Office under Mr. Ware as under Mr. Evans. I do not believe Mr. Ware is a man who would knowingly do anybody an injustice. The gentleman from New Hampshire now seems to accuse not Commissioner Ware, but some "clerk." Now, who is the clerk? The House every Friday throughout the sessions of Congress considers these cases to do justice to them. Justice ought to be done to the Government and claimant, and a clerk who knowingly does an injustice to a claimant who is justly and legally entitled to a pension ought not only to be dismissed but otherwise dealt with.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I want to ask the gentleman if he is opposed to passing these bills?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; I am not opposed to this bill, and the gentleman should know that must be true, for I am, and so is the committee, ignorant of its merits, and it is useless to inquire; but I am opposed to any officer or clerk being guilty of wrongful acts at the Pension Office which force this and other bills to come here for relief.

We should run down the clerk and find out who that clerk is, and if the gentleman can tell me I would like to know, and if he can not tell me I think we ought to have a resolution passed to investigate and find out who is the guilty party.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I want to ask the gentleman if he is opposed to the passage of any of these bills?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I can not answer that. I am not advised of their merits, nor is the committee. The gentleman knows that I have never voted against a bill for a pension which I thought was right. I do not know whether I shall vote for or against these bills. We are ignorant of the facts. I am trying to see why these claims are brought here to Congress that "justice" might be done them, because it is said that injustice was done others down in the Bureau a year ago and were brought here to get justice done. Does this "injustice" still continue in passing on these claims? Who is this "clerk," this wrongdoer? That's the question.

Mr. RUSSELL. I desire to propound a question to the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Has there been any agreement or understanding or any rule adopted by that committee by which each Member of the present House is authorized to have reported a certain number of bills?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. RUSSELL. There has been no such rule?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. RUSSELL. I will ask this question, then: Has there been any practice established by this committee allowing each Member to report any given number of bills or have them reported?

Mr. SULLOWAY. The practice of that committee is to do the work that they and its clerks can do——

Mr. RUSSELL. That does not answer the question.

Mr. SULLOWAY. And as gentlemen furnish the evidence in their cases then we consider them, and if a Member does not furnish any evidence then we have nothing to consider. In all cases where application has been made at the Bureau the Pension Office papers are always sent for.

Mr. RUSSELL. That does not answer the question propounded.

Mr. SULLOWAY. It does exactly, sir.

Mr. RUSSELL. It does not satisfy me.

Mr. SULLOWAY. That may be; I am not here to satisfy you, necessarily.

Mr. RUSSELL. Well, that may be true, but neither do I think the gentleman satisfies the House.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Well, I do not know about that.

Mr. RUSSELL. Here is the question: Have the Committee on Invalid Pensions established any practice by which the Members of this House are authorized to have considered any given number of bills?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Not at all, sir.

Mr. RUSSELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, if that be true, I want to put this in the RECORD right in this connection. During the early portion of the special session I received this card, and I presume every Member of Congress received one similar to it. It is headed as follows:

Committee on Invalid Pensions, House of Representatives, United States, Fifty-eighth Congress.—CYRUS A. SULLOWAY, of New Hampshire, chairman; HENRY R. GIBSON, of Tennessee; SAMUEL W. SMITH, of Michigan; WILLIAM A. CALDERHEAD, of Kansas; ELIAS DEEMER, of Pennsylvania; ELIAS S. HOLLIDAY, of Indiana; W. GODFREY HUNTER, of Kentucky; THOMAS W. BRADLEY, of New York; CHARLES E. FULLER, of Illinois; ROBERT W. MIERS, of Indiana; JOSEPH B. CROWLEY, of Illinois; GEORGE H. LINDSAY, of New York; JOHN S. SNOOK, of Ohio; ALFRED LUCKING, of Michigan; FRANK A. HOPKINS, of Kentucky. William H. Topping, clerk; George A. Bailey, assistant clerk; Herman Gauss, principal examiner detailed from Pension Bureau.

Subcommittee No. 1.—Mr. GIBSON, of Tennessee; Mr. HOPKINS, of Kentucky; Mr. SNOOK, of Ohio. States and Territories: Delaware, Ohio, Virginia, Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Texas, and Indian Territory.

Subcommittee No. 2.—Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, of Michigan; Mr. DEEMER, of Pennsylvania; Mr. LUCKING, of Michigan. States and Territories: New Jersey, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Michigan, District of Columbia, Maryland.

Subcommittee No. 3.—Mr. HOLLIDAY, of Indiana; Mr. MIERS, of Indiana; Mr. HUNTER, of Kentucky. States: Indiana, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Missouri, North Dakota, South Dakota, Kentucky.

Subcommittee No. 4.—Mr. CALDERHEAD, of Kansas; Mr. FULLER, of Illinois; Mr. CROWLEY, of Illinois. States and Territories: Iowa, Illinois, Kansas, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, Washington, Oregon, New Mexico, Utah, California, Arizona, Nevada.

Subcommittee No. 5.—Mr. SULLOWAY of New Hampshire; Mr. LINDSAY of New York; Mr. BRADLEY of New York. States: Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York.

The committee realizing that it is going to be impossible to consider all of the large number of private bills referred, and thinking Members might have some preferences among the bills they have introduced, beg leave to suggest that they indicate the order in which they prefer that their bills be considered. Members should cause to be filed with their respective bills such evidence as may be requisite to justify the committee in reporting the bill for passage and in defending it before the House. Requests for consideration of bills should be made by Members either in person or in writing, the number of the bill to be stated. Evidence filed direct with the committee must have indorsed thereon the number of the bill to which it relates.

Now, I want to say in this connection, before I propound the question again, that it is not my purpose here—and I am sorry that the gentleman from New Hampshire has manifested some display of impatience—that it is not my purpose to cast any opprobrium on the committee. I realize that you have not time to consider the mass of bills brought in for private pensions at this session of Congress. There have been introduced in this House and in the Senate together between 3,500 and 4,000 private pension bills. There was never assembled the same number of lawyers as constitutes this Committee on Invalid Pensions in any country on earth that could give proper consideration to one half the number of justice-court cases as this committee is compelled to consider of these pension bills.

This is in line with what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] said, because you told him that the reason these bills came here was because they could not receive proper consideration in the Pension Bureau. Now you bring them into a body which every Member knows is absolutely determined to give them no consideration. You have tried to subdivide the labor. You do not profess in this card which I have read that the committee can consider these matters, but you subdivide the work and give certain States to certain Members and place certain States with certain Members to give consideration to the bills coming to the committee from those States, manifesting, Mr. Chairman—and I say it with all due respect—the physical and mental inability of the committee to give the attention it deserves to the great number of measures brought before it. And still further evidencing your inability to properly consider these measures, you invite the Members who have introduced them to select the ones to be considered by the committee.

Mr. SULLOWAY. We consider them all as far as we can, having first obtained from the Member a list of the cases he considers the most deserving and most meritorious, and we further ask him to specify them in their orders.

Mr. RUSSELL. As far as you can?

Mr. SULLOWAY. As far as we consider them. The subcommittee first examines a bill and then reports it to the full committee, and it is then considered by the full committee, the report being read in full in each case and all the facts brought out.

Mr. RUSSELL. The question still presents itself. By this card you have had printed you say you are unable to give them consideration. It is no reflection on the ability of the committee. I have been a hard-working lawyer ever since I came to the bar, and I know how to turn off business of that sort. I make the assertion that there never was a lawyer, I do not care what his mental virility is, that can take the bills that are sent to your committee, if they were justice-court cases, and give them one-half of the consideration that they deserve.

Mr. SULLOWAY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Does the gentleman anticipate that not 25 per cent of them are ever asked to be considered by the Members who introduced them?

Mr. RUSSELL. Well, then, if I understand you, there are certain bills that Members never ask to be considered. Is that so?

Mr. SULLOWAY. There has to be with this great number of bills.

Mr. RUSSELL. Why?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Because they can not be reached.

Mr. RUSSELL. They can not be reached by the committee?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Not if we had to consider every bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. There never has been a period since I have been a Member of this body that Congress has not passed every one that you have reported.

Mr. SULLOWAY. That shows great confidence in the committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUSSELL. This committee needs no defense——

Mr. FORDNEY. Then what is the gentleman objecting to?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am trying to get some information for this House. The question that I started to propound was this: Has that committee established any rule or any practice by which each Member of this House can have reported or considered any certain number of bills? Members have told me on the floor that you have agreed to allow each Member two bills.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Nothing of the kind.

Mr. RUSSELL. Is it four bills?

A MEMBER. I have been told that it was two bills.

Mr. RUSSELL. A Member says two bills. I hear it all around me. Have any of you other gentlemen heard it?

Mr. SULLOWAY. It is no matter what the gentleman hears. I am not responsible for that. I say there is no such agreement.

Mr. RUSSELL. Has the committee established any such practice?

Mr. SULLOWAY. There is no practice except to equalize the distribution of bills among Members as far as possible and afford relief in as many meritorious cases as can be reached.

Mr. RUSSELL. I heard a Member say the other day that each Member was to have one bill on the Calendar for that day, and he stated, further, that the Member to whom he was talking was fortunate in having secured the reporting of two of his bills for that Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY. That meant that Calendar that day.

Mr. RUSSELL. What is the agreement about that?

Mr. SULLOWAY. There is no agreement about it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Now, then, if that be true, why do you tell gentlemen in this card to report to the committee the bills they want considered?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Simply because we want to go round and treat each Member the same, as that card says.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is what I am trying to get at. Is there an understanding amongst the committee that you will go around?

Mr. SULLOWAY. That is what we are doing.

Mr. RUSSELL. How many times?

Mr. SULLOWAY. That is exactly what the gentleman meant that spoke to you the other day, that we have on the Calendar so many bills for different gentlemen in the House.

Mr. RUSSELL. You say now the committee wants to go round—how many times?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Just as often as we can, sir.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is the practice, then—as often as you can?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. How many times can you go round?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Sometimes four and sometimes five during a Congress.

Mr. RUSSELL. Then the maximum is four?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I did not say that.

Mr. RUSSELL. If that be true, then some Members on that side of the House—I have not had time to look all of it up, but you have some Members on that side of the House that up to the adjournment of the extra session had introduced, one of them eighty bills, another seventy, and another one had introduced eighty-nine bills. Now, here is the question that I want to ask the committee: If this Member, Mr. Jones, or Mr. Brown, or Mr. Thompson, or whoever he may be, comes in here with eighty bills, and he picks out four of them and tells your committee that he wants you to investigate those four, why is not that gentleman doing the other seventy-six a greater injustice than has been done them over here at the Pension Bureau?

Mr. SULLOWAY. May I answer the gentleman?

A MEMBER. The blame is not with the committee.

Mr. RUSSELL. I don't care who the blame rests with. I am not talking about where the blame should be placed.

Mr. SULLOWAY. It will appeal to anybody that a Member in his district knows the meritorious cases better than a man living in some other State or district, and the Members are asked to name the bills in the order as they deem them the most meritorious. That is the reason.

Mr. RUSSELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, without any feeling in the matter, supposing that be the rule the committee has established, and I take it from that confession of the gentleman that that is the rule——

Mr. SULLOWAY. I don't admit it is any confession—there is no confession about it. I am merely stating a fact.

Mr. RUSSELL. Well, admission then.

Mr. SULLOWAY. There is no admission about it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Well, then, statement. I shall accommodate myself to the verbal differences between myself and the gentleman. I will say the statement, then, and I recall the expressions "admission" and "confession"—the statement the gentleman makes. If that be true, this state of facts is bound to be existent in this House, and that is this: Nobody here disputes the fact that the private-pension system has grown utterly beyond the power of this House to consider it—to consider it. I mean that word in its broadest signification. There is not a man in this House—and I make the statement now and ask that it be challenged if it can be—who will say that in the practice of the House in passing these bills any consideration is given to them at all. And the committee in this card states that it has grown beyond the power of the committee to consider them.

Mr. SULLOWAY. No bill is reported here that has not been carefully considered. I can not let that statement go into the RECORD unchallenged.

Mr. RUSSELL. Nobody knows anything about this bill now, I will venture the assertion, except the Member who made the report and the man who introduced it. You can not find out anything about it.

Mr. SULLOWAY. The report is before you, the same as in every other bill that comes before the House for consideration, and a carefully considered detailed statement, warranted by the evidence and presented to this Committee of the Whole House, and these reports are easily obtainable at the Document Room.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, this Calendar shows——

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I would like to ask how much the gentleman addressing the House knows or will know when he votes upon the present bill before the House—that is, the army appropriation bill, carrying $80,000,000—how much he knows in detail about the provisions of that bill, and how much he knew about the details of the bill which passed the other day, carrying twenty-eight millions, reported from the Appropriation Committee?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am glad that the gentleman has asked that question. I wish to God we had the same chance to have the same examination of these private pension bills. I know that the bill last week making appropriation for legislative, executive, and judicial purposes is almost similar to bills of that character that have passed this House for the last fifty years. I know that before that bill was brought in here it was put within the power of every man in this House to go to the Book of Estimates and see what the bill was going to be based upon.

I know that the departments having charge of those matters brought in a report that every one in this House had an opportunity to read. I know that in each of those bills and in every other appropriation bill which is passed here we devote from six hours to three days in discussion of it, so that we can find out something about it.

Upon the other hand, I know that there went upon the Calendar of this House on last Monday 103 private pension bills. I know that on Wednesday you added eighty-five to that number. I know that you added twenty-two to-day. Since last night, after the House adjourned, you have put twenty-two bills on that Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY. That is not the fact. We have put no bills on the Calendar last night or to-day.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does the gentleman say that twenty-two bills have not been put on the Calendar since last night?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Not from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am not asking from what committee these bills came; but they are private pension bills that appear on this Calendar for the first time to-day. I know that there were 103 put on last Monday. I have the Calendars to prove my assertion. I know that there were one hundred and eighty-odd on the Calendar on Wednesday, and that now you have 210. Now, what chance has there been to consider those bills?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The gentleman has not given any answer to the question I propounded. He has simply said how he might get information in regard to the two bills to which I referred; but the question is, Did he personally investigate and obtain the information for himself on those two great bills?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes, sir. I sent and got the Book of Estimates, and I have been giving the best attention I could to those bills.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. How much have you given?

Mr. RUSSELL. Every bit that I have ability to give.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. That is very indefinite. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUSSELL. Certainly it is.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I owe it both to the gentleman and myself to say that in my remark just now I meant no reflection upon his ability. The House put an entirely wrong construction upon my remark if it supposed that I meant any reflection of that kind.

Mr. RUSSELL. I did not so consider it. I am not so modest as that. I assure the gentleman that I am taking no offense at his answer—not a bit.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. But it is well known to every Member of this House that it is a mental and physical impossibility—and no one knows it better than the gentleman from Texas if he has been a studious, patient, and faithful member of the committees to which he belongs—to enter into the details of each and every bill coming before the House and vote intelligently upon each specific provision.

Mr. RUSSELL. You commit the bill to the committee, do you not?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Wait a moment. We must take the judgment of the committees largely, and the committees take the judgment of the subcommittees.

Mr. RUSSELL. Very true; but you have not done that in this instance, according to this card. You have taken the personal selection and personal decision of the man who introduced the bill.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. RUSSELL. You say so in terms.

A MEMBER. They are the only ones that have been considered.

Mr. RUSSELL. If you do not consider them, in the name of heavens what chance has a bill?

Mr. SULLOWAY. We have only taken up the cases which a Member desired to have considered.

Mr. RUSSELL. Well, I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions this question: Have you ever reported a bill here this session, or at the extra session, except one that a Member has sent to your committee to be considered?

Mr. SULLOWAY. We did not have any bills before us at the extra session, as there was no committee at that time.

Mr. RUSSELL. Well, this session.

Mr. SULLOWAY. We have had but one pension day in the House this session before to-day.

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh, don t fence with me in that way. Have you reported any bill here except such as a Member asked to have considered?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Not one, except Senate bills.

Mr. RUSSELL. Then the gentlemen of this House who have introduced from 50 to 150 bills and who, according to the gentleman who addressed me a while ago over there, are relying upon the fact that there may be a chance to "go round" four times, ought to be able when they go home to say to their constituents why they picked out those four bills particularly to be considered.

Mr. BURKE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes, sir; certainly.

Mr. BURKE. I should like to have the gentleman state whether he has ever introduced a bill in this House upon any subject that was considered by a committee before he had requested the committee to consider it.

Mr. RUSSELL. I presume not.

Mr. BURKE. Then would you expect a bill which you had pending here for a private pension to be considered before you requested it?

Mr. RUSSELL. Now you emphasize my position. These gentlemen will not only go back to their constituents with the information that four bills were picked out by them, but they will go back, according to the gentleman's assertion, with the additional information that they have not asked the committee to consider any more.

Mr. BURKE. Now, let me put this proposition——

Mr. RUSSELL. All right.

Mr. BURKE. I would say to the gentleman that I represent a constituency that has a very large old-soldier population. I have, perhaps, introduced at this session of Congress six bills. Out of that number I indicated two bills that I wanted to have considered before the other two. These two parties were not upon the pension rolls at all, while the others were already drawing pensions under existing law. Now, I want to know if it was not proper to indicate to the committee that I wanted the two bills of the parties not drawing pensions at all considered before they considered the other bills?

Mr. RUSSELL. I think the gentleman has got his defense in the RECORD, and I will expect to see him back here next Congress.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. Certainly.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Do you claim that a single Member here has not been fairly treated by the Invalid Pensions Committee?

Why, Members of the House for years and years have been interested in these people who are to get the pensions; they are interested in the people for whom they introduced these bills.

Mr. RUSSELL. How many bills have you introduced?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I do not know. I am not sure as to how many.

Mr. RUSSELL. Have you introduced as many as fifteen or sixteen?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I have introduced more than fifteen.

Mr. RUSSELL. Have you introduced as many as fifty? What interest have you in those bills? Those poor men back in your district are interested in them, but what interest have you in those bills?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Why, no more interest than in any other measure I have introduced.

Mr. RUSSELL. You are a personal acquaintance of a great majority of them.

Mr. FORDNEY. How many bills of this kind have you introduced?

Mr. RUSSELL. I have not introduced any at all.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Have not you introduced any bills—pension bills?

Mr. RUSSELL. No, sir.

Mr. FORDNEY. Have you no old soldiers back in your district? Do you not know that Members on your side of the House have introduced as many as 150 bills?

Mr. RUSSELL. I say this: I am glad the gentleman called my attention to it, and I will say that the old soldiers of this country have not any better or truer friends in this House—and I will mention their names, because they are the two that now occur to me—than Judge MIERS, of Indiana, and Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would as soon take Judge MIERS's word on any bill he brings in here as anybody, but you bring in a whole lot of these measures when you know they can not be considered. You ask us to pass them all without any opportunity to consider them.

Mr. FORDNEY. Here is the report on this measure.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understood the gentleman to say that he has not any feeling in this matter.

Mr. RUSSELL. Not at all.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not true that in the campaign he made against Mr. De Graffenreid, a gentleman who had for his friend every man who knew him, if he did not assail him—bitterly assail him—because he had not stopped what you choose to denominate this outrage upon the public Treasury in granting all these pensions? Did you not make that a personal issue against him?

Mr. RUSSELL. I made this issue——

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, just answer my question.

Mr. RUSSELL. I will answer the question in my own way.

Mr. HEPBURN. Did not you make that a personal issue with Mr. De Graffenreid?

Mr. RUSSELL. I decline to permit the gentleman to put the words into my mouth in answering the question that he has asked me. I will answer it in my own way.

Mr. HEPBURN. Did you not make it a personal issue with him that he did not stop the granting of these pensions?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am going to answer the gentleman's question, and he must not answer it for me. I will answer it myself. And he must let me make my answer.

Mr. HEPBURN. Make it.

Mr. RUSSELL. I said this: That if the pension laws were unjust, if they were improper and unequitable, they ought to be amended and some general power, under sworn authority, should have charge of these matters and say who should and who should not have pensions in this country; and I said that an examination of the records would show that this House did not have the time to deal with or consider so many of these pension bills.

Mr. HEPBURN rose.

Mr. RUSSELL. Let me get through. Since I have come here I have found this information has been confirmed by my own personal observation.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, have you made your answer?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, will you answer the question I asked you? Did you not assail Mr. De Graffenreid because he had not exerted himself, as you said, against this wrong and outrage?

Mr. RUSSELL. Not because he had not assailed it, but because he had engaged in it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Engaged in it!

Mr. RUSSELL. And I took the position that no one who had engaged in it could consistently attack it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then you did have that personal feeling, and you did have that personal issue, because you rode that issue over his head in that race. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RUSSELL. No, I do not believe that was the only issue upon which I was elected. I had no personal issue in the matter—no personal feeling in the matter now. I had simply an interest in the existence of a state of affairs here that, in my judgment, ought not to prevail, and I still have that opinion.

Mr. HEPBURN. Let me ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. RUSSELL. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. Have you introduced any measure here looking to stopping what you denounce a dereliction of duty or to remedy a dereliction of duty upon the part of Mr. De Graffenreid, and have you introduced any measure in the two Congresses of which you have been a Member except three bills for the particular and especial benefit of people in your district?

Mr. RUSSELL. Certainly. I will tell you what I have done. I do not see how you can introduce a general law that would curtail the privileges of this Congress in passing special acts. The gentleman is too good a lawyer to say that I could introduce a general law here that would be held valid to prevent Congress passing these special acts, but I will tell the gentleman what I have done.

Mr. HEPBURN. Just a moment, if the gentleman will permit me. He has introduced three bills during his Congressional life—one to provide for the enlargement and improvement of the public buildings at Tyler, Tex.; another to provide for a public building at Terrell, Tex.; another for the relief of the legal representatives of the Hon. O. M. Roberts and others. That is the extent, is it not?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am glad my friend puts that in the shape of an interrogatory, because that relieves him from standing upon it as an assertion. No, sir; that is not the fact. Now I will tell you what I have done. Let me ask you a question. I offered a bill here—you were speaking about what my career has been as a Member of Congress—and it is a recent one——

Mr. HEPBURN. I only spoke of it because of the specific character of the assault the gentleman made upon my old-time friend De Graffenreid.

Mr. RUSSELL. Then the gentleman holds malice against me because I came to Congress, I presume. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HEPBURN. No; that is not the reason at all——

Mr. RUSSELL. I will say to the gentleman that if he harbors that malice I regret it, because he will have it the longest day he lives. Let me get back to the gentleman from Iowa. It is not fair to me, Mr. Chairman, for the gentleman to put in this RECORD that those three bills were all I have introduced without taking an answer. I now take a personal interest in putting this into the RECORD. I introduced early here a bill, public in its character, making it a felony for any national bank or banking association or officer thereof to accept a deposit of money, or create any indebtedness by which such deposit could get into the bank, if it was in failing or insolvent circumstances. You have got that law in Iowa. Do you not think it is a good law?

Mr. PERKINS. That is the law now.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is the law in Iowa. Is it not a good law?

Mr. HEPBURN. That is a good law.

Mr. RUSSELL. Then you approve of the course of the gentleman from Texas in that? [Applause on the Democratic side.] I trust before I get through I may be able to dissipate the malice you evidently have against me for my defeat of Mr. De Graffenreid.

Mr. HEPBURN. No; there is no malice. The only——

Mr. RUSSELL. I take that back, because I know the gentleman did not mean that. The gentleman's question was more a matter of pleasantry, and I have replied in the same vein and spirit. That is not the only public bill I have offered. I regret that my personality has been injected into this discussion; but that is not the only public bill which I have offered. There are others—measures which I think possess merit and which I shall offer again.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Did I understand the gentleman to say that he did not introduce any bill or bills of a private nature affecting soldiers?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Have you any Federal soldiers living in your district?

Mr. RUSSELL. I think so.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Do you know of any?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am sure of it; yes.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. About how many?

Mr. RUSSELL. I have not the remotest idea.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Have you ever been requested to introduce any such bills?

Mr. RUSSELL. For Federal soldiers—no, sir.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Then the gentleman acknowledges that you are against it in the South?

Mr. RUSSELL. I have no animosity toward the old soldier; not at all; but I am opposed to the system of passing private pension bills as it prevails in this body. I do submit that the system as it prevails here is subject to animadversion, and it ought to be abolished. Let me tell the gentleman this: You have got 210 bills on this Calendar, and you are going to pass them this afternoon, every one of them. The gentleman knows that the committee can not do it if it gives them any consideration.

There is but one way to rectify this evil. When that great body of men known as the Grand Army of the Republic realizes that you gentlemen have, by the passing of bills here for men that could not get the relief under the general law, by means of which you give more to them than you do to the old soldier in the Union Army that went into the field of battle and fought for his country—when they realize that they are going to demand that this system stop, and it will stop. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CLARK. Now, Mr. Chairman, before anybody else speaks, let us have order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's point is well taken. Members will resume their seats and cease conversation.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I did not desire to take the time of the committee for more than two or three minutes, and that only for the purpose of making an explanation. I have a good deal of sympathy with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RUSSELL]. I can realize that it is not an unfriendly motive, that it is not an unpatriotic motive that prompts him to go into the RECORD. I realize under the rules of this House no Member can fully keep up with all legislation, except from the committee of which he is a member, yet I can not allow his statement, that these bills have not and can not be properly considered, to go into the RECORD without a challenge. I am a member of that committee and do not believe the committee needs any defense at my hands, yet I want to say to him and the House what is the truth, that I, in common with other members of that committee, have spent not only hours on the regular meeting days—Mondays and Fridays—but I believe the record will show (I know it is the fact) that I and other members of that committee have put in the committee room more than two hours nearly every day, considering these questions and others that came before the committee. While all claims can not be considered, all claims that are considered favorably have been carefully considered and the committee is ready to defend the action of the committee. I will agree with the gentleman that it is impossible for that or any other committee to consider all the bills that are referred to that committee.

I believe the facts are, to that committee have been referred nearly 50 per cent of all the bills that have been introduced in this House. No other committee has so many bills, and I doubt if any other committee does more work. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee to say that it is in some way the fault of the Pension Bureau. I am not quite willing to admit it. I do not believe there could be a million of litigants, whether they belong to this class of soldiers or not, that when their cases have been adjusted, but what there would be as much or more complaint and more bills than there are from the Pension Bureau. I confess the position occupied by the Committee on Pensions is a very laborious one and very difficult, and I hope this Congress will make the law plainer and better define the rights of the soldier.

I will agree with the gentleman that many of us under the circumstances introduce more bills than we can expect to have passed or considered. But when an old soldier becomes destitute and physically weak we can only introduce the bill, then do all we can for him, and if we can not get all bills considered it is not our fault.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the gentleman that this whole controversy grew out of an inquiry that I made of the chairman, to wit, Why is it that so many bills under our new Pension Commissioner came here to Congress for relief instead of being sent to and settled by the Pension Bureau? Under the H. Clay Evans administration the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY] said it was because injustice was done them at the Pension Office.

Now, is injustice that is being done them at the Bureau the reason why the bills come here now in such large numbers? I do not believe that Mr. Ware would do anybody injustice knowingly, and the debate discloses the truth of this. The gentleman from New Hampshire says that some "clerk" was responsible for these numerous troubles. If that is so, I think we ought to "go after" that clerk, or anybody else that does the soldier "injustice" and sends all these claims to Congress. If he can be found he ought to be discharged. Nobody objects to the passage of these bills that are just and legal, but we do want to find out what officer is doing this "injustice," so that we can relieve Congress from the burden—a great burden—taking four days of each month to "pass on" these bills, thus barring us from other work a "clerk" can't do.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. If my friend will excuse me, the trouble is this: There is a law that applies to a million claimants. The claimants are like other people; they are never quite satisfied unless the adjudication of the case goes their way; that is human nature. The officer is compelled to justify his action and must do it under the law, and I do not believe that a better answer can be made to the gentleman's question than for me to read from the report in this very case.

First, let me say that, so far as I know, the Commissioner does the best he can, and the same applies to others in the Pension Bureau. I visit the office of the second deputy almost daily. Captain Kelley presides, and I have always found him and his force fair and just. I have universally found them willing to do all the law will permit for the soldier. I have never found any influence, political or otherwise, that influenced their action. While I am a Democrat, I can get for the soldiers of my district any action that is proper or permissible. I have never heard any other claim, except during the last campaign my honorable competitor claimed that a Democrat could not have the same consideration as a Republican. But I want to again refute the charge.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not object to this particular case; and I am, and the whole committee practically are, unadvised of the merits of these bills and cases.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I know the gentleman does not, but it will answer his question by reading from the record.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have no objection to this case, because I do not know anything about it.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I know; but I want to read from this report, because it will answer the gentleman, so that he can no longer doubt.

This bill proposes to increase the pension of the soldier named therein from $24 to $50 per month.

James H. Cummings, now 69 years of age, served as a private in Company B, Eleventh Michigan Cavalry, from September 15, 1864, to June 16, 1865, when honorably discharged.

Medical records of the War Department show that he was under treatment at various dates for measles and anæmia.

He is now pensioned under the general law at $24 per month on account of chronic diarrhea and resulting piles and general debility.

A claim on account of hernia as a result of his diarrhea was rejected in September, 1893, upon the ground that such disability could not be accepted as such result, and a claim filed in 1902 for increase of pension, in which the beneficiary alleged that he required the regular aid and attendance of another person, was also rejected in May, 1903, upon the ground that the disability of accepted service origin did not warrant a rate in excess of $24 per month and that his condition was due in part to other than the pensioned causes.

When last examined, on August 27, 1902, the board of surgeons found him so disabled from heart disease, stomach trouble, hernia, chronic diarrhea, hemorrhoids, catarrh, enlarged prostate, defective hearing, emaciation, extreme nervousness, and malnutrition as to require the aid and attendance of another person in dressing and undressing, and rated him $50 for that condition.

The soldier alleged that in the summer of 1887 he was confined to his bed with chronic diarrhea, which caused him to strain while at stool; that he had gotten able to walk about in the latter part of the summer; that he was very sore about the lower abdomen; that the hurting sensation annoyed him, and that soon after this a lump appeared in the left side which the doctors pronounced a hernia, and another on the right side in about six or eight weeks thereafter.

Upon appeal, the Secretary of the Interior held, under date of September 23, 1900, that from the claimant's own observation as to the manner and time of the discovery of the hernia it was clear that it was not incurred suddenly from straining, but evidently of gradual development, and declined to admit such hernia as a result of chronic diarrhea.

Medical evidence, filed in the Pension Bureau in 1903, shows that the beneficiary still requires the aid and attendance of another person by reason of his combined disabilities.

A claim on account of disease of heart as a result of the pensioned causes was also rejected by the Bureau in 1889 as having no connection therewith, and claims for resulting varicose veins and partial deafness were likewise rejected.

Now, then, this examination shows that the man could not only not dress himself, but he could not hear, that he requires the aid of some one to assist him every hour of the day. That is the condition of that old soldier. We have a law, and what is that law? The law says if that condition is due to his Army service, he is entitled to $50 a month. If it is not due to the service, he can only have $24. Here is the clerk's reasoning. The clerk who passed upon that said he did not believe the evidence of the fact that this person's condition was of service origin. Hence they only gave him $24 a month under the law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many officers approved of that adjudication?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. What does the gentleman mean by "how many?"

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did Mr. Ware approve of it?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Yes. But I do not suppose the Commissioner personally reviewed the claim, but it went the same route of all other claims.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And then the claimant came to Congress?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Yes; there was nothing else for him to do.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman tell me why there are as many claims brought here at this session of Congress under the Ware administration as were brought here before under the Evans administration? I am asking for information; I am not objecting to this case.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I do not question the gentleman's honesty. When the clerk who passed on this deemed it not to be of service origin it came to this committee, and I might read further from this report to show the justification of the law. This man is 5 feet 8 inches high. He weighs only 110 pounds. He is 69 years old. He gave two years of his life, the best part of it, for the old flag and the Union and the integrity of the Union and the Constitution that you and I so well love and as Democrats desire so often to talk about. We find him homeless, in destitute circumstances. His present pension does not yield him the ordinary necessaries of life. Now, without saying whether the Bureau is right or wrong, when your committee finds that kind of a record, perhaps we construe the doubts one way while the Department over at the Pension Bureau construed it the other.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have stated that I have no objection on God's earth to the passage of this bill. I made a simple inquiry, which the gentleman has not answered. I know the gentleman can always answer questions, and I know my friend will be frank enough to answer my question. Why is it, I say, that there are as many claims brought here every Friday under Mr. Ware's administration as were brought under Mr. Evans's administration, and is it a fact that down there they have not time to consider claims and that they thus come here to be considered?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. No, sir; all claims are considered.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And if that is a fact, why not give them more force down there and let Congress go on with other business, instead of doing that which the "clerks" and this Bureau can do.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I am not prepared to say what the motive is or why the soldier is not satisfied nor what blame should attach to the Commissioner. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee frankly that I realize that the position of the Commissioner of Pensions is a very difficult one.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. So do I.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I will say to him further, if he wants me to, that I do not believe the Commissioner of Pensions is as liberal as I would be or the country expects of him. That is one of the reasons they come here. Upon the other hand, there is another reason, and that is that a man is so built that by reason of self-interest he is not fully satisfied unless he gets the adjudication just as he wants it. They find that you and I and the Members of this House are friendly and they come here for a little further relief. The Bureau is administered with ability and I am sure it takes great patience of the head of the department. You may take the number of cases that is on this Calendar and you will find that the committee has carefully sifted them, and, by the way, in the way of answer to a question of my good friend from Texas [Mr. RUSSELL], who asked if we had turned down any claims, I will tell him this: The claims considered are not all put on this Calendar. There are Members within the sound of my voice as well as the other members of the committee who have asked certain bills to be considered.

The committee has considered them and has found that it was not practicable to report favorably upon them. Many are refused, and some that appeal pretty strongly, but the committee, like the Commissioner, does the best it can. I do not know whether it is a matter for criticism or not, and if it is I never thought it, but in that event we have said to the Members, "Your bill that you ask is No. 1, 2, or 3; the committee can not consider it favorably. We want to treat you like any other Member of the House; you indicate some other bill, and we will take that up and consider it." And the facts are that on this Calendar we have gone around among the Members and treated all Members alike, until there are 107 Members represented on this Calendar to-day. The committee tries to deal fairly with the Members, as well as the soldier and the country.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, will my friend yield?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Have they enough machinery down at the Pension Office to attend to the pension business?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I think so; yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Some one stated a while ago on the other side of the House that they have not.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. That is a matter of opinion. I think they have. At least I have heard no complaint. There are near 2,000 clerks, and $140,000,000 is disbursed by reason of the Pension Bureau.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think that instead of having a Commissioner down there we had better establish a court of three judges and let the findings of that court be similar to the findings of the Court of Claims, at least, instead of having all this hubbub every Friday and all this trouble and delay? Clearly better attention would be given cases by a court than this House is even allowed to give these bills and cases. No one wants to keep the soldier out of his pension if it be just. The gentleman knows that I have been here day and night for seven years whenever this committee has met, and have helped that committee to pass these bills. I am ready to vote for this bill, but I hope the gentleman will find out who that clerk is down there that is doing an injustice to these people, compelling them to come here and bother Congress to take up one day out of every week through the long as well as the short session of this body.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. As a matter of course, if I were to hunt out that clerk, then it would be a question of opinion between that clerk and myself or yourself. He has simply adjudicated the claim. Now, as Representatives, we find these claims. I know the gentleman's motive is high and honorable and that he is not opposed to giving the soldier his just desert. As members of the committee we have sifted them. If I or some other gentleman has introduced many more bills than we can have considered, that is a matter which we must settle with our consciences and with the gentlemen whose bills were introduced. We come now to this question confronting us. I have advocated a court of appeals, but it has not met with favor in the House of Representatives. The committee is now considering a service-pension bill, and I think it will make a favorable report to the House. For one I favor a service pension. I would give every soldier who had three years' service, an honorable discharge, and 62 years old, $24; two years, $20; and one and one-half years, $18; and one year, $12; and make every such soldier's discharge his absolute right—and if totally disabled, $30. A bill will be reported, and I am sure the wisdom of the House will improve the present pension laws. [Applause.]

A deserving old soldier submits his case; the House is ready and willing to consider it favorably; the money is in the Treasury; the people of this great Republic are saying, "Yield to such men just a little compensation from our abundant Treasury for what they have suffered."

Now, shall we do that, or shall we take up more time and do nothing? For one I am in favor of granting relief to these few to whom we can grant it; and if we can not give the needed relief to any greater number, then it is not a hardship to those who do not receive because their comrades do receive just a little at the hands of this body.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to state to the House, as there are a great many new Members here who have not heard these discussions in past sessions, what the practice of the Committee on Invalid Pensions is in the case of bills of this kind referred to them for consideration.

In the first place, there are now pending before that committee over 5,000 special bills. Of course it is manifest to Members that it is impossible for us to consider the whole 5,000. We want to do justice as far as possible to the beneficiaries in these bills, and we want to favor Members of Congress as much as possible, consistent with equal justice to them all.

We have uniformly given it out that we would take up cases for consideration for each Member who has bills before the Committee. It makes no difference on which side of the House he sits. We pay absolutely no attention to section or to politics in the committee, as my friend from Indiana [Mr. MIERS] who has just spoken will attest. We endeavor to give every Member of Congress his pro rata, and we call upon all the Members to let us know which of their bills they wish considered first, and we take the cases up and consider them in the order in which Members indicate their preference. A Member with twenty bills will indicate to us, I will say, three bills; he will mark one "No. 1," another "No. 2," and another "No. 3." Thereupon, we send to the Pension Bureau for the files in those three cases.

Our expert clerk takes the files with such other evidence as may be furnished him by the Member of Congress or the beneficiary. He goes through the files; he makes his statement of the facts as he understands them. The file marked "No. 1" is preferred for consideration and is referred to a subcommittee—we will suppose it to be subcommittee No. 1, of which I happen to be a member. That committee takes up the case. We examine it. We see whether it is meritorious. If it be not meritorious, it is so reported, and if the whole committee concurs we lay it aside; and it is not further considered at this session of Congress unless the defect in it shall hereafter be remedied. The subcommittee reports to the full committee of fifteen members. If there is any objection at all, it is brought out in the consideration and discussion. The whole case is stated.

This Member has something to say; that Member has something to say. This one criticises; that one answers the criticism. If there is unanimity upon the part of the committee the bill is reported favorably—not by the subcommittee, but by the whole committee. If there is serious criticism, the bill is laid aside. We do not report any case upon the vote of a bare majority. There must be almost absolute unanimity in order to give a particular bill the sanction of a favorable report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

After we have reported a bill for one Member we postpone that Member until every other Member of the House who is asking to have a bill considered has had one considered. We go all around and consider a bill for each Member asking it before reporting a second bill for any Member.

Of course, in order to receive favorable consideration by the committee, it must be a meritorious bill. Very frequently Members request the consideration of a bill that is not meritorious.

I have myself had laid aside at this session of Congress nine bills that I have been asked to have reported from our committee, the committee of course concurring in my action. They were laid aside for the reason that they were not meritorious. In such a case I have gone to the Member and said to him, "Give me another chance to report a bill for you. The one you asked to have reported is not meritorious, and we can not afford to bring it before the House and make a report in favor of it, to be spread upon the records of the country."

The Member has immediately thanked me and said, "I have another bill which I am just as anxious to get through as the former one;" and thereupon he tells me what bill it is. We send to the document room for it; he indorses upon it, "I want this bill next preferred," and he signs his name to it, and then this bill is taken up and considered on the proof in the case.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is the method of procedure in our committee. The committee is fairly evenly divided on questions of politics; but the question of politics has never been sprung in the committee since I have been a member of it, and I have been such for eight years. Our anxiety is to give every Member his fair pro rata of bills reported by the committee.

We are anxious to give the Democratic side their fair pro rata; and there are Members on that side who will bear witness that I actually go over among them and suggest to them, "Why don't you make a preference of some of your pension bills and give us a chance to report them for you?" For it happens that my constituency in this House—the States that I am considered as representing on my subcommittee—are largely Democratic States; and I am anxious that the Democratic Members of this House shall have a fair showing before the Invalid Pensions Committee, and I have asserted their rights in this respect uniformly, not only in the committee, but on the floor of this House.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am in accord with the sentiment of the gentleman and bear testimony to the fairness of the committee, and I want to ask him this question: Can he give us information as to how many bills are introduced by House Members and also how many Senate bills are introduced—the total number per Congress?

Mr. GIBSON. There are at present about 5,000 private pension bills that have been introduced in the House and about 2,000 in the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And about the number per annum or per Congress that the committee is able to consider and pass upon?

Mr. GIBSON. We pass upon about 1,500, and lay aside about 200 of those 1,500.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Is there not some way that that committee can devise that the soldiers may have their claims passed upon more rapidly or have a prompt adjudication?

Mr. GIBSON. That is not the object of my rising to make these remarks. I want to state to the House what the general rules are under which the Invalid Pension Committee acts in passing upon private pension bills.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Then only about 10 per cent of those introduced receive the consideration of Congress?

Mr. GIBSON. I will state to the gentleman that a great many Members introduce private bills that they know have no very special merit, but do it to satisfy their constituents. I plead guilty to that charge myself; but Members introduce many bills that are exceedingly meritorious, and they are very anxious to have them passed on by the House. A great many bills have no special merit and are never brought before our committee, because the men who introduce them know that they will be turned down, and therefore they select some of their most meritorious bills for our consideration. The Members themselves cull them out, and then we consider them carefully, and if found meritorious we report them, and it is this class of bills that are now on the Calendar.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to go a step further and say why it is that we report bills. On what grounds do we act? I will take the first bill passed this morning. It is the case of Mark A. Shelton, a bill introduced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND], a prominent Member upon the Democratic side, and it well illustrates the principles of our action. Who is this man Mark A. Sheldon? In the first place he served in the Mexican war from June, 1846, to June, 1847. He was a Mexican war soldier with an honorable discharge. In the next place, he served in the Union Army during the war of the rebellion from March, 1862, to March, 1863, and was honorably discharged.

A year's service in the Mexican war and a year's service in the civil war. How much pension is he drawing? Twelve dollars a month, under the act of 1890. He could also have drawn it under the Mexican pension law, which now gives every Mexican soldier $12 a month; but he was already drawing that under the act of 1890 as a civil-war soldier and was getting that pension of $12 a month when we increased Mexican-war pensions to $12 a month.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, let us look at the condition of this man as shown by the report in the case. He is 77 years of age, practically blind in both eyes, suffering from piles, disease of the heart, and rheumatism; has to be helped by somebody from room to room; can not travel the streets without a guide and help, and he is to-day dependent chiefly upon the charity of his friends for the food he eats, the roof he sleeps under, and the clothes he wears.

Mr. Chairman, shall it be said by Members of the Congress of the United States that we are "wasting our time," that we are "burdening Members unnecessarily" when we take up the question of relieving this hero of two wars—the war with Mexico, dear to the heart of every Democrat, the war for the Union, dear to the heart of every Republican? Shall it be said unchallenged on this floor that we are "frittering away our time," that we are "wasting the time of the House" in considering cases like this? What better business could we be engaged in than in giving adequate relief to a soldier who served twelve months in the Mexican war and twelve months in the civil war, now blind, helpless from rheumatism, afflicted with heart disease and piles, and having no means of support excepting a $12 pension and the charity of his friends? This, Mr. Chairman, is a fair sample of the bills we are acting on here to-day.

Now, Mr. Chairman, somebody will say, Well, why does he not go to the Pension Bureau? Mr. Chairman, these disabilities were not contracted in the Army of the United States; therefore he has no standing under any law at the Bureau. His rheumatism was not contracted under the flag; his blindness was not contracted under the flag. Read the cases that are brought before this committee to-day and you will find that the great mass of them are cases where men are drawing under the new law, as we call it, the act of June 27, 1890, $12, or, if drawing under the old law, is drawing some small pension, and in each case is suffering from some extraordinary disease that incapacitates him from doing anything, that renders him helpless and necessitates the regular attendance of another person.

We take the pension which he gets under the law as a basis of action and then give him something for the di abil ty he is suffering from, which was not incurred in the war,and for which he can not draw any pension at the Pension Bureau.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, shall we say that a man who has rendered good service to the country, but who is to-day suffering a disability—I will say blindness, for those cases are very frequent; I will say rheumatism, for those cases are still more frequent, or I will say paralysis, for those cases are very numerous—necessitating the regular aid and help of another person every hour in the day, shall we say that that man shall be dependent upon the charity of his neighbors for his support when here is a great country in whose behalf he risked his life and his health, well able to support him?

I am proud to say that this proposition has never been seriously disputed in this House, but both this House and the other branch of Congress have uniformly come to the help of these men and given them sufficient means to enable them to live with a moderate degree of comfort, without being dependent on the charity of their friends or being driven into the poorhouses of the land. [Applause.]

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to prolong this discussion. I have noticed more than once in the last six years in this House that a discussion of this kind could be sprung at about this hour on pension afternoons and stop the passage of these bills for an hour or two hours, and every minute of time that is taken in this kind of discussion is just so much taken from the time of the actual passing of these bills. That is one reason why every member of the committee does not appear upon the floor for the defense of the action of the committee. The committee does its work as fairly as it is able to do it, and presents the result to the House.

There is ample opportunity for any man who desires to do so to ascertain when its work is unfair or when the report upon any bill does not show a meritorious case, and to make an objection to it. There was one implication made by a quibble upon words which I wish to correct. The chairman of the committee, in reply to a question as to why so many of these bills were brought in by this committee, answered, "Because the claimants were not able to get justice at the Department," and immediately somebody stated that the Department was doing injustice. The chairman did not mean that. The general laws do not provide justice for all claimants. No general law can do anything of that kind, or do that much.

The general law goes as far as it can go as a general law. When there are a million of claimants now upon the pension roll, it is very evident there must be a great many whose cases do not come within the provisions of any law, either by reason of the fact that the law does not provide pensions for the disability which they exhibit or by reason of the fact they are unable to furnish the evidence necessary to satisfy the Bureau of that thing, and upon that question it is right that the Bureau should require the evidence to be satisfactory. We give the Commissioner a hundred and thirty-eight or a hundred and forty million dollars to expend. It would be an easy matter by lax application of the rules of evidence in cases to squander millions and to make the pension roll a burden.

As a matter of necessity the rules of evidence in the Department must be strict and the applicant must comply with the letter of the law to become entitled to a pension, and no officer would be tolerated who would undertake to enlarge the law by his own arbitrary action. The Pension Bureau does justice as far as the law permits it to do, or at least as far as they think the law permits. When it fails, the work of our committee begins. We do it as well as we can and bring the result before the House, and unless we are doing injustice the work of our committee ought not to be obstructed, on an afternoon like this, by discussions which are merely made for partisan purposes, or merely made to fill the RECORD and satisfy the constituencies of those unfriendly. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out in line 11 the word "twenty" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "forty." In support of that I wish the attention of the committee for just a moment. I never attempt to delay legislation on matters of this kind, but I want to say one word in reference to this proposed amendment. This old soldier is 92 years of age. His wife is about 80. I have known them all my life. They have in all in worldly goods a little house and lot, the value of which is not, as the report shows, exceeding $100. The old soldier has been totally blind, as the report shows, for eleven years. Under those circumstances, he being 92 and his wife about the same age, with no means of support and no children to support them or care for them, and as the sands of their lives are about run, it seems to me that we should give them $40 a month for the few remaining days they have.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I trust the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will not prevail. This is purely and simply a service-pension bill. None of the disabilities of this man were incurred in the service, nor is this an exceptional or extraordinary case. There are a large number of these old soldiers of the Mexican war who are very far advanced in years, beyond 80 years, some of them. They are very feeble; some of them are paralyzed and several of them are totally blind. This is the maximum amount that has been reported from the Committee on Pensions, which has been recommended by the committee and the House of Representatives, and I trust this committee will not make an exception of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the committee amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES F. WHEELER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4946) to restore James F. Wheeler to the pension roll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore James F. Wheeler, of Greenwood, Miss., to the pension roll at the rate of $12 per month, his restoration to date from September 17, 1902, on which date he was dropped from said roll, and that he be paid at that rate from the date of his last payment next before the 17th day of September, 1902.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to James F. Wheeler."

Strike out all in the bill after the words "directed to," in line 4, and substitute therefor the following: "place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James F. Wheeler, late of Company K, First Regiment Texas Volunteer Rifles, war with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MINERVA J. BURTON.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 219) granting a pension to M. J. Burton, widow of Thomas Burton.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of M. J. Burton, widow of Thomas Burton, late of Company —, Fifth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, Mexican war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Change the title so as to read: "Granting a pension to Minerva J. Burton."

In line 6 strike out the initial "M." where it appears in the claimant's name and substitute therefor the Christian name "Minerva."

Fill in the blank space on line 7 with the letter "L.," and in the same line strike out "Mexican."

In line 8, after the word "war," insert "with Mexico," and in the same line strike out "twelve" and insert "eight."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like to put an inquiry to the chairman of the committee reporting this bill. This is a pension for the widow of some Mexican soldier, is it not?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Yes, sir.

Mr GAINES of Tennessee. And the amount proposed is $12.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Eight dollars.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You propose to raise it to $12?
Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. No; this is an original pension for the regular amount.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. She is now receiving $8?
Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. She is not receiving anything. This is an original pension which we propose to grant at the rate of $8 a month.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think that the widow of a soldier of the Mexican war should be entitled to a little more than $8 a month?
Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I can only say in reply to the gentleman that that is what the general law gives such a widow. Her application for this pension was rejected at the Department because of a technicality. The committee now by this bill removes the technicality, but does not see why the rate should be increased at the same time.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then the general law is wrong, and we can give a proper standard of relief in this case now. The gentleman knows that we are changing the general law in many cases right here to-day. In many of these cases (and we know nothing about them except as we may have hearsay information) the Bureau has refused to grant the pension because the law does not cover the case, we are told; yet the committee decide that the applicant should be pensioned, or in other cases that the pension should be increased, because of the demands of justice as presented in the particular case.
Now, I think—and I hope my friend from New Jersey [Mr. LOUDENSLAGER] will agree with me—that we ought to give these old soldiers of the Mexican war more than $8 a month; and after the death of such a soldier we ought to give the widow more than $8. They have never been properly pensioned, at least not as the civil-war veterans and their widows.
The survivors of the Mexican war and their widows are now old people of sixty or seventy years at least; and the gentleman knows how little $8 a month amounts to for the support of one of these aged widows. That sum is only equal in purchasing power to what $5.50 were a few years ago. The gentleman knows that everything entering into the cost of living has appreciated in cost.
He also remembers that at the last session of Congress, Mr. Moody, Secretary of the Navy, sent word to us by message or report, through the President, that the cost of material and labor had appreciated 30 per cent in twelve months, and therefore he held that Congress ought to increase by $2,000,000 the amount allowed for rebuilding the Annapolis Academy, making ten millions all told, and Congress gave the two millions. There is close connection between a soldier or his widow and the Navy.
Now, I submit—and I am serious in this and entirely frank—that in none of these cases have the old soldiers of the Mexican war received what they should have received. It does not make any difference where they may live. I understand that this widow lives in Tennessee, the volunteer State, but that does not make a particle of difference to me in considering the merits of this question.
I say we should pay the soldier of the Mexican war more than we are paying him—not simply because he was wounded—not simply because he is old—but because he did serve in that war and can not now from age maintain himself. And the same considerations apply in the case of his widow. Eight dollars a month can not support one of these widows decently, and yet many of them are obliged to live on this pittance and charity. I appeal to the gentleman in favor of a more liberal allowance. This widow must be aged and infirm.
Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The question of what these old soldiers of the Mexican war and their widows are entitled to is a question which I should be very glad to discuss with the gentleman whenever it properly comes up.
It does not come up in this case. Widows in the civil war and widows of the Mexican war get $8 a month. Now, this widow was denied a pension at the Department on account of some technicality.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do you know what that technicality was?
Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. It was the inability on her part to prove her legal widowhood. The committee, taking all the facts into consideration, believed that she was justly entitled to a pension. But we certainly did not think that in removing the technicality that we ought also to give her more money than any other widow of the Mexican war was given under the general law, and so she was given by the committee the same amount that was given to the other widows, and we thought that in doing that we were doing an act of equity and of justice.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, the pension of the Mexican soldier was raised from $8 to $12 a month as an act of grace by the last Congress—less than a year ago. Why not raise his widow's?
Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. That is not to the widow.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understand that; but a good wife is always better than a good husband.
Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I think that is true, as a general proposition.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, we are here pensioning these Mexican soldiers, and have been doing it from year to year at $8 a month; and we have given pensions to soldiers of the civil war, some of them as much as $250 and possibly some more than that; and we gave the Mexican soldier a pension here for years and years at $8 until last session when, because of their getting old, although they may not have been wounded or maimed, but because old age had withered their powers of self-support, we gave $12 a month.
And now, when the soldier is dead and leaves a widow, a grateful people and a grateful Congress, with a bankrupt Treasury, and a liberal-hearted Congress will only give his widow, at least his wife, $8 a month! Possibly she has no home. I asked the gentleman several times about her condition, but no reply to that. Now here is a widow of a Mexican soldier who himself died probably of old age, and yet this committee only proposes to give his widow $8 a month.
I will move to substitute $12 for the $8. As shaped last session, we gave the Mexican soldier himself $12 because of his old age. Here is this soldier who died and left a widow, who was probably the greatest blessing he had on earth. She in all probability was as good as her husband, if not as happy to-day. Now, I move to strike out "eight" and insert "twelve," and appeal to the generosity of our friends to allow that amendment to be made without detaining the committee longer. I appeal to the manhood and patriotism of the members of the committee to give her that amount.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.
The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to amend the committee amendment by striking out "eight" and inserting "twelve" in lieu thereof.
Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I just desire to say a word or two before the vote is taken, so that members of the committee may thoroughly understand what they are voting for. This claimant was not the wife of this soldier during the war. She was, perhaps, never the legal wife of this soldier. She was married to him in 1850, but he had a wife living.
It is but fair to say, however, that she did not know of the former marriage. She lived with the soldier for many years, and when he died she applied for a pension, but the Pension Bureau refused her a pension because she could not prove a legal marriage.
The committee took into consideration her long life with the soldier and also the testimony that the former wife was dead at this time, and concluded to grant her a pension; but I can not conceive how it would be possible for any fair-minded man to say that this widow should have that technicality removed, and that she should receive a higher amount than the widows of other soldiers who served in that war.
Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to say this. Recognizing the justice and propriety of pensioning the widows of the Mexican-war soldiers, I myself have introduced a bill to change existing law, providing that hereafter, if that bill should pass, these widows shall receive $12 per month instead of $8 per month; and I trust that the gentleman from New Jersey, as chairman of that committee, will see that in justice to these few remaining widows of Mexican war soldiers that the bill is passed.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, just a moment or two to reply in part to what my friend from New Jersey has said. He says that this claimant was not the legal wife of the deceased soldier because at the time she claims the marriage he had another wife somewhere, and the claimant was entirely ignorant of this, and subsequently the legal wife died, but there is not any proof in this record—at least if there is the gentleman has not stated it—showing that this woman was ever unfaithful to him or he to her.
She was patriotic enough to stand by him, and when the din of war was sounded she sent him to Mexico, and he did not repudiate her when he came back, and she clung to him, and probably was the only one who went to his grave and wept over him, and perhaps the only one to-day who goes and puts the evergreens about it.
I say, Mr. Chairman, it is a distressing thing for such a marriage as that to occur. Certainly a reflection on the dead soldier, Mr. Chairman, that he was guilty of such a thing, and yet we pension him; and now a good woman, as this record must demonstrate, because we hear nothing to the contrary, simply because she forty or fifty years ago was not by every technicality of law married to him, although she was faithful to him to the grave, and honors and respects his memory to-day, here in the face of, I hope, a generous Congress he says that she was not his legal married wife, and therefore Congress should not give her the $12 the husband was due under the law of to-day.

Mr. Chairman, law does not make virtue nor morals, but protects each. There is nothing in this record to show, as I have said, that she was otherwise than his wife in fact, whether in law or not. There may be to-day orphan children or grandchildren clamoring around her knees, their little stomachs pinched with hunger, and here is the great Congress, with a Treasury packed with money, so much so that we have to send it out to the country banks to keep them from breaking possibly, or keep the money in circulation, and yet, Mr. Chairman, we stand here and balk; this great Congress halts on giving this aged and infirm woman what her husband was entitled to have and did receive, when, the fact is, coming from the representations of the gentleman himself, she was a better woman than he was a man, because he perpetrated a fraud on her; yet, nevertheless, wifelike and true, she clung to him like the ivy about the old and shivered oak until his last battle was fought, the last roll call was heard, and now we stand here to-day hesitating about giving such a wife as that a twelve-dollar pension.

The woman is humiliated, I dare say, whenever she is visited by people, if visited at all. She is forced to avoid them because she was not his legal wife, and without her fault, although she clung to him with unremitting devotion to the last.

I do not know the unfortunate woman, I never heard of her until this bill was read from the desk, and possibly will never hear of her again; but I think that simple justice demands, as this is a peculiar case—a remarkable case of loyalty, love, and devotion of a good woman for a man who at one time in his life abused her confidence, while she was loyal and good down to his grave—that we should put a premium upon such loyalty, such love, such devotion. [Applause.]

The question was taken, and the amendment of Mr. GAINES of Tennessee was rejected.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report its action on the several bills to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry bills upon the Private Calendar and had directed him to report back Senate bill 1543 with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions; that the committee had also directed him to report sundry other bills with amendments with the recommendation that the amendments be adopted and that the bills do pass; also certain other bills without amendments with the recommendation that they do pass.

PENSION BILLS PASSED.

The House then proceeded to the consideration of the bills just reported from the Committee of the Whole House.

The bill (S. 1543) granting an increase of pension to William W. Johnson was recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask unanimous consent that in the case of each of these bills acted upon by the House a motion to reconsider be regarded as entered, and that the motion be laid on the table.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

HORSES, CARRIAGES, ETC., AT GOVERNMENT EXPENSE.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 151.

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish this House, at his earliest convenience, a statement showing the number of horses, carriages, and automobiles maintained at Government expense for the use of officials in his Department, together with a statement showing the cost of said horses, carriages, automobiles, and harness, and the amount of wages paid to men acting as coachmen, footmen, and chauffeurs, whether carried on the rolls as such or in some other classification; also, the list of officials entitled to the use of said carriages.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, the committee report a substitute in lieu of the resolution; which I will ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish this House, at his earliest convenience, a statement showing the number of horses, carriages, and automobiles maintained at Government expense for the use of officials in his Department, together with a statement showing the cost of said horses, carriages, automobiles, and harness, the date of purchase, from what fund the payment was made, and the amount of wages paid to men acting as coachmen, footmen, and chauffeurs, whether carried on the rolls as such or in some other classification; also the list of officials entitled to the use of said carriages, and the purposes for which said vehicles are used.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FREE ENTRY OF CERTAIN ARTICLES AND MATERIALS.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9658) to provide for the withdrawal, free of duty under bond, for incorporated institutions established for religious, philosophical, educational, scientific, or literary purposes, of articles and materials exhibited at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit, at the expiration of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, the withdrawal, free of duty, by any State or municipality or any incorporated institution established for religious, philosophical, educational, scientific, or literary purposes, of any articles and materials imported under bond for exhibition at said exposition and donated to any such institution; the exhibition bonds given on original entry of the articles at St. Louis, Mo., to be canceled only on the production of evidence satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury, showing the donation and the bona fide acceptance of the articles and materials, but bonds shall be given under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, conditioned for the permanent preservation of the articles by the donee and for the payment of lawful duties which may accrue should any of the articles and materials aforesaid be sold, transferred, or used contrary to this provision; and such articles shall be subject, at any time, to examination and inspection by the proper officers of the customs: Provided, That the privilege thus conferred shall not be allowed to associations or corporations engaged in business of a private or commercial character: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the withdrawal, free of duty, of the articles enumerated in and under the conditions prescribed by paragraphs 503, 638, 649, 702, and 703 of the tariff act of July 24, 1897.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to provide for the withdrawal, free of duty under bond, from the Louisiana Purchase Exposition of any articles and materials donated to incorporated institutions established for religious, philosophical, educational, scientific, or literary purposes, or to any State or municipal corporation."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I would state that this bill is reported from the Ways and Means Committee and that it is a unanimous report. The bill has been asked for by the Treasury Department to enable articles imported for the purpose of exhibition at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition to be donated to these various institutions, including States and municipalities, which could not otherwise be done without the payment of these duties.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the title will be amended.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. TAWNEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PRINTING FOR COMMITTEE ON PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Private Land Claims be, and hereby is, authorized to have printed such papers and documents as may be necessary for the business of said committee during the present Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which has just been reported. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask the gentleman from Illinois if it is usual for that committee to have that resolution passed?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. We have had it before. That committee does work occasionly, at least.

Mr. PAYNE. Has the committee had any hearings?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. A good many—a great many.

Mr. PAYNE. At this present session of Congress?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. We will have a hearing on Monday next.

Mr. PAYNE. I say during this present session, has that committee had any hearings?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Not yet; but we will have on Monday next.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we had better wait until there is occasion for it. I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

ILLUSTRATIONS FOR REPORT ON NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the order which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Public Printer be authorized to furnish such illustrations as may be required by the Committee on Naval Affairs in its report on the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the order which has just been reported. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the order.

The order was agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the following change of reference was made:

The bill (S. 128) granting an increase of pension to Clara M. Gihon, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions to the Committee on Pensions.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 23, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal will stand as approved.

CORRECTION OF THE RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the other day in the debate on the civil-service question I, amongst others, made the mistake of thinking that Mr. Machen, while he had not entered under the civil service, had been covered in under it later and had been kept in office by it. After a careful examination I find that I made a mistake, and I therefore wish to correct it and have risen to a question of personal privilege for that reason, as I do not want the matter to stand in the RECORD as I left it.

I ask to append to this statement Mr. Machen's official record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The record referred to by Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi is as follows:

Name, August W. Machen; legal residence, Ohio; position, Superintendent Free Delivery; salary, $3,000; Department, Post-Office; office, First Assistant Postmaster-General; date classified or made competitive, May 6, 1896; date of original appointment, August 22, 1893. Change in status, April 29, 1901, General Superintendent Free Delivery, $3,500, to take effect July 1, 1901; May 27, 1903, removed. - Exc. to nonexc.

HORSES AND CARRIAGES IN THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report. The Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred resolution 149, have directed me to report the same back with amendments and with a recommendation that the resolution as amended be adopted.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to this House, at his earliest convenience, a statement showing the number of horses, carriages, and automobiles maintained at Government expense for the use of officials in his Department, together with a statement showing the cost of said horses, carriages, automobiles, and harness, and the amount of wages paid to men acting as coachmen, footmen, and chauffeurs, whether carried on the rolls as such or in some other classification; also the list of officials entitled to the use of said carriages.

The amendments reported by the committee were to insert after the word "harness," in line 7, the words "the date of purchase, from what fund the payment was made;" and to insert at the end of the resolution the words "and the date when such service was inaugurated."

The amendments were read and agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

On motion of Mr. FOSS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted was laid on the table.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 10954) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for prior years, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I wish to reserve all points of order on this bill.

The SPEAKER. All points of order will be reserved.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I desire to give notice that after the consideration of the army appropriation bill is concluded I will call this bill up for consideration.

RECEIPTS, ETC., OF THE LOUISIANA PURCHASE EXPOSITION.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The report was read, as follows:

"The Committee on Printing, having had under consideration the concurrent resolution (S. C. Res. No. 20) providing for the publication of 15,000 additional copies of the statement of the receipts and expenditures of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, with the accompanying report, recommend that said resolution be amended by striking out all after the resolving clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Public Printer be authorized and directed to print and bind in paper covers 15,000 additional copies of the statement of the receipts and expenditures of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, from the date of incorporation to September 30, 1903, with the accompanying reports submitted by the National Commission of said exposition, of which 5,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 10,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives."

With the foregoing amendment, the committee recommend that the resolution do pass.

The Public Printer estimates the cost of this publication at $1,605.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask for the immediate consideration of this resolution with the amendment submitted as a substitute.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the resolution.

The amendment offered by the committee in the form of a substitute was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted was laid on the table.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. HULL, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. OLMSTED in the chair) and resumed the consideration of House bill 10670, the army appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. House bill 10670, the army appropriation bill, is now before the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for consideration under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingencies of the Army: For all contingent expenses of the Army not provided for by other estimates, and embracing all branches of the military service, including the office of the Chief of Staff, to be expended under the immediate orders of the Secretary of War, $20,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee [Mr. HULL] to this language in line 8 on page 1:

For all contingent expenses of the Army not provided for by other estimates, etc.

I suggest that this language ought to be changed so as to read "not provided for otherwise;" that is to say, by appropriation bills, not estimates. Of course, many estimates are made that are not appropriated for.

Mr. HULL. The bill follows the language which has been in these bills for a good many years; but I have no objection to the change.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then I suggest that the gentleman offer the amendment.

Mr. HULL. I prefer that the gentleman should do it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move to amend, in line 8, page 1, by striking out the words "by other estimates" and adding the word "otherwise."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves to amend, in line 8, page 1, by striking out the words "by other estimates" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "otherwise."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, that makes very bad English. Make it "not otherwise provided."

Mr. HULL. I suggest that the word "otherwise" go in before the word "provided."

Mr. HAY. That is just what I suggested.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Insert the word "otherwise" before the word "provided."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as now presented.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 8, strike out the words "by other estimates" and insert before the word "provided" the word "otherwise."

Mr. HULL. That will read "contingent expenses of the Army not otherwise provided for."

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is it.

Mr. HULL. I have no objection; it amounts to the same thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEMENWAY. In line 10 I offer the following amendment: Strike out the words "office of the Chief of Staff."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 10, strike out the words "office of the Chief of Staff."

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Indiana desires to make that motion to strike out the words "including the office of the Chief of Staff." in lines 9 and 10?

Mr. HEMENWAY. "Including the office of the Chief of Staff."

I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that in the legislative bill there is carried for the contingent expenses $50,000. The office of the Chief of Staff in the War Department shares in these contingent expenses, and I do not believe, and I am sure the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs does not believe, that an office ought to have more than one contingent account to take money from. If that practice grows up, of leaving offices to have three separate contingent funds from which to draw, we have no way of keeping tab on the expenditures of that particular office. They ought all to be confined to one contingent fund. In this particular office I understand that there is some military business, but it is nearly entirely an executive office of the War Department, and it ought to be confined in the conduct of the business of that office to the contingent expenses appropriated for the War Department.

Mr. HULL. Is the gentleman through?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana will not prevail. The Committee on Military Affairs for a great many years—ever since the Government had a Commanding General of the Army—appropriated a contingent fund for the General Commanding the Army. That office has been abolished. The Chief of Staff has taken the place of the General Commanding the Army. The committee in the consideration of this bill abolished the appropriation of $3,000 for contingent expenses for the General Commanding the Army, and consolidated that contingent expense with that of the Secretary of War. We were informed by the Department that unless we included the Chief of Staff in this appropriation, he would be excluded from whatever part of the contingencies under the direct control of the Secretary of War he might be entitled to otherwise.

I want to say to my friend from Indiana, further, that the Chief of Staff is more than an administrative officer. He is the commanding general of the Army, and when we deal with the appropriations they made an estimate, as was reported to us in the Book of Estimates, that they wanted us to report $3,000 for his contingencies. We believed that these contingent expenses should be put under one head, not going to the commanding general any longer, but making the Secretary of War directly responsible for its disbursement, and for that reason we gave them the $3,000 asked for out of the contingent expenses for Chief of Staff, under the disbursement by the Secretary of War, and allowed them, so as to cover the entire contingent expenses of that great Department, $20,000, where heretofore we had allowed in the bill $28,000. It seems to me that the gentleman from Indiana is mistaken when he wants to exclude this office from a proper share of this appropriation. For years the committee appropriated, as we were requested to do by the Department, giving to him a direct appropriation of $3,000 that he could expend under his own orders. In place of doing that, in the interest of what we considered good administration, we provided that he must go to the Secretary of War for whatever he needed out of this appropriation. I hope the amendment of the gentleman will be voted down.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I want to suggest this to the gentleman, and I desire to do it by the way of a question.

Let us understand each other. The appropriation for the General of the Army was contingent fund, not to be expended in the executive departments of the War Department. In other words, the contingent fund is to be expended for headquarters all over the United States. Now, then, I have no objection to this contingent fund being carried in this bill if the gentleman will ask, by way of amendment, that no portion of this fund shall be expended in the Department at Washington. In other words, the lines drawn between the army bill and the legislative, executive, and judicial bill is that the appropriation for the Army shall be confined to the Army, to the different headquarters of the Army over the United States, and that the legislative bill shall carry the appropriation for the Executive Departments.

Now, among other duties the office of the Chief of Staff performs is duty up here in the War Department, where he has a corps of clerks to perform substantially the same duties that are performed by all the other clerks of the War Department. Then, as far as that Department is concerned, the Chief of Staff ought to be confined to the contingent fund appropriated for the War Department, but of course if he needs a contingent fund away from Washington, why he ought to have that contingent fund, but I want to call the attention of the Members of this House to this fact, that if you allow an officer up here in an executive department to have two or three contingent funds to draw upon we can not keep track of the contingent expenses of that office, and I believe an amendment ought to go into this item saying that no portion of this fund appropriated in this army bill shall be used in the executive department—office of Chief of Staff—in Washington.

I think the chairman can see my point, and that it is well made, that he ought not to have the right to reach out and take from this army bill contingent fund to be used up here in the Executive Departments, but as far as the object of the office of the Chief of Staff is concerned, outside of the Executive Department, let him share in this contingent fund.

Mr. PALMER. May I ask a question?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will be glad to have you do so.

Mr. PALMER. What is this contingent fund, and what is it for? I notice on page 4 of the bill there is an item for contingent expenses at the headquarters of the several military divisions and departments, including the staff corps serving thereat, an item of $7,500, and on the same page, for contingent expenses of the military information division, an item of $10,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is it.

Mr. PALMER. And on page 22 there are incidental expenses covering specific expenses estimated for, an item amounting to $2,000,000. Now, will you please tell me what this $20,000 is for—what it is to be expended for?

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is what I shall ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to do. I am going through this bill. As we come to the different items I desire to call attention to them. This Chief of Staff can draw from at least four contingent funds. I do not believe this is good legislation. I believe that the Chief of Staff ought to be confined to one contingent fund. Why, we have had in the House in the last few days all of this talk about carriage hire, the very items we have been unable to reach at and point out the particular fund from which they pay those expenses. If you can confine each head of a Department to one contingent fund, there will be no trouble in locating what the expenses are and what the money is expended for. If they are scattered here and there through different appropriation bills, and they come before this House in different contingent funds from which they can draw, it keeps up that confusion. Now, in the Book of Estimates for 1905, under the head of "Office of Chief of Staff" we find this estimate, for the military information division, office Chief of Staff, a corps of clerks which are doing business up here in the Executive Department.

They are carried on the legislative appropriation bill, where they properly belong, and $50,000 is appropriated for the contingent fund of the War Department. Now, then, what I believe ought to be done, and I hope the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs will agree with me, is, as far as the duties of the War Department are concerned—the executive duties—the Chief of Staff be compelled to depend upon the contingent fund provided for that purpose. Now, as to his military duties, which extend beyond the executive duties of the War Department, appropriate for his contingent fund in one item, so that it can be located.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, one word further. I desire to call the committee's attention to the army appropriation bill of last year:

To defray the contingent expenses of the Commanding General's office or that of Chief of Staff, at his discretion, $3,000.

The words "for the Chief of Staff" were inserted in last year's bill because on the 10th of August the office of Commanding General of the Army ceased to exist and the office of Chief of Staff was created.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the construction placed on that item was always this: That that contingent fund went for army purposes; but no portion was used for any executive department. If this item goes on, as is now provided, the Chief of Staff and his clerks in the War Department may share in this contingent fund. It is wrong because it duplicates the items. We have appropriated $50,000 in the legislative bill for that purpose.

Mr. HULL. The amendment is to strike out "including the Chief of Staff."

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman thinks that will embarrass the office, he can put it in another form.

Mr. HULL. I want to quote one or two sentences from the hearing before the committee, what the Secretary of War said on this proposition:

Secretary ROOT. And last year it was put in the alternative, "the office of Commanding General or Chief of Staff." Now, I never knew of the necessity of having it for the office of Commanding General, and so I do not know any reason why the office of Chief of Staff should have it, provided it is made clear that the appropriation for contingencies of the Army will cover such incidental unforeseen expenses—proper expenses in the office of the Chief of Staff.

The CHAIRMAN. Would it not, if that is left out? If that is put in, of course, none of this can be used for the Chief of Staff.

Secretary ROOT. I should suppose that inasmuch as the appropriation for contingencies of the Army has run along for a great many years and has not been considered to include contingencies at Army Headquarters, there would be danger of the same construction being applied to the office of Chief of Staff now—that is to say, that contingencies there were excluded.

Then he states that by putting it in here it would cover all doubt as to its being properly used as a part of this contingent fund. It seems to me that you have got to trust the Secretary of War in these appropriations. The Comptroller has to pass on the vouchers, and if you can not trust the Secretary of War to disburse this largely reduced sum, it would be better to take it out.

Mr. PALMER. May I ask the gentleman from Iowa a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. I asked the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Indiana to tell me what this contingent fund is to be used for, but neither of them did it. The gentlemen seem to be discussing an item of $3,000 which has been heretofore appropriated to the use of the General of the Army. Now, then, what is this item of $20,000 for contingency of the Army?

Mr. HULL. It was $28,000 last year and $50,000 before that.

Mr. PALMER. I do not care what it was last year. What I am trying to find out is what this contingent fund is for this year. The bill provides for almost every contingency, it would seem, that can be imagined. In one place it appropriates $7,500, in another place $10,000, in another place $2,000,000 for contingencies.

Mr. HULL. This fund is to cover certain expenditures which the Secretary of War thinks ought to be in the interest of good administration, and which are not provided for in any specific appropriation in the army or in the legislative bill.

Mr. PALMER. That is all right; but what are they for?

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman wants a specific statement, I imagine he would have to go to the War Department. We asked the question, and they said it was to cover various small items, and that they did not expend nearly all that was appropriated. One item that was mentioned specifically was a thousand dollars allotted to the new school for artillery at Fortress Monroe. It is to cover things that come during the year that are not provided for, that in the interest of public service must be met. It is in the discretion of a Cabinet officer.

If the gentleman will introduce a resolution asking for a detailed statement and vouchers of last year, I have no doubt they will be sent to Congress. Personally I would not be willing to reflect on any Cabinet officer of any party to the extent of challenging the disbursement of ten thousand or fifteen thousand or twenty thousand dollars, as the case may be.

Mr. PALMER. Well, now, as to the item mentioned by the gentleman from Iowa. On page 3 of the bill, line 10, you make an appropriation for this very school which the gentleman mentions. For that and other schools is appropriated the sum of $25,000. Can the gentleman mention some other item?

Mr. HULL. That is the only item that the Secretary of War mentions. The gentleman is mistaken when he says that is one of the things appropriated for in the bill that the contingent fund is used for. When that was used for the school it was not provided for by specific appropriation.

So the gentleman is entirely mistaken in that contention.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

In line 11, after the word "dollars," insert "provided that no portion of this sum shall be used by the office of the Chief of Staff in the executive department of the War Department at Washington."

Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will accept that amendment, because that in no way reaches the expenditure of this contingent fund. In other words, it simply says that the appropriation for the contingent fund in this executive department shall not be duplicated here.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Does that change the usual practice?

Mr. HEMENWAY. No; it conforms to the usual practice. But if this item goes in this bill as it appears here now it allows the Chief of Staff, who is at the head of a corps of clerks up here at the War Department, to share in two contingent funds. We appropriated $50,000 for a contingent fund for the War Department, which is sufficient for that Department, including the office of the Chief of Staff in that Department.

If this item goes in here it allows one bureau in the War Department to share in two contingent funds, when every other bureau of the War Department would be confined to the contingent fund carried in the legislative bill, which is $50,000. It certainly is bad practice, and I hope the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment, because it simply says that in the office of the Chief of Staff, where he performs executive duties—not duties in connection with the Army—this fund shall not apply, and that he shall be confined, as he has heretofore been confined, to the appropriation made in the legislative bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I have any personal objection to the gentleman's amendment. It simply seems to me that he is arguing before the committee from a false basis. The Chief of Staff has no control over this contingent expense at all. It is under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I concede that, Mr. Chairman, but if you make this appropriation available for the office of the Chief of Staff in the executive department it permits him to share in two funds. I am not criticising the Secretary of War or any other Secretary, except I know that they take these contingent funds and expend them very often for what we deem to be unnecessary purposes. This very War College of which the gentleman speaks, down here at Fortress Monroe, was established without authority of law. It was established from a contingent fund. It is wrong; it ought not to be done, and I think the gentleman ought to concede that my amendment is proper, because we want to draw the line between the army bill and the Executive Departments, and all I seek to do by this amendment is to say that no sum herein appropriated shall be used in the executive department of the War Department.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, as I said, I have no personal objection to the amendment, but I have to the gentleman's argument. In the first place, the Chief of Staff does not control, as I stated, a dollar of this contingent fund. In the next place, he is not an executive officer under the terms that the gentleman refers to. He does not discharge or employ a clerk. He has nothing to do with the clerical work of the War Department.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Oh, yes, he has.

Mr. HULL. He is engaged in considering military problems, the discipline, management, and control of the Army as a whole.

Mr. HEMENWAY. He has charge of a force of clerks in the executive department, estimated for and appropriated for.

Mr. HULL. Of course, the Chief of Staff has clerks under him. So has the Quartermaster-General, and the heads of the other bureaus have clerks under them; but they can not appoint one of them. They can not remove one of them, except for cause. If they want to employ one they have to certify to the Civil Service Commission in order to get a clerk, and as a matter of fact the regulation of all the clerks is under the control of the Assistant Secretary of War and has been for the last four years.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. HAY. I suggest to the gentleman that if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] is agreed to, there is no use of this appropriation at all, because, as a matter of fact, a large portion of this contingent fund, if expended at all, is expended in the Department.

Mr. HULL. Not for the hire of clerks, however.

Mr. HAY. I call attention to page 21 of the hearings, where Secretary Root says:

> The question has arisen since August as to where payment was to come from for stationery and expenses of that kind in the office of Chief of Staff, whether that was to be supplied from the army appropriation——
> Mr. SCOFIELD. The War Department appropriation.
> Secretary ROOT. The War Department appropriation, or to come out of this contingent fund. I do not remember how that was settled.

Mr. Scofield, the chief clerk, said it was not settled at all. That would show that stationery and things of that sort which are needed in the office of the Chief of Staff and in the office of the Secretary of War come out of this contingent fund, and if it is not expended in the Department, then the appropriation ought to be stricken out.

Mr. HULL. In the hearings this question was brought to the attention of the Secretary of War quite fully, and he said that he did not remember how much of the $25,000 was expended, but not nearly all of it. In another place I asked the question whether he could give us some idea for what this contingent fund was used. I confess I did not know. He said:

> They are small things. As a rule, we are not permitted to use it for anything for which an appropriation is made specifically. They are very small items.

Now, it seems to me, especially after the gentleman from Virginia has said it would be a mistake to hamper the Secretary in a little appropriation like this, we should not adopt this amendment. I hope it will not be done.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] has brought out just what I tried to bring out. The army appropriation bill, it must be conceded, has nothing to do with the Executive Departments of the Government. If the statement by the gentleman from Virginia is true, then this item has no business on the army appropriation bill and is subject to a point of order. It is simply an effort on the part of the Secretary of War and the War Department to increase the item which is appropriated in the legislative appropriation bill and get an additional amount out of which they can take money for contingent purposes.

The object of Congress is to keep track of all these items; to appropriate for them in the proper place, the army bill taking care of the Army, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill taking care of the Executive Departments.

All I seek by this amendment is to provide that no portion of this sum shall be used for contingencies in the Executive Departments of the Government.

Mr. PARKER. Have you not already provided that that shall not be done by introducing the words "not otherwise provided?"

Mr. HEMENWAY. No. Under the language of this provision the $20,000 here provided for could be used, every cent of it, by the Secretary of War in the executive department of the Government—in the office of the Chief of Staff.

Mr. PARKER. Then, it is not otherwise provided for by the legislative appropriation bill?

Mr. HEMENWAY. In the legislative appropriation bill we provide $50,000 for this item. But if you provide here that the office of Chief of Staff may share in this $20,000, the Secretary of War may take every dollar of it and use it in the executive department.

It is my duty to call the attention of the House to a condition of things which we are trying to avoid; and I am sure the chairman of this committee, when he first admitted that he had no personal objection to this item going out, realized the fact I am stating. I hope the Committee of the Whole will adopt the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (having put the question on the amendment of Mr. HEMENWAY). The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. HULL. I call for a division.

The question was again taken; and there were—ayes 65, noes 33.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. I move to amend by striking out in line 11 the words "twenty thousand dollars," because after the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana there will be no use whatever, so far as I know or can ascertain, for this appropriation of $20,000.

Mr. HULL. I hope that amendment will not prevail.

Mr. HEMENWAY. This embraces all branches of the military service, including the headquarters at Chicago and the headquarters at St. Louis.

Mr. HAY. Not at all; they are provided for in other portions of the bill.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman thinks they are sufficiently provided for, then there is no reason why his amendment should not be adopted.

Mr. HAY. All the department headquarters are provided for in another part of the bill.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. HULL. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. There is need for some contingent fund. There has never been a bill of this kind, even when the Committee on Appropriations took charge of these bills, that did not provide a contingent fund at the disposition of the Secretary of War—in this bill as well as the legislative bill. That was when they had jurisdiction of both bills. They segregated the items and struck out the appropriations and left to the Secretary of War a small fund to protect the interests of the Government. My judgment is that it would be a great mistake to take this out.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. THAYER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. THAYER. Some of us over here would like to know what you are going to give this money for. If the gentleman from Virginia is right, there is no need of it, and it will have to be turned back into the Treasury. We would like to be informed as to what is to be appropriated for.

Mr. HULL. The Secretary of War so carefully administered this fund last year that half of it was turned back into the Treasury. It appears to be absolutely necessary, because there are places outside of the city of Washington where he has to have the use of the contingent fund or have the interest of the Government suffer. I certainly hope my friend from Virginia will withdraw his amendment. It is a mistake on the part of the House to put a limitation on the use of the fund and in my judgment is a reflection on the administration of the War Department to some extent. But to strike it out would simply make another error.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. HAY. Does not the amendment put upon it, just passed, do away with the necessity for it?

Mr. HULL. I think not.

Mr. HAY. How can it be used elsewhere?

Mr. HULL. It can be used in the Artillery School and the publication of the journal.

Mr. HAY. I know that practically this fund or some of it was used for acquiring information for which there was no other fund provided; and it ought to be on the bill without any limitation; and it ought to be intrusted to the Secretary of War; and that is the way it has been used heretofore. It is not being used in any improper way, and therefore, when you are going to put this limitation on it, you are going to eliminate the use of it, and therefore I offer the amendment to strike it out altogether.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent expenses at the headquarters of the several military divisions and departments, including the staff corps serving thereat, being for the purchase of the necessary articles of office, toilet, and desk furniture, binding, maps, books of reference, professional newspapers and periodicals, and police utensils, to be allotted by the Secretary of War, and to be expended in the discretion of the several military divisions and department commanders, $7,500.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I just ask for information of the gentleman in charge of this bill what is meant by this. I see the word "divisions" added.

Mr. HULL. That is on account of the general order of the War Department creating divisions. They were heretofore known as "departments" and now "divisions," one division including two or three departments. The departments come under the brigadier-generals and the divisions under the major-generals. The new departments were made on account of a recent order of the Department creating these new divi ons.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent expenses of the military information division, General Staff Corps, including the purchase of law books, books of reference, professional periodicals and newspapers, and of the military attachés at the United States embassies and legations abroad, and of the branch office of the Military Information Division at Manila, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $10,000: Provided, That hereafter section 3648, Revised Statutes, shall not apply to subscriptions for professional newspapers and periodicals to be paid for from this appropriation.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the chairman in charge of the bill to the fact that the provisions of this item, from line 7 to line 17, would be to repeal section 3648 of the Revised Statutes, so far as it applies to the purchase of these newspapers and periodicals is concerned. This appropriation for the purchase of newspapers and periodicals ought to be made.

Mr. HULL. It is the same that we had in the last year, and the hearings of last year give very full information.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I call his attention to "periodicals and newspapers." The gentleman remembers——

Mr. HULL. We put the word "professional" in this year, so as to make a limitation, so that they can not buy any ordinary magazine or newspaper or general news or ordinary publication. We intended to limit it to newspapers and periodicals containing military information, in the nature of giving them information, like text-books, or something of that kind.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman remembers that that was the language used many years ago, and under that language, "professional periodicals and newspapers," we found a library containing The Lady in White and all the other novels that were being printed in this country, trashy as well as good, and I suggest that you put a limitation on the amount to be expended for professional newspapers and periodicals, whatever the gentleman thinks is really enough.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that when we had the item under consideration in the committee room, apprehending exactly the difficulty which he has pointed out, I believed then it would be wise, and I believe now it would be wise, to make a clearer definition of the provision made for professional publications.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I just suggest a limit on the amount, say, of $100 or $150—whatever is necessary.

Mr. HAY. I would suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that the statutes require that they shall be paid for when they are bought.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes.

Mr. HAY. Now, the officers stationed at the different headquarters and legations abroad can not do that, because the appropriation is not then available for the purpose, and the purpose of this is to enable them to pay the subscriptions to these professional newspapers out of the funds or out of the appropriation—in other words, they have heretofore been obliged to pay for it out of their individual funds. That is the purpose of this.

Mr. HEMENWAY. But there should not be a rule for this Department that does not apply to the other Departments of the Government, and there is one fixed rule of the Government—that it never pays for anything until it is delivered, and it is a very good rule. Now, as to the last provision, I shall make the point of order when we reach it; but as to the first provision, in regard to professional periodicals, there ought to be a limit in this bill in the amount to be expended for that purpose, because under this exact language grew up the practice of the Departments of buying all kinds of novels and building up libraries.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Do you not believe if you put the word "purely" in front of "professional" it will cut off your French novels?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I think we ought to limit the amount expended for this purpose.

Mr. HULL. I do not think this whole question is worth ten minutes' time. The only reason for putting in this proviso was to enable officers at Manila and distant points to obtain these professional publications. If the gentleman can show that under this language where the word "professional" is put in that any Department could purchase novels, the Lady in White mentioned especially, and other novels, I should be in favor of not giving them any discretion whatever.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I want to insist right now that we have not reached the proviso and that we are discussing this item for professional periodicals. When we reach the proviso I intend to make the point of order.

Mr. HULL. Oh, it is subject to it. I will not discuss it a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. One moment. The Chair would suggest that there is nothing before the committee, no motion having been made, no amendment offered, or point of order raised.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I suggest to the gentleman that he offer his own amendment, or I will offer it if he does not desire to do so. The amendment I would suggest would be that for the purchase of professional books a sum not to exceed $200 shall be available.

Mr. DENNY. Strike out "books."

Mr. SLAYDEN. Professional periodicals.

Mr. HEMENWAY. In line 14, "Provided, That a sum not to exceed $200 of the amount herein appropriated shall be available for the purchase of professional periodicals and newspapers."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars" in line 14, page 4, insert: "And not to exceed $200 of the sum herein appropriated"——

Mr. HULL. Provided not to exceed $200——

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes.

The Clerk continued to read, as follows:

Provided, Not to exceed $200 of the amount herein appropriated shall be available for the purchase of professional books and periodicals.

Mr. HULL. No, no; he said he did not intend to include books.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Professional newspapers. I would follow the language of your bill and make the limit $200.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. This is a new provision.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Not that part of it.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Is there any evidence that the privilege given to the Secretary of War or the proper officer was violated last year in the purchase of books and professional newspapers?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment——

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Let us have it reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the amendment be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 14, insert: "Provided, That not exceeding $200 of the amount herein appropriated shall be available for the purchase of professional newspapers and periodicals."

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that this amendment would be certainly one of the very worst that could be adopted. If there is any part of the whole War Department that should be given a very free hand, it should be this very information bureau.

It is well known that the professional periodicals abroad in a foreign army are published secretly for the use of the officers of that army. The sale of the books with reference to the guns and artillery in France was one of the matters of which Dreyfus was accused. These books are distributed secretly over the particular country. Their acquisition may need large sums of money and at particular times would be of the greatest advantage to our Army, and any limitation placed on this particular section that takes away from our officers abroad the right to get such information as we may need at home is, in my judgment, a great mistake, and I can not understand any such penny-wise and pound-foolish policy.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I trust the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana will not be agreed to. We have a great many embassies abroad. I do not know how many, but we have to provide for those professional periodicals for the military information bureau of the General Staff every year. They have to be provided for in each of the embassies abroad. They have to be provided for at the military information division in the Philippine Islands. Two hundred dollars will not begin to provide for the professional periodicals and newspapers at all the different places.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. HEMENWAY. How much will it take to provide for professional periodicals and newspapers?

Mr. HAY. I do not know; I never saw an estimate of it. I know the professional periodicals are much more expensive than other periodicals, because their circulation is limited to professional men.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It would not cost the whole $10,000?

Mr. HAY. No; that includes books of reference.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Certainly. All I want to do is to limit the periodical item so as to prevent the purchase of anything that is not for professional use of the Army. We know, as a matter of experience, where that item goes. When they have the benefit of the full $10,000 they go clear beyond reason. It has been demonstrated in every Department of the Government.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman point out any instance where the War Department has spent any part of this appropriation for the purpose of buying novels or any book which was not necessary for use and information of the military department?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes; I will point it out.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a question?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman from Virginia is asking me a question.

Mr. HAY. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Doesn't the gentleman from Virginia want me to answer his question?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania addressed the Chair, and the Chair asked the gentleman from Virginia if he would yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, as soon as I get through with the gentleman from Indiana I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a question.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. All right; there is some hope. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman from Virginia has asked me to point out where the War Department has ever purchased any books that were not necessary. I point to the library up in the War Department.

Mr. HAY. Not out of this appropriation.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The War Department has a library that contains novel after novel that has been purchased out of just such appropriations as this.

Mr. HAY. Have they been purchased out of this appropriation?

Mr. HEMENWAY. No; because this appropriation has not passed the House.

Mr. HAY. Oh, well, the gentleman knows that I mean appropriations that have passed the House in this bill.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Certainly. Where else could they get them?

Mr. HULL. Out of the appropriation in the legislative bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEMENWAY. They have got it out of all these items, and that is the reason I am trying, in my feeble way, to prevent their doing it again. If the gentleman will state how much it will take to buy these professional newspapers and periodicals, I will suggest that limit. If it is a thousand dollars, make it a thousand dollars.

Mr. HAY. Can the gentleman tell me who it was that bought these novels?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The heads of the different departments.

Mr. HAY. The heads of the departments?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I can not go into details; the books are there in the library.

Mr. HAY. Somebody must be charged with the purchase of these books. Who violated the law?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The heads of the departments, with the approval of the Secretary of War, or else the books could not be there.

Mr. HAY. Then the gentleman says that these novels have been purchased by the heads of the divisions, with the approval of the Secretary of War?

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is the only way they could be purchased, and there is a library full of them that anyone can see who will go and look.

Mr. HAY. What Secretary of War?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I don't know. It runs back very many years.

Mr. HAY. The present Secretary of War?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I don't know whether it has been done recently or not.

Mr. HAY. His predecessor?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Why, the gentleman's predecessor, evidently, because it is during my term in Congress that we have tried to suppress this evil and that we have tried very often to transfer these great libraries to the Library of Congress, or to some central library in the District of Columbia, but every Department of the Government has built up a library.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I will ask that the gentleman from Virginia have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to vote for this appropriation if what the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] says is true, but there is no doubt about the fact that the Army and the officers of the Army ought to be equipped with proper information.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Why, certainly.

Mr. HAY. And that they ought not to be obliged to buy these periodicals and newspapers themselves.

Mr. HEMENWAY. But let me say right there——

Mr. HAY. I will yield in a moment. I was going to say that if this abuse has arisen it ought to be put down. If these novels that the gentleman speaks of have been bought, the practice of buying them ought to be stopped; but I have been in the library at the War Department and I confess that I did not see the books to which the gentleman refers. However, as I say, if that is true, that this abuse exists, the gentleman ought to be able here to produce some specific information and not to make a general charge that all the heads of the different bureaus and the Cabinet officers have violated the law and have perpetrated an outrage upon the country by expending a fund intended for one purpose in buying French novels and things of that sort. Now I will answer the gentleman's question, if he desires to ask one.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The only thing I desire to say is, that if the gentleman knows the amount of money necessary to buy these periodicals and newspapers and knows that $200 is not enough, why, let us make it enough, but limit the amount that can be expended for that purpose on this bill to a reasonable sum.

Mr. HAY. I am perfectly willing to meet the gentleman on that; but the complaint of the gentleman is not that too much money has been expended for professional periodicals and newspapers, but that it has been expended for novels.

Mr. HEMENWAY. And I refer the gentleman to the libraries of the different Departments of this Government for evidence of that fact.

Mr. HAY. Therefore the gentleman's amendment, which would limit the purchase of periodicals and newspapers, would not apply to the abuse of which he complains; and it is impossible for me to say how much money it will take to annually subscribe for the different professional periodicals and newspapers which may be necessary here or at the different embassies abroad or in the Philippine Islands. Therefore I do not know how to meet the gentleman on that particular ground.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to say that here is something else upon which we do not propose to stand altogether pat.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the position of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] is partially well taken. I do not believe that the proper way to meet it is to strike out the appropriation, however. I remember that several years ago when we looked into the library which had accumulated at the Department of Agriculture we found all sorts of books there, and we found in addition to that all sorts of newspapers and periodicals being taken at public expense. We cured that evil by introducing a limitation upon the appropriation.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Just what I seek to do here.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That no book should be bought except of a strictly technical character, pertaining to the work of the Department of Agriculture, and I think that sort of an amendment ought to be entered into the provisions upon each bill that comes in here making appropriations for these several Departments. Each Department has its library, and each Department ought to have its library of technical works, pertaining to the duties of the Department, because it is almost impossible to carry on the work, let us say, of the Agricultural Department, without a library of chemical works and biological works, etc.; and it is almost impossible to carry on the work of the War Department without works on fortifications and perhaps some works on military histories, even going that far; but these provisions on all these bills ought to be carefully and strictly carried out. The language ought to be such as to admit of nothing except technical books and periodicals pertaining to and necessary for the operation of the work of the Department itself.

Mr. HAY. Has the gentleman read the language of the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes, sir; I am just reading it.

Mr. HAY. It provides for "the purchase of law books, books of reference, professional periodicals, and newspapers."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I beg the gentleman's pardon. As I read the clause it provides "for the purchase of necessary articles of office, toilet, and desk furniture, binding, maps"——

Mr. HAY. Oh, no.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then come "books of reference."

Mr. HAY. It is the paragraph on page 4, line 7, that we are talking about.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The particular matter in the bill which pertains to books is the clause beginning line 23, page 3, and that is where this item ought to come in.

Mr. HAY. That is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. This is a specific item which covers the matter in another place. It says "books of reference," but it does not say "technical books of reference." Then the language continues: "professional newspapers and periodicals." But the language is not sufficiently guarded. I think the word "technical" ought to be used.

On page 4, in line 7, to which the gentleman from Virginia refers, we have similar language:

> Including the purchase of law books, books of references, professional periodicals, and newspapers.

But it does not say "technical books of reference." The language used would cover encyclopedias, dictionaries——

Mr. HAY. Ought they not to have a dictionary?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Well, I have my doubts whether this Government ought to furnish anybody with a dictionary.

Mr. HAY. These are not to be furnished to everybody, but are for the use of the Department as a whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Well, I have my doubts whether each of these Departments ought to be furnished with a set of encyclopedias. Under the language "books of reference" meteorological books might be furnished to the War Department and works on fortifications to the Agricultural Department.

I do not know how far this abuse has gone in the War Department. We have corrected it in the Department of Agriculture, or we had it corrected for a while. I know that for a while the purchases in this line were confined to such books, periodicals, etc., as treated technically of those subjects with which the Agricultural Department had to do.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I think generally the matter has been corrected now in the different Departments. All I am seeking to do now is to continue such legislation as will keep it corrected.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. This is not at all a party question; but I think the gentleman has made a mistake in moving to strike out the appropriation.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have not moved to strike it out, but simply to limit the amount that may be used for the purchase of newspapers and periodicals to $200. If that sum is not enough, make it more.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would not limit the amount of money, but would define the purpose or character of the books, etc.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then let the gentleman suggest an amendment of that kind. All I want is a proper limitation.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, if the libraries in the War Department contain the class of books that the gentleman from Indiana says they do——

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not specify any particular Department. I think the evil runs through different Departments.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then I will amend my language by saying that if any Department contains the class of books that the gentleman from Indiana has indicated that they do it is clear that the law has been violated, and I quite agree with him that the language of this bill ought to be such that it will be impossible for any executive officer to justify the purchase of any such books as he has mentioned.

From the time we began the consideration of this bill I have favored the insertion of such words as would limit these purchases to books and periodicals of a purely professional class. I believe that such language ought to be inserted here, and, if we may be permitted by the committee to return to the preceding paragraph of the bill, it should be inserted at the end of line 2, thus correcting this particular evil, while not interfering at all with the amount of money appropriated.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is all right.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to line 2, page 4, and insert after the word "maps"——

Mr. HULL. That certainly is not in order now when we are considering another amendment.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then I move to amend by inserting before the word "professional," in line 9, page 4, the word "technical."

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending, offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I only seek to remedy this evil, and I withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana withdraws his amendment, and the gentleman from Texas offers an amendment.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Line 9, on page 4, before the word "professional," which occurs near the middle of the line, insert the word "technical."

The Clerk read as follows:

> So as to read: "Books of reference, technical professional periodicals, and newspapers."

Mr. HULL. Do you want that? Why not put in the word "and?"

Mr. SLAYDEN. Professional and technical.

Mr. HULL. Make it professional and technical, so that it will apply to technical books of reference.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to amend it by inserting the words "professional and technical" between the words "professional" and "periodicals."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana has stated that abuses have grown up in the War Department, especially mentioning that Department in so far as its library is concerned. He has specifically charged that under the direction of the heads of the Departments, with the approval of the Secretary of War, a lot of trashy literature has been added to that library. He said it was "the Secretary of War;" he did not proceed to say whether it was the present Secretary or his predecessor. He said that such had occurred during his term of service in Congress, but he would not state that it had grown up and was being practiced under the present Secretary of War. As I recollect, he distinctly stated there was no abuse now, in so far as this appropriation is concerned.

It seems to me a little strange, after eight years of service in the House, connected largely during a part and perhaps all the time with the committee of which he is now the honored chairman, that he had not called the attention of this House earlier to this supposed abuse.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. PRINCE. I gladly yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman had kept in touch with the performance of the "gentleman from Indiana" on this floor, he would have known that the attention of this House has been called to it quite a while ago, and that upon bills that come from the Committee on Appropriations the item is now carried and has been for a few years last past.

Mr. PRINCE. I am very glad to know that it has been carried, so far as that bill is concerned. But let me say to the House that the bill that passed the last Congress making the appropriation for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1904, had in it the same provision that it has now. We have sought in this bill that we now present to the House at this session of Congress to limit it by inserting the word "professional." The gentleman from Pennsylvania, who sought the floor, sotto voce said that he would like to know if this provision had been abused during the past year. He never had an opportunity to present that question, but the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has answered it to the House, stating that at present there is no violation of this law.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Oh, if the Chair please, the "gentleman from Indiana" has made no such statement. What he said was that so far as he knew in the last few years there had been no violation of any of these appropriations by buying unprofessional books, and he was emphasizing what was in the bill in trying to prevent the abuse. I am not criticising the Committee on Military Affairs. They put in this word "professional," seeking to do what I seek to do, and I only suggest that they go a little further. I am not here trying to criticise this committee, but I am here trying to help them perfect this provision.

Mr. PRINCE. I did not understand that the gentleman was trying to criticise the committee. So far as I understand his first statement I exonerate him, and do not in the slightest degree make any charge against him in that way. It seems to me strange, however, that an executive officer of this Government, who, like ourselves, has taken an oath to carry out the provisions of the law, has engaged in or should be seduously anxious to evade the law. For myself, I am loath to think that there is an executive officer that is seeking to evade the law rather than to carry out the provisions of the law, and until some specific and direct charges are made upon that question I shall refuse to entertain any such belief on my part as a Member of this House. Therefore I can see no reason why such an amendment should prevail to-day. As there has been no abuse of the law in the past, and this provision was in the law of the prior enactment, I hope and trust that this amendment will not obtain.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I agree with the spirit that seeks to limit appropriations, as suggested by my colleague from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], and desire to suggest to the House that, without innuendo, I will speak directly. I charge that officers of the Government, its bureaus, and Departments, by a system of construction of our general language in appropriation bills, by a system of enlargement and a running wild in construing, have exhausted our patience and have taken subjects from the control of Congress.

While what I cite may only be an analogy in the matter under discussion, it is sufficient here to put us upon inquiry and to urge us to insist that general appropriations shall not be made unless we know to what they are to be applied. There are reasons for this course stronger than have heretofore existed, because evils in construction have grown up. The War Department—the Board of Ordnance and Fortification in that Department—has permitted an expenditure for scientific purposes of thousands in a vain attempt to breathe life into an air-ship project which never had a substantial basis, and which collapsed, thus showing the correctness of what I say. This was wasteful expense and should have been, it seems, so regarded by everyone. It had no utility about it. This the officers did without the express sanction of Congress by a misconstruction of an appropriation bill in its terms general, but clearly never intended for adventure. We should have had last year in that bill, as we should in this, a limit by express legislation and restriction.

In 1888 Congress established a board of officers known as the Board of Ordnance and Fortification, and it was stated that "the board shall be under the direction of the Secretary of War and subject to his supervision and control, and that it shall be composed of army officers," and it provided that a large appropriation should be available for "experiments and tests" for "implements and engines of war," for "devices," etc., and "before any of the money shall be expended it shall be made clear to the board that after due inquiry the Government of the United States has lawful right to use the invention." Did Congress thereby or by the last fortification bill authorize feats that clearly meant the sinking of air ships in the Potomac? The salary account for years has gone on to the extent of many thousand dollars a year in a futile invention of an air ship, and not with our sanction.

Air-ship vagaries prevail, the result of inattention of our officers, a misconception of our purposes, the result of a wide interpretation of Congressional action in general terms, and it has cost the Government many thousands, when the scheme never had a grain of promise of utility about it. This board is under the direction of the Secretary of War, and is composed of war officers, a board sanctioned by this Congress, which gave them in 1888 an appropriation of millions with which to operate. By the fortification bill of last year we gave them $100,000 of money to be wasted on this scientific aerial navigation experiment. No; that never was our purpose. But it was wasted because, perchance, a professor, wandering in his dreams of flight in the air, sought to impress, and did impress, upon the officers who were charged with the expenditure of public money the solidity of the foundation on which he built his air castles.

I commend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] for standing by Government officers in proper expenditures, and I am sure he will join in correcting errors. We can all join in placing curbs and checks in our bills, so that violent interpretation shall not obtain and extravagance ensue. Let us close the gaps. Let us not give the invitation. We can then fix the responsibility.

If we allow our appropriation bills to be general in language and do not curb them, and do not specifically limit them in character, in kind of literature, as in this case, and in the amount to be expended specifically, they will be subject to every flight of fancy, and the money of the people will be dissipated. I take it that nobody on that side of the House or this, had he been charged with the execution of the law, would have expended this money under the language of that act. This money is gone, lost—sunk forever in the bottom of the Potomac River by this aerial phantasm, without our approval. I call this to the attention of the House as an analogy to guide us to the way we ought to guard the appropriations and limit them more closely and make them specific.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, in the matter of contingent expenses the Committee on Appropriations have at all times encountered difficulty. Every deficiency bill that comes into this House carries in some page or some part the claim from a Department for a deficiency greater than the appropriation ran. This House but a few days ago qualified the contingent account of every Department of this Government in these words:

Contingent expenses, War Department, for the following sums, which are so apportioned as to prevent deficiencies therein, namely:

To the War Department we gave $50,000, together with $25,000 additional for stationery. That ran to the Interior Department, "For professional and scientific books, etc., $1,000, of which sum $250 may be used for the Civil Service Commission." In the Navy Department we make the same qualification.

In fact, in every Department we qualified distinctly an apportionment of the contingent fund. Why? Simply because your Committee on Appropriations is met every year with the claim from the Departments for greater sums than the contingent sum appropriated. Five years ago the Navy Department, of its own volition, came to the Committee on Appropriations and submitted that there should be one fund for the Department with regard to books of reference and technical and professional books, for the reason that the heads of bureaus were taking from the increase of the Navy fund thousands of dollars annually for professional and scientific books.

Your committee have endeavored to correct that, and believe in the several Department bills that will come from the Committee on Appropriations there will be the same limitations that were put in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, recently passed this House. There should be a limitation on this fund wherever there is a contingent expense account, and it is simply a question of being consistent with the action of the House a week ago that there should be a limitation upon professional books, law books, periodicals, and newspapers in this contingent fund.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana has modified his original charge against the Department since he began this discussion.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman from Kansas permit a question?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Yes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will ask the gentleman if there is not in the War Department a circulating library of fiction?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. If the gentleman will not interrupt me until I have made a statement that would justify such a question as that——

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman said that the gentleman from Indiana made a charge. I ask him if there is not in the War Department a circulating library?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I will answer the gentleman in my own way. I will state, for my information is direct from the chief in charge of the Bureau that he accuses, that there has not been a novel or a book of light literature purchased for that library out of any funds provided by this Congress in the last ten years. There is a library of novels and light literature there, bought by the money of the officers themselves out of their own pockets, and last year a large donation was made by the librarian in Philadelphia. These books are probably in use, probably in some bookcase over there, and in some moment of economy the gentleman from Indiana may either require rent from the officers for the space occupied by the bookcase there, or require that they shall be kept in some other place. [Laughter.]

The expense of this discussion for the last forty minutes has probably cost the country more than would have been used by the Department for the purchase of the papers that he objects to if it had been used that way. I repeat again the statement that my information is direct from General Greely, whose honor and integrity I know the gentleman from Indiana does not intend to impeach before this country, that no purchase of light literature, or of any novel, or of any general literature of that kind has been made out of any fund provided by Congress in the last ten years. It is unfair to the officers for the gentleman to stand here in his place and say that a short time ago he found a novel called "White Wings" there, and make that a ground for objection to this bill.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman said he would yield, and now I desire to ask him a question.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Very well.

Mr. HEMENWAY. What proportion of the library in the War Department was purchased from appropriations in different bills and what proportion by subscription of the clerks?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. None of the books which are not professional, not technical, not law literature were purchased by the Department out of appropriations. No novel, no volume of general literature has been bought out of any fund appropriated by this Congress within the last ten years.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I put the question again about the library there. What proportion was purchased by Government funds and what portion by private subscription?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I do not know; I have not sufficient knowledge to answer the gentleman. The library was built up by efforts of the Secretary.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman has not sufficiently answered my question.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I say, upon the authority of General Greely, that no such purchase has been made within the last ten years.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, it is very difficult for me to know just what proposition is before the committee at this time, but I want, before I call for the amendment, to address myself for a few moments to the question of this appropriation and to quote from the RECORD as to what is done with it. I want to say to this committee that I would not be afraid to stake my reputation on a proposition that under the contingent expense of the military information division of the General Staff Corps, including the purchase of law books and books of reference, no single book has ever been bought that was not contemplated by the action of Congress.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman from Iowa permit an interruption?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I suppose that historical books relating to the war would properly come under the purchase authorized by Congress?

Mr. HULL. I doubt if simple histories of the war would come under this appropriation.

Mr. BINGHAM. It would be a book of reference.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have been wondering whether the purchase of these novels, after all, could not be justified if we could only get the names of them from somebody. What I wanted to know was whether Gen. Charles King's novels have been purchased by the War Department as a part of the military history of the Army? [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I did not yield to the gentleman for that question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not think that they would stand well on a par with some of the unofficial reports that we have had printed about the Army by the War Department? [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to institute a comparison between Charles King's novels and the official reports. The greater erudition and larger industry of my friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] would make him a competent judge on that. I have not been industrious enough in that line of reading to be competent to pass upon it.

But, Mr. Chairman, to return to this question, I think the Military Committee and all the members of it, as well as the Members of the House, are anxious to limit this so that no abuse can come from it. I regard this appropriation as one of the most valuable appropriations in the bill, and if the gentlemen will take the report of the Adjutant-General made this year, I think they will get some idea as to what is done under it that will be of benefit to us all. On page 12 of the report is found the statement:

> The reports received from the military information division at Manila indicate a large amount of valuable work on the part of that branch office in the collection of information respecting the Philippines and neighboring countries and its distribution to the troops serving throughout the archipelago.

That is one part of it. Three thousand dollars was allotted out of this $10,000 for this line of information. Then you will find that they have made improvements in the collection and the classifying of the professional data, and then, in addition to that, they have the reports of the military attachés, and of this it is said:

> In addition to the regular work of the division, communications written in foreign languages and addressed to the War Department or its several bureaus have been translated for the respective offices, as well as many documents, reports, etc., desired for official use.

During the year the division has prepared an index of special military subjects contained in books, pamphlets, and periodicals received in the Military Information Division or the Adjutant-General's Office, War Department, during the quarter ending December 31, 1901, as follows, etc.:

It goes on then in detail collecting a vast amount of most useful and valuable information which if we do not secure we will be behind every other civilized nation on earth. It is not an abuse; it is not building up a library; it is accumulating information, and will enable our officers and our soldiers to perform their duties in the light of the civilization of this century.

Now, I understand that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] proposes to put upon this the limitation of "technical." I think if the word "technical" is applied to books of reference it would be a valuable limitation. I think if you apply it to periodicals and newspapers you practically destroy all the information that can be had from professional periodicals and newspapers, because the word "technical" might limit it to such an extremely fine point that it would be difficult for the Department under that law to administer the office without crippling the sources of information.

I understand that that is what is before the committee, and I hope that my friend from Texas will modify it and make it apply to books and not to periodicals. The committee, as he will remember, and with his entire assent, did undertake to limit it so that there could be no abuse in the periodicals and newspapers by inserting the word "professional."

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think that the chairman of the committee will quite agree with me that an effort to so frame the law that there can not be improper expenditures in the future is not necessarily a charge that there have been improper expenditures in the past. I don't know whether there has ever been a single book purchased by any bureau chief or executive officer of this Government which should not have been purchased, but I do believe that language which limits the purchases to purely professional works and books in these instances is wise to insert.

I don't know whether any executive or bureau chief in the future may be inclined to violate the law, but I am convinced that if this language is inserted he will not be able to do so, and my amendment has not been offered in any spirit of criticism of the acts of such officers in Departments, because I am not advised that there has been any abuse of it. The chairman has mentioned the fact that in the committee there was an effort made to shape that legislation, so that these abuses could not be practiced. He evidently does not remember that I was not satisfied with the language in that paragraph and endeavored to insert practically the same thing that I am now offering as an amendment here on the floor of the House. I hope that the amendment will be sustained.

Mr. HAY. Let us have the amendment reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that at all, the way it is worded now.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, substantially the part of the bill beginning on line 23, page 3, and ending on line 17, page 4, is the same section, if the bill had been divided by sections. Both of those paragraphs relate to books, newspapers, and periodicals, except that the first one relates to them at the headquarters of the several military divisions and departments, and the second is for the information of the General Staff office and relates to military attachés. Now, I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] a moment. I think that same language, in order to perfect the bill, ought to be put in front of the word "books" in line 2, page 4, and also in front of the word "newspapers," after the word "professional," in that same line on that same page.

Now, one other suggestion. If you do not insert the word "technical" before the word "newspapers" you are going to have trouble, because they are going to say at the Department that there are no technical daily newspapers, and that when Congress allowed them to purchase newspapers it meant newspapers other than technical. I believe the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] has an amendment drawn up covering this matter.

Mr. HULL. I must object to going back until we finish what we are now engaged on.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SLAYDEN, it was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. I offer the amendment which I sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2, on page 4, before the word "books," insert the word "technical," so as to read "technical books of reference."

Mr. HULL. Of course that is subject to a point of order, because we have passed that paragraph; but if the amendment can be acted on without debate, I have no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] asks unanimous consent to recur to a previous part of the bill for the purpose of considering the amendment which has been read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HAY, it was adopted.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I move to insert in line 2, page 4, after the word "professional," the words "and technical," so as to harmonize with the language just now adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to considering the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN]? The Chair hears none.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. SLAYDEN was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I believe the proviso of the paragraph has not been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That hereafter section 3648, Revised Statutes, shall not apply to subscriptions for professional newspapers and periodicals to be paid for from this appropriation.

Mr. HULL. It seems to me that this is an important provision; but if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] proposes to make a point of order upon it, I will at once admit that it is subject to such a point and after the ruling of the Chair I want to offer the provision in a form which I think will obviate the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] make a point of order upon this proviso?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do; and I will say that my only reason is in the interest of sound policy on the part of the Government. The general rule is that the Government pays for nothing until it gets it. I regard this provision as objectionable on the ground that it may be adopted as a precedent and extended to other matters.

Mr. HULL. It applies only to these professional newspapers and periodicals.

Mr. HEMENWAY. But if we allow it to go through in this case it may lead to dangerous practices in other directions.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] state his point of order?

Mr. HEMENWAY. This proviso proposes to repeal a section of the Revised Statutes relating to this subject. It is therefore a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HULL. Then I offer the proviso in the form in which it appears in the last army appropriation bill:

Provided, That section 192, Revised Statutes, shall not apply to subscriptions to newspapers by the military information division for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. HULL. This simply suspends the operation of this provision so far as it may affect this appropriation. It is practically the same provision that has been in previous army appropriation bills.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Well, it will permit payment by the Government for something before the Government has received it.

Mr. HULL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then I make a point of order against the provision, because it is the fixed rule of the Government not to do that. My point of order is that the amendment proposes to change existing law.

Mr. HULL. It is the provision of the last appropriation bill.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota rose.

Mr. HULL. Before the Chair decides the point of order, I ask that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] may be heard, to state the reasons for the amendment.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, perhaps the gentleman from Indiana may not quite realize the importance of this provision to the officers of the Army in distant stations. Most of the foreign periodicals—in fact, all of them—are required to be paid for in advance. When the law does not allow such payments from Government funds, the officers have to pay out of their own pockets and then wait for a year before being reimbursed, or else they must go without the periodicals. Now, many of the officers abroad are not so situated that they can pay or do pay for these publications in advance.

I think that if this provision could be limited to such cases as that it would be a wise thing. I believe that without some such provision as the chairman of the committee now offers there would be cases where the proper military information could not be obtained. I believe that if a limitation could be agreed to, confining the provision to foreign technical newspapers and periodicals, it would accomplish the purpose of the amendment of the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to call attention to the fact that I submitted the old proviso in the old bill without looking at it. I will ask the Clerk to report the one I now submit.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 14, after the word "Provided," insert: "That section 3648 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to subscriptions for foreign and professional newspapers and periodicals to be paid for from this appropriation, ending June 30, 1905."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Indiana to make a point of order against this amendment?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have no objection to putting in the word "foreign." I do not want to embarrass the committee. After the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota, if you add the word "foreign" I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. You make it "foreign and professional."

Mr. HEMENWAY. You have stricken "hereafter" out.

Mr. HULL. Only limiting this law to this appropriation.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Submarine cable, Sitka to Fort Liscum, Alaska: For the purchase, installation, operation, and maintenance of a submarine military cable for connecting the headquarters Department of the Columbia with military garrisons in Alaska, said cable to extend from Sitka, Alaska, to Fort Liscum, Alaska, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, $321,580.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman of the committee. Is this cable authorized by any existing law?

Mr. HULL. The cable is authorized in the sense that we have been appropriating for cables from year to year.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to make the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. HAY. I make the point of order, if they are to reserve the point of order, the gentleman will have to ask unanimous consent for debate.

Mr. PALMER. I make the point of order in order to get information.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the point of order has not been made, I desire to make the point of order against the paragraph; and if the gentleman will allow me, as I believe the point of order has precedence——

Mr. PALMER. I would rather go on with my inquiry.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask if I waive the point by allowing the debate to continue? If not, I will make the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama will not waive his right so far as an opportunity to make the point of order is concerned.

Mr. HAY. I make the point of order that debate can not go on except by unanimous consent without the point of order is made.

The CHAIRMAN. That point of order is well taken.

Mr. HAY. I object.

Mr. PALMER. I make the point of order against this section that it is not authorized by any existing law, and on that question I suppose there will be debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that this paragraph is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. PALMER. This submarine cable, provided in lines 8 to 15.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That was not the point I desired to make. Further, I desire to state that point, so that it will not be lost. I desire to make the point of order against that portion of the section that reads: "To be immediately available and remain available until expended." These words go beyond the power of the Committee on Military Affairs; and I ask that that point of order be pending until the other point of order is disposed of.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman, there is another point of order against this. I desire to raise it so that we may take them altogether.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that at present the point of order stated by the gentleman from Alabama is broader than that made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and therefore that is the point first to be considered.

Mr. BURKETT. The other point can be raised against it after that is considered if it is not valid.

The CHAIRMAN. They had better be stated now.

Mr. BURKETT. The point of order I make against this is that it is a permanent appropriation, contrary to the statute, continuing over two years.

Mr. PALMER. My point of order is not technical. The point is this: Has this submarine cable been authorized by any existing law?

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman will look back over the appropriations, he will find that these appropriations for the Army——

Mr. HAY. My point of order is that the gentleman can not discuss the point of order unless it is made.

The CHAIRMAN. That point of order is well taken.

Mr. PALMER. I would like to know what the point of order is, and I would like to be heard on it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to be heard on the point of order I have made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania upon the point of order which he raised.

Mr. PALMER. My point of order is that so much of the bill as is contained in line 8 to line 15, which provides:

Submarine cable, Sitka to Fort Liscum, Alaska: For the purchase, installation, operation, and maintenance of a submarine military cable for connecting the headquarters Department of the Columbia with military garrisons in Alaska, said cable to extend from Sitka, Alaska, to Fort Liscum, Alaska, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, $321,580—is subject to the point of order that that cable has not been authorized by any existing law and that you can not legislate upon a general appropriation bill. That is the point of order.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Chairman, will the Chair kindly state what the point of order of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as the Chair understands it, is that the appropriation covered by the paragraph beginning in line 8 and ending in line 15, page 5, is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, this is part of the administration of the Army. We have troops scattered all over Alaska; it is a military division, and there is no connection with them for eight months in the year except by cable; probably nine months in the year it will be impossible to reach them except by this. For some years back the army appropriation bill has carried an appropriation for continuing this work of cables to connect the military posts in Alaska with this country. This is to finish up that work and make the last connecting link between the United States and the different posts and stations in Alaska. It is to finish work commenced and carried on by appropriations from year to year. We are now dependent upon a foreign line to reach Alaska by running through Canada out there until they strike our outside posts and then connect with our cables, and our dispatches are returned the same way.

I do not believe it is subject to the point of order because it is a continuing work for the use of the Army and is as much in order as building a new battle ship for the Navy or the construction of new posts for the Army. It is absolutely, in my judgment, in order, and if it were even subject to the point of order, I regret to see that any man in the American Congress should evoke a technical rule for compelling us to be dependent upon a foreign government to communicate with our own people. [Applause.]

Mr. PALMER. Now will you answer a question?

Mr. HULL. Will you not let the point of order be decided now?

Mr. PALMER. I would like to have the gentleman state to the House how many military posts there are between Sitka and Fort Liskum, Alaska, that will be reached by this proposed cable.

Mr. HAY. I make the point of order that it is not germane.

Mr. HULL. That does not hit the question at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the points of order. Rule 21, second paragraph, provides that—

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

Now, the Chair has not been pointed to any law authorizing the laying of any submarine cable of which this cable is to be a continuation, nor to any appropriation of which this proposed appropriation will be in continuation. Upon its face this appears to be an entirely new appropriation for an entirely new cable, and the situation is much the same as if it appropriated for the construction of a transcontinental railroad for the transportation of troops without previous authority of law for its construction. Furthermore, as suggested by the point made by the gentleman from Alabama, the language of the paragraph makes this appropriation "immediately available," and in the point made by the gentleman from Nebraska it is "to remain available until expended," although this is the army appropriation bill "for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905." Upon consideration of all these matters, the Chair holds that this paragraph is not in order upon this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAY OF ENLISTED MEN.

For pay of enlisted men of all grades, including recruits, $9,000,000: Provided, That hereafter first-class gunners of field artillery shall receive $2 per month and second-class gunners $1 per month in addition to their pay.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I just reserve the point of order and ask the chairman if this is an increase of pay?

Mr. HULL. That is subject to a point of order, but before the gentleman——

Mr. HEMENWAY. I said I reserved the point of order.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] is very greatly interested in this, and it has also been cordially recommended by the Department, and I would like for the committee to hear him.

Mr. PARKER. This clause is certainly subject to the point of order. In the Navy the pay of the men is not fixed by law, but by a regulation of the President; and from time to time, as the development of modern gunnery and small-arm practice have shown the need of intelligent marksmanship, higher pay has been given to expert marksmen and higher pay has been given to expert gunners. In the Army, being bound by law to pay so much to every sergeant, every corporal, and every private, there has been no power to do as the Government ought to do, and to encourage such marksmanship without an act of Congress. The difficulty of passing special acts for all manner of improvements of the Army will be seen by every Member of this House.

It was only last year that in the infantry and cavalry and, indeed, throughout the service we gave $1 a month extra pay to very expert marksmen, but we had nothing for gunners. General Randolph, Chief of Artillery, in speaking of this matter, says:

That has not been brought up, but I want to speak of it, because we have a class of what we call "gunnery specialists," who are enlisted men, who can pass a much more rigid examination than any of those who are classified "gunners." They have become very expert. I mentioned it in my report. It says here (p. 11):

"Attention is particularly invited to the report of the work done by six of these in the artillery district of Portland, during the combined maneuvers, which was not only satisfactory, but far exceeded the most sanguine expectations. The commandant of the artillery school in his annual report to the Adjutant-General recommends that Congress be asked to enact a law."

Now, that law was for even more relief than this. In 1901, February 20, the act increasing the efficiency of the permanent military force provided that first-class gunners should receive $2 per month and second-class gunners $1 per month, in addition to their pay. In the estimate this act is referred to for these classes of gunners.

I will read a letter from the War Department:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF,
Washington, December 31, 1903.

SIR: I have the honor to invite attention to the provisions of section 7 of the act of February 2, 1901, "To increase the efficiency of the permanent military establishment of the United States," which provides that first-class gunners shall receive $2 per month and second-class gunners $1 per month in addition to their pay.

It appears to have been held that the term "gunners" as used in this act applies only to Coast Artillery, as the Field Artillery had no such class when that law was passed. By subsequent orders, however, gunners of the first and second class have been provided for in the Field Artillery, and I deem it for the best interests of the service that the same encouragement be given to enlisted men of the Field Artillery to qualify for the gunner class as is given in the Coast Artillery, and so avoid unfair discrimination. I therefore recommend that the inclosed copy of a provision authorizing the increased pay for gunners of Field Artillery be inserted in the army appropriation bill under the item of "Pay of enlisted men."

Very respectfully,
S. B. M. YOUNG,
Lieutenant-General, Chief of Staff.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

And then follows the proviso:

For extra pay to gunners of field artillery, $11,160: Provided, That hereafter first-class gunners of field artillery shall receive $2 per month and second-class gunners $1 per month in addition to their pay.

It is therefore a provision which simply extends to the field artillery this provision for pay as experts that existed before in reference to the coast artillery.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Let me ask the gentleman what is the pay now of a gunner of the first and second class?

Mr. PARKER. My understanding is that a gunner is simply a private, and he is to be paid in this way $2 a month extra, and that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana withdraw his point of order?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making an inquiry of the chairman of the committee. I observe that the bill appropriates $6,071,425 for the pay of the officers of the line and $9,000,000 for the pay of the enlisted men. Now, does not the gentleman think that is a pretty large proportion, that the officers of the Army should get two-thirds as much pay as the whole Army?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is a question of what I think, or what the gentleman from Pennsylvania thinks. The law of the United States provides for an army composed of so many men, commissioned officers, and for so many enlisted men in the time of war, to be reduced to a minimum in time of peace.

We are providing for a little less than the number of officers provided for by law, on the theory that there would not be the full number of officers, owing to death or resignation or retirement; that there would always be a little shortage in the number. The Pay Department computed for the total number authorized by law. The committee cut it down to what they believed the general average would be, as we have done heretofore, and there has been no shortage.

If the gentleman thinks there are too many officers in the United States Army, a very simple remedy would be for him to introduce a bill embodying his ideas as to the number of officers, and then, if it should become a law, the committee in preparing the next bill would appropriate on the basis of the new number fixed under the bill that might be enacted.

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania does not think anything about it; he rose to get information which he is entitled to, and I see that the chairman of the committee is willing to give it. I wish to inquire whether the organization of officers from the General Commanding the Army down through the various grades of brigadier-general, colonel, captain, and lieutenant is not practically as large as it was when the Army had 200,000 men?

Mr. HULL. No; but as large as it was when the Army had 100,000 men or 96,000.

Mr. PALMER. Has there been any proposition to reduce the number of officers in the Army to correspond with the reduced Army?

Mr. HULL. No; and I will tell the gentleman why. In the reorganization of the Army the bill provided that in time of war they could fill up the companies to the maximum and in time of peace reduce them to the minimum. That gave to the Army in the time of peace 60,000 men in round numbers, but it did not disturb any organization. It left the organization intact, so that in time of emergency you could put the recruit in with the trained soldier and fill up regiments without increasing the officers in time of war, except as they might be increased by volunteer regiments taken in. As I understand it, the gentleman from Pennsylvania had a war service during the civil war; and if he will remember back, he will remember that one of the greatest influences for crippling the service was the constant making of new regiments, with new officers. That, at the close of the war, was changed so that the recruit went into the old regiment, into a veteran regiment with veteran officers, and became a fighting machine much quicker than when he went into a new regiment under inexperienced officers.

We believe and Congress believes that the number of officers provided for were necessary in time of war and time of peace, and to-day, in place of proposing to decrease the officers, there is a cry from many parts of the country and from the War Department for an increase in the number of officers. Every State wants a detail of a regular officer in connection with their National Guard. Every school of any size in the country is clamoring for the detail of an officer as a military instructor; so that in place of having too many officers, we have fewer officers than meet the need of the country in time of peace, and a bill is now before the Congress of the United States to give the power to use some of the officers on the retired list for the different services where they can be of service as military attachés abroad, as instructors in military schools, in addition to what is now provided for in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. HULL. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will talk in my own time for two or three minutes. I beg the pardon of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. But I will give him ample opportunity to talk.

Mr. PALMER. Oh, that is all right; I am getting the information I desire.

Mr. HULL. I was trying to answer the gentleman's question and run off onto another line. With the creation of the General Staff there is a large detail of officers from the line, and to-day in Manila there is not one-third of the companies with their full complement of officers.

In the United States there is not one-third of the companies with their full complement of officers, and if we continue in the line of peace a few years more the demands of the different States, the demands of the different institutions of learning, the demands for military attachés abroad will make a growing demand for increasing the number of officers of the Army or giving the power to employ officers on the retired list for this class of duty.

Mr. PALMER. There are thirty regiments of infantry and fifteen regiments of cavalry and some artillery. Now, the gentleman says that these organizations are short of officers. Where are these officers that are getting $6,000,000 every year as pay from the Government? What are they doing?

Mr. HULL. Those that are with the companies are performing the duties of the line, and those that are on detached duty are doing the duty that the Secretary of War and the President of the United States have assigned them to do. There are thirty regiments of infantry, fifteen regiments of cavalry, and there are some fourteen regiments of artillery, if they had a regimental organization.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to inform the House what the total amount of pay for officers is, including officers of the line and those mentioned under different classifications later in the bill.

Mr. HULL. I have not added that up. If the gentleman will take the pay given to staff officers, which does not include the General Staff—they are all officers of the line and appropriated for under this—if he will take the Engineer Corps and the Adjutant-General's Corps and the Medical Corps and the other staff corps of the Army, and add what we appropriate there to what is appropriated under this head, the gentleman will get it. But I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that what the committee has done is simply to take the law and make the appropriations that the law requires should be made. It may be possible that in the desire of the committee to save some money we have cut this a little below what we will actually need to pay the officers, but in my judgment it is ample.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the gentleman state why it is that the Army of the United States, consisting of only some 60,000 men, requires an annual appropriation so much larger in proportion than does the army of any other great nation of the world?

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes; I can state that, and take great pleasure in doing so. I say, Mr. Chairman, that it is because it is the Army of the United States. We give our soldiers more pay than any other nation on earth, because they are citizens of the United States of America. Germany pays $2.50 a month; Austria pays 90 cents a month; Italy pays less than a dollar a month. We pay $13 a month and add to their pay every year up to $18 a month, and I want to say to the gentleman that I am glad that I belong to a country that does not have to resort to conscription to carry its flag; that I belong to a country that is willing to recognize the man who is willing to imperil his life in defense of that flag and the honor of the country; that I belong to a country that believes that the man who does that is worthy of having at least a living wage while he is serving under the starry banner of the Republic. [Applause.]

I am not willing to even concede that the Congress of the United States should be criticised for liberal pay to the soldiers and sailors of the United States. We pay higher wages to our soldiers and sailors than any other nation on earth, and, thank God, we are able to do it, and we will continue to pay it while we are as patriotic as we are to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that in this great appropriation of $75,000,000 only $9,000,000 goes as pay to the soldiers. I have been trying to find out how much went as pay for the officers, but the gentleman seems to be unable to state.

Mr. HULL. There is a good deal more paid to the soldiers than to the officers. I want to say to the gentleman that while we pay our officers in the lower grades higher wages than any other nation, we pay our officers in the higher grades lower wages than any other nation.

If the gentleman will refer to page 129 of the Book of Estimates and the pages immediately following, he will see stated the exact amount of money paid to each class of officers and to the enlisted men of our Army.

Mr. GROSVENOR rose.

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. I simply wanted to call attention to the fact that the pay of the soldier is one thing, to which must be added his rations and clothing.

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Some gentlemen here do not seem to understand that.

Mr. HULL. That allowance is made also by other nations, but in a less degree.

I wish to say to my friends on the other side another thing in connection with the suggestion of my friend from Ohio. When our army went to China in the advance guard to relieve the legations there, it was the best equipped and the best fed army of all the armies of all the nations of western civilization that landed on the shores of China and marched to Pekin, and the officers of the German and some other armies said that our enlisted men were better clothed and better fed than were the officers of many other countries.

Mr. PRINCE. I suggest that if gentlemen will refer to the report accompanying this bill—report 421, page 5—they will see there a specific detail of the appropriations. I think this will answer the question that has been raised.

Mr. HULL. Yes; it is all stated in detail there. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And said clerks and messengers shall be employed and assigned by the Secretary of War to the offices and positions in which they are to serve.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order upon that provision.

Mr. HULL. Do you raise it now?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULL. Then I want to be heard on that point of order. If there is anything in continuing appropriations where officers are appropriated for for a long series of years, and where the question has been raised and decided on points of order as to their pay, I think if the Chair will take time to look into this question, he will see that this provision belongs absolutely here; otherwise there is no such thing as establishing the right of a committee to report such provisions.

I do not believe the Chair gave to the other proposition the consideration that he usually gives to all questions coming before him. But some five years ago, when Mr. HOPKINS (then a Member from Illinois, now Senator) was in the Chair, an increase of pay was asked for these clerks, and the point of order was raised that we could not make the increase and could not retain them in the bill. That is my recollection of the matter. And after full discussion and careful consideration by the Chair the point was overruled.

Provisions of this kind have been in a great many appropriation bills for a number of years—I do not know how many. In my judgment they are as clearly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs as any single appropriation in the bill. These are different clerks from those provided for by the Department. They have been carried in this bill from the time these offices were created and appropriated for. They are headquarters clerks, not departmental.

If the point of order should be overruled, I desire to have read a communication on this point from the Secretary of War. If the Chair would like to hear it, it can be read now.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] state his point of order?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was waiting for that purpose until the gentleman from Iowa had concluded. I had not stated the point of order, but the gentleman seemed to anticipate that I was going to make it and seemed to be fully prepared to answer it. He read my mind very successfully.

Mr. HULL. We have thrashed this straw over a good many times.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, my point of order is this: That certain provisions in this paragraph are not within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs.

This provision provides for one chief clerk at $2,000. It is evident from the language of the bill that that chief clerk will be employed here in the District of Columbia. Now, it is not necessary to discuss to the Chairman and to the House the necessity of a Committee on Appropriations remaining in its own jurisdiction. If you allow the committee on general appropriations to assume general jurisdiction of one appropriation and then the Committee on Military Affairs to assume the same jurisdiction, you have the heads of Departments where they have got two doors through which they can go to get their money, and Congress will have no check whatever upon the Departments here.

Now, that is an ample and good reason why the committee should be held within its own jurisdiction in its own bill. When the bill carrying appropriations for the Army was originally taken from the general Appropriations Committee and given to the Committee on Military Affairs its jurisdiction was definitely and clearly defined. It was given jurisdiction of those appropriations which applied to the Army at large, those appropriations which applied to the military establishment. But Congress at that time retained in the hands of the general Appropriations Committee those appropriations relating to the Army that provided for the Department clerks and those persons employed in the War Department whose place of business was in the city of Washington. I do not think the gentleman from Iowa disputes that point.

Now, the question is, Congress having left in the hands of the Appropriations Committee the right to appropriate for the great Departments here, including the War Department, and the gentleman from Iowa and his committee, knowing that they have no jurisdiction over those clerks located in the Departments here, went beyond their jurisdiction when they sought to appropriate for a chief clerk in the headquarters, because that chief clerk is located here. The appropriation for and establishment of that position must go on the legislative bill. Now, I know that the gentleman from Iowa will in all probability cite me to the fact that this belongs to the Commanding General of the Army, and that the Commanding General of the Army does not come within the jurisdiction of the legislative bill. I grant that. I grant that the old position of General Commanding the Army did not come within the jurisdiction of the legislative bill, but that office of Commanding General of the Army has been abolished. There is no such office existing.

Mr. HAY. How about the office of Chief of Staff?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am coming to that. Congress has established another office, the Chief of Staff, and in the legislation creating that office the Chief of Staff is located here and becomes a part of the establishment of the Secretary of War. He is not an independent officer. Under the old law the general in command of the Army could locate his headquarters where he pleased. We all remember that General Sherman at one time took his office away from the city of Washington and located it in the city of St. Louis, Mo. It was a part of the army establishment, and not a part of the War Department here, located in Washington. But when Congress passed the law establishing the office of Chief of Staff, that office bscame a part of the War Department itself.

The Chief of Staff can not move his office away from Washington except by order of the Secretary of War or the President, his chief. He is located here, and the clerks in his main office are as much a part of the War Department as the chief clerk of the War Department. The chief clerk of the Chief of Staff is as much a part of the staff of the War Department as the chief clerk of the Department is, and has nothing to do with the military establishment at large. Therefore I say, Mr. Chairman, that in the legislation now taken the House might as well recognize this proposition and clearly define it. It is bad legislation and bad practice to allow two committees to exercise jurisdiction in the same matter. This matter of Department clerks comes within the jurisdiction of the general Appropriations Committee, and they have provided for them on the legislative bill. Now, I say, if the Committee on Military Affairs invades their jurisdiction, why Congress will lose all check in this matter, because you will have two committees legislating in reference to the same matter. Believing that the Chief of Staff has become under the law a part of the War Department and no longer is a separate establishment, belonging to the Army at large, I say that this provision is not in order on this bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the only argument of the gentleman that I could catch that has any bearing on this is relating to the Chief of Staff. The Chief of Staff, under the law creating the office, took the place of the Commanding General of the Army, and wherever the Commanding General of the Army is mentioned in any of the laws it applies to the Chief of Staff. Now, if you will go back to the appropriations, you will find in the appropriation bills ending June 30, 1901, we lumped these clerks together, with fifteen clerks at $1,800, and ten at $1,600, and so forth.

In the act expiring June 30, 1902, we segregated and made the clerks exactly as they are now paid. The act of Congress (Fifty-third Congress), United States Statutes at Large, page 236, provides specifically for and creates these offices:

For clerks and messengers at the headquarters of the Army and at the several departmental headquarters.

The Chief of Staff is the headquarters of the Army now, whether he is located in Washington or New York. He takes the place of the Commanding General of the Army.

At the recruiting headquarters and depots; at the Military Academy at West Point; at the artillery school at Fort Monroe, Va.; at the infantry and cavalry schools at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and at the cavalry and light artillery school at Fort Riley, Kans., not exceeding ninety clerks, at $1,000 each; twenty-five clerks, at $1,100 each; ten clerks, at $1,200, etc.

The law afterwards changed their pay, as I have said, by the appropriation act expiring June 30, 1902. It was never carried in the legislative bill, these clerks having nothing to do with departmental work. They are at the Headquarters of the Army and do the military work of the Army, and have never been carried on any appropriation bill except the army appropriation bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman from Iowa answer a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly, if I can do so.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Here is the office of a chief clerk, at $2,000. Will not that clerk be located with the Chief of Staff, in the District of Columbia, at the War Department?

Mr. HULL. He will be with the Chief of Staff, wherever he goes, just as he was with General Miles when he was Commanding General of the Army during his entire time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Chief of Staff has a right to move his office out of the city of Washington?

Mr. HULL. No. Neither has the Commanding General of the Army——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. He did do it.

Mr. HULL. He did it by authority of the President. The Commanding General could not move his offices. When General Sherman went to St. Louis he applied to the President of the United States for authority to go to St. Louis.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like for the gentleman to show his authority for that.

Mr. HULL. All officers of the Army are subject to the President's authority.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The President could order him back, or the President could suspend him.

Mr. HULL. When General Scott went to New York it was by consent given by the President of the United States.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I presume the President could order him there, but I say there is no law requiring him first to go to the President to get his consent.

Mr. HULL. There is the general law of the Constitution of the United States, which makes the President of the United States Commander in Chief.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The President may be Commander in Chief of the Army, but——

Mr. HULL. And it is suggested by my friend from Minnesota very pertinently that Congress could not make a law compelling the President in these matters.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I admit that, but it does give authority to the General of the Army to move his headquarters anywhere he pleases without consulting the President. The President can order him back, and if the gentleman has authority for it there I would like to see it, as I have not seen it.

Mr. HULL. I think they are all subject to assignment by the President entirely, and this matter was created by law and placed in the army bill and carried in that ever since.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say just a word upon this point of order. It seems to me that in discussing such points as these it is advisable not only to look into the history of the appointment of these clerks, but also into the reason for that history. These clerks who have headquarters with the various major-generals and the headquarters of the Commander in Chief, which practically is that of the Chief of Staff, have in history been always appointed and draw their appointment from an army appropriation bill, which said, and it says here:

To be appointed and assigned by the Secretary of War.

Hence, in the whole history of legislation they have not come within the legislative or civil appropriation bill, but have been carried in the army appropriation bill. Such a history must have a reason, and it does have a reason, many reasons. One reason is that that clerk who sits in the office of the general is not selected merely because he knows this or that and can pass a civil-service examination.

He must have a certain amount of acquaintance with military affairs to do his duty in that office. He must know military terms; he must know the customs of the Army; and I do not speak from knowledge, but I will speak from presumption and say I believe that most of these clerks have served in the Army as non-commissioned officers, and have obtained the experience which enables them to be useful clerks in that way, and not by any civil service and with no sort of examination to take that place.

In the next place, they must be men who can be trusted, whom the General has known for years, known as soldiers, men whom he knows he can trust just as well as any soldier in his command, because secrets of his command in time of war and in time of peace go through these men. They must be in a way military men. They must be selected, therefore, for their military ability, just as you would select officers. For these reasons the law has always given the appointment of these clerks to the Secretary of War, and probably on the recommendation of different officers whom they are to serve.

These reasons are valid reasons for maintaining the law as it stands, and not for upsetting it and a statute of the United States—not only one statute but successive statutes of the United States—by a point of order raised under the rules of Congress.

Now, I appeal to the gentleman from Alabama, as one who loves the Army, if he thinks there is anything in his point of order, to withdraw it under the circumstances for the benefit of the Army. But if he insists on it I appeal to the Chair to overrule it, because the point of order is taken against the precedent of repeated statutes passed for good reasons for a term of years.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think the contention of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that the General Staff is a part of the civil executive establishment here in Washington, presided over by Secretary Root, is altogether wrong. The General Staff is composed of officers of the line, a part of the effective fighting machine, and for the time being designated for the performance of a certain duty.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. And scattered all over the country.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And, as the gentleman from Minnesota says, scattered all over the country. While they are here in the city of Washington it is true that they are not here as a part of the civil establishment known as the War Department. The headquarters of the Army has to be established somewhere, and it happens to be convenient to have it in the vicinity of the offices of the Secretary of War and of the President. Clerks in the office of the General Staff are as nearly connected with and as certainly connected with the line of the Army appropriated for by this bill as are the clerks in the various departments in Manila or elsewhere, and may be ordered all over the country.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, there is one matter of history that ought to be considered. Some years after the civil war a considerable part of this work was transacted by enlisted men in what is known as the general service corps, if I remember correctly. That was abolished, whether by statute or by order of the Secretary I do not know, but it makes no difference for the purpose of this question. The work that was done by enlisted men in the Army and paid for out of army appropriations is the identical work that is provided for by this section. So it has not only been carried as a matter of history in the army appropriation bill, but the reason for it is that the men perform military work. They carry out the military orders of the military officers; they have done it either as enlisted men or as civilians, and as it happens now in this bill, they are carried as civilians.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, in answer to what the gentlemen have said, I will say that some of my friends on the other side of the Chamber have misunderstood my position in reference to the clerks in the army establishment outside of Washington. I admitted at the beginning, and admit now, as to those clerks employed by the general army establishment not in the District of Columbia, the military committee has already had jurisdiction of that matter, and has it now. But I say that when the Congress repealed the law under which we had a Commander in Chief of the Army of the United States and established a Chief of Staff in his place at the same time it practically abolished the Adjutant-General's Office so far as the control of the clerks in Washington went. It made him merely adjutant of the Chief of Staff.

The clerks with the Adjutant-General's Office were always carried on the legislative bill. These men are now transferred to a different division, many of them going, and a large portion of the work going, under the Chief of Staff. Some of it goes to other places, but the great bulk of the Adjutant-General's work goes to the Chief of Staff. It was always provided for in Washington; the work must be done in Washington, where he can be communicated with by the Secretary of War and the President. There is a portion of the work of Chief of Staff that is, I admit, and properly belongs to the military establishment.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield for a suggestion?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. HULL. On page 8 the gentleman will find the same provision placed in the bill:

And said clerks and messengers shall be employed and assigned by the Secretary of War to the offices and positions in which they are to serve.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly; but it was limited entirely to the Commander in Chief of the Army. Now, I understand—and if I am wrong the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] can correct me—that this one chief clerk at $2,000 and four clerks at $1,800 each are to be employed here in Washington in the office of the Chief of Staff, and not in the field.

Mr. HULL. I can not say where he will assign them. I have not looked into it, but I will call the attention of the gentleman to one other matter——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But let me ask the gentleman a question right there.

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman reported this bill to the House.

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And he says that these appropriations for these clerks are necessary. Now, does he mean to tell the House that his committee has no information as to where these clerks are to be established?

Mr. HULL. We have placed no limitation upon the Secretary of War. Our understanding is they are to be employed at headquarters—division headquarters, department headquarters, and the Headquarters of the Army.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand that, as to the other clerks on the other side of the page, but I want the gentleman to state—if he says it is untrue and if he knows these clerks will be employed in the field, then I have nothing more to say—if it is not a fact that these particular clerks named by me were to be employed in Washington, and do not the hearings of the gentleman's committee show that?

Mr. HULL. My understanding is that the one employed here in the Chief of Staff office, especially, is the highest paid clerk carried on the rolls.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Do not the hearings of the gentleman's committee show that these clerks named by me are to be employed in Washington in the War Department?

Mr. HULL. No; they may be sent out, but they can be employed here if necessary as part of the Headquarters of the Army. There is no doubt that some of them will, and I will state to the gentleman, further, that the Secretary of War sent up a request for a large additional number of clerks, and we believed that it would be subject to a point of order and did not put it in the bill. If the gentleman will look back to the last appropriation bill, when the law creating a Chief of Staff was fresh, he will find there that one chief clerk at Headquarters of the Army, or that of the Chief of Staff, was provided for at $2,000, and that is the one clerk that is clearly to be employed here with the Chief of Staff.

Mr. BENNY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Alabama yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.

Mr. BENNY. Does the gentleman believe that the clerks are necessary?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, I have no doubt they are necessary.

Mr. BENNY. Has the gentleman any objection to the amount of salaries appropriated by this bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. None whatever.

Mr. BENNY. Has the gentleman any idea that they will draw these salaries more than once in case this bill passes?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No.

Mr. BENNY. Then why not let us go along and transact some other business?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is very kind of the gentleman who has just addressed me; but as the gentleman is a new Member and probably not very well informed, I would state to him that it has been the custom of the House in the past to assign different matters to various committees when Congress assembled and that certain amounts of appropriations are assigned to the Appropriation Committee and certain other appropriations for clerk hire and other things are assigned to the Military Committee.

Thus we assign tariff bills to the Committee on Ways and Means and public-building bills to the Committee on Public Buildings; and if one committee invades the jurisdiction of another committee, it brings about a great deal of confusion in legislation, and on appropriation bills necessarily means lax management and a lack of economy. As this is a new question, this Chief of Staff, as to whether he belongs to the general military establishment at large and should come under the direction of the Committee on Military Affairs or as to whether he is a part of the Department and belongs to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations, and as this is the first time it has come before the House, it is an important matter that the jurisdiction of the two committees should be defined. It is not that I care very much which committee has jurisdiction, but it is of the utmost importance to good legislation to have the jurisdiction defined so that we will not have two committees legislating about the same matter. I therefore can not yield to the point that the gentleman makes.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to put a question to the gentleman as to whether the clerk at military headquarters and the clerks in the office of the Chief of Staff were not of the same character—segregated from the ordinary clerks, but allowed to have the confidential information that belongs to military actions, with the only difference that the men in the office of the Chief of Staff must know much more about it than those at headquarters?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let me say to my friend from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] that the question whether the Appropriations Committee or the Committee on Military Affairs should have jurisdiction of a particular matter—the wisdom of the assignment to one or the other of those committees—is not a question which it is necessary for us to discuss here. The gentleman may be very wise and correct in his judgment on that question. But that jurisdiction has been defined. If the gentleman does not like the definition that has been given by the House in defining the jurisdiction of these committees, he has his time and his committee have their time to try to change it; that is, when the President's message comes in and the jurisdiction of the committees with reference to the different subjects embraced in that message is defined.

Mr. PARKER. I am not arguing on that point with the gentleman, because that is a matter for the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole; but I did have an argument with the gentleman in which I appealed to him, for the sake of the good of the Army, not to differentiate the clerks at headquarters and the clerks who have to do with the office of the Chief of Staff. I appealed to my friend and to the House for unanimous consent to allow this matter to go on the appropriation bill. I do this because I think it is for the good of the nation that it should be done. I do not understand why the technical point should be taken when the good of the nation demands that it should be waived.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not desire to take any "technical" point in this matter; but the House has heretofore defined the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations and has put under its jurisdiction these clerks employed in the War Department as a part of the War Department establishment. I say that under the law this office of Chief of Staff comes within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. It is not with me a matter of personal concern how the Chair may decide this question; but I want a decision, so that the line may be definitely drawn.

Mr. HAY. As I understand, the point of order of the gentleman from Alabama goes only to the two items on page 7.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I am informed (and if I am wrong I ask the gentleman from Iowa to correct me) that those are the only two classes of clerks that will be employed in the Department here at Washington; that these clerks have been combined by the Committee on Military Affairs in one paragraph with the clerks in the field. Now, as to the clerks in the field I have no argument to make; but as to the clerks in the Department in Washington I raise this question.

Mr. HAY. The paragraph does not show which of these clerks are to be employed "in the field," as the gentleman puts it. They are not "in the field," but at the headquarters of the military divisions in various parts of the country.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand, your hearings show——

Mr. HULL. No. There were no hearings at all on this matter.

Mr. HAY. That is true. There were no hearings on this subject. This bill has been drawn in this way, to my personal knowledge, for the last seven years; how much longer I do not know.

The clerks under the Chief of Staff, as I understand, are not legislative clerks under the legislative bill.

Mr. HULL. Yes, they are; but not the clerks at military headquarters.

Mr. HAY. Those are the clerks that we are talking about. Those are not provided for in the legislative bill.

Mr. HULL. No; they are not appropriated for in the legislative bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Allow me a word. In the Book of Estimates, at the foot of page 49, will be found the estimates for the office of Chief of Staff in the civil administration of the War Department, for which there is an estimate of $20,460, the appropriation for the current year being something over $9,000. This clerical force of the Chief of Staff has heretofore been paid from what is called the "temporary fund" of the War Department, appropriated in the legislative bill; and for the next fiscal year we have provided a temporary fund in the amount of $325,000, which will include all the details of the civil administration of the Chief of Staff, as well as other War Department expenditures for clerical force.

Mr. HAY. Is the chief clerk provided for in this bill provided for in the legislative bill?

Mr. BINGHAM. Here is the Book of Estimates. In the legislative bill we find in the office of Chief of Staff, one chief clerk of division, $1,800.

Mr. HAY. That is one clerk—a chief of division.

Mr. BINGHAM (continuing). So many clerks of class 3, so many clerks of class 2, so many of class 1, draftsmen, etc. Now, let me give the gentleman the information. When the legislative bill was made up we took into consideration in the temporary allowance of $325,000 to complete the equipment for the future, in the discretion of the Secretary, the Chief of Staff's office. Now, that applies only to the Chief of Staff. I do not believe the point of order runs as to the other branch of your bill, applying to clerks and messengers at headquarters of divisions and departments, because I believe they are military. But the civil establishment. the War Department civil establishment, and the estimates for the Chief of Staff we gave the allowance of $325,000, to employ on the temporary roll in that Department for the next fiscal year, in order that the Secretary of War may organize his Department as seemed to him best. I consider that in the line as it is here in the bill it is out of order.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask his attention to the Book of Estimates, page 150, for pay of the Army, where the estimate is made? I find the language:

Pay to clerks and messengers at headquarters of Departments and office of Chief of Staff: One chief clerk, $2,000; four clerks, at $1,800; ten clerks, at $1,600.

So that what the gentleman was reading from was for an entirely different purpose, and this estimate has nothing whatever to do with that.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is the chief clerk of the Department.

Mr. HULL. I am giving you what is in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would say to the gentleman that at the hearings before the committee the Secretary asked for $20,460 for the next fiscal year for the organization of this very Bureau——

Mr. HULL. Now, I do not think it at all conflicts with this, because the estimates are submitted upon a different line.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman tell us what comes under Chief of Staff in your big appropriation of $273,160?

Mr. HULL. I should imagine that one chief clerk should come in, because wherever the term "General of the Army" is used under the law it is to apply to the Chief of Staff, and the General of the Army having a chief clerk, it must apply to him, because the Chief of Staff is also the General of the Army, and he is a line officer detailed by the President for this specific purpose.

Mr. HAY. I could not quite understand that part of the gentleman's statement.

Mr. BINGHAM. I say to the gentleman that we have duly appropriated to the Secretary, at his discretion, $325,000, out of which the Chief of Staff's office will secure its subordinate pay roll.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania himself admits that this paragraph is not subject to the point of order as to the clerks which are to be used in the Bureau, as he takes it. Now, there is nothing to indicate that any of these clerks or chief clerks are to be used here in the Department. It does not say that the chief clerk is to be used in the office of the Chief of Staff. It does not say that any of the clerks at $1,800 are to be used in the office of the Chief of Staff, and the point of order can not be applied to one part of this paragraph without being applied to all of it. The gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Alabama admit that it does not apply to the clerks who are employed at Army Headquarters, Departments, and the various headquarters throughout the Union.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman from Virginia will allow me to interrupt him, the point of order is made against——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia his opinion as to the effect of lines 13, 14, and 15 on page 8.

Mr. HAY. "And said clerks and messengers shall be employed and assigned by the Secretary of War to the offices and positions in which they are to serve." I believe that under that the Secretary of War would have the authority to assign these clerks to the headquarters of divisions and departments as he might see fit.

Mr. HULL. The Secretary of War now is authorized to make the assignment.

Mr. HAY. This has always been a provision of the bill that the Secretary of War should make the assignments to the various headquarters, he being informed as to the necessity of the different headquarters throughout the country. It is not a temporary provision. As I say, it has been carried in this bill for seven years, and I do not understand now by what reasoning the gentleman from Alabama or the gentleman from Pennsylvania can make the office of Chief of Staff a part of the civil department of the War Department.

The office of Chief of Staff is purely military in its functions and can not be a part of the civilian bureau of the War Department, and therefore it does seem to me that if any one item in this paragraph is subject to the point of order every other item is, and when he makes the point of order it must apply to all or it can not apply to any.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. This paragraph appropriates for "pay to clerks and messengers at headquarters of division and departments and office of the Chief of Staff." The point of order of the gentleman from Alabama, as the Chair understands it, is that because this paragraph includes an appropriation for clerks in the office of the Chief of Staff, therefore it is in effect an appropriation for one of the Executive Departments of the Government at Washington, and therefore should not be included in this army appropriation bill, which comes from the Committee on Military Affairs, but should be covered by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation, which is within the jurisdiction of a different committee. We have a statute which provides that—

Each head of a Department is authorized to employ in his Department such number of clerks of the several classes recognized by law, and such messengers, assistant messengers, copyists, watchmen, laborers, and other employees, and at such rates of compensation, respectively, as may be appropriated for by Congress from year to year.

Salaries for such clerks and employees are properly carried in the executive, and not in the army bill. As to what constitutes a "Department," the Chair calls attention to an opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States, directly in point. It is found in Opinions of the Attorney-General, volume 15, page 267, and reads as follows:

The several Executive Departments are by law established at the seat of government. They have no existence elsewhere. Only those bureaus and offices can be deemed bureaus or offices in any of these Departments which are constituted such by the law of its organization. The Department, with its bureaus or offices, is in contemplation of the law an establishment distinct from the branches of the public service and the offices thereof, which are under its supervision. Thus the office of postmaster, or of collector of internal revenue, or of pension agents, or of consuls, is not properly a departmental office—not an office in a Department having supervision over the branch of the public service to which it belongs. True, an official relation exists here between the office and the Department, one, moreover, of subordination of the former to the latter, but this does not make the office a part of the Department.

The Chair thinks that ruling very applicable to the case in hand. Referring to the act of February 14, 1903, entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the Army," being the act whereby this office of Chief of Staff is created, it does not appear that there is any provision that he shall be established or even have his headquarters at Washington. He may be in the field. He may be anywhere the necessities of the service require. He is, among other things, to "have supervision of all troops of the line," and to "perform such other military duties" as may be lawfully assigned him by the President. The Chair is of the opinion that he is not the head of a "Department" within the meaning of the law and ruling of the Attorney-General, but his relation to the War Department, so far as the bill is concerned, is of a character similar to that formerly sustained by the Lieutenant-General. The words embraced in lines 13, 14, and 15 on page 8, "And said clerks and messengers shall be employed and assigned by the Secretary of War to the offices and positions in which they are to serve," would, if introduced for the first time in this bill, be open to objection, but it appears to be the identical language which is in the existing law, the army appropriation bill of last year. It is a mere reaffirmation of law. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Three hundred acting quartermasters, at $100 per annum in addition to pay as officers of the line, $30,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. HAY. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that it changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. HAY. That lines 7, 8, and 9, at page 10, change existing law.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I want to make one statement, giving the reasons the committee had for putting this into the bill. For forty years the acting commissaries have had the extra pay of $100 a year. The acting quartermasters have had responsible and heavy duties to perform, and we believed that they should be on an equality. This is a change of law, and of course is subject to a point of order if the gentleman sees fit to make it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, there should be a change in the total.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 10 and 11, page 11, strike out "three hundred and twenty thousand" and insert "two hundred and ninety thousand;" so that it will read: "290,550."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Medical Department: For pay of officers in the Medical Department, $633,400.

For additional pay to such officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $200,000.

In all, $833,400.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It appears that the Medical Department at present is composed of 1 brigadier-general, 9 colonels, 12 lieutenant-colonels, 45 captains, 178 lieutenants, in all 336 doctors for a little less than 60,000 men. That is 1 doctor for every 180 men. The cost to the United States for the pay of these officers is $833,400, without saying anything about the medicines or hospital stewards or nurses.

On page 15 of the bill there is an item of $450,000 for 250 contract surgeons. That is to be added, making a total cost for the pay of doctors for these 60,000 men of $1,283,400. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, that is too much to pay for that service. I think somehow or other and some time or other this force of doctors ought to be reduced to correspond in some degree with the present size of the Army.

The same criticism can be made of the Pay Department. There is at present 1 Paymaster-General, who is a brigadier-general; 3 assistant paymasters-general, with the rank of colonel; 4 assistant paymasters-general, with the rank of lieutentant-colonel; 20 majors, 24 captains, a total of 53 paymasters for 60,000 men—for 30 regiments of infantry, 15 regiments of cavalry, and 15 regiments of artillery. In active service a paymaster is expected to pay 10 regiments every two months, and if this Army was in active service in the field, where they could be got at, 6 paymasters ought to do the job. There are 53 paymasters, and they cost $241,375 to the Government.

They have 90 paymasters' clerks, which is pretty near 2 clerks to every paymaster. They have an item of $15,000 appropriated for paymasters' messengers. What a paymaster's messenger is I don't know. There were none in the civil war. The paymaster's clerk did the work and the paymaster drew the salary, and the only thing I know that a paymaster's messenger could do is to brush the flies off the paymaster's nose. [Laughter.]

I make the same remark with respect to the paymasters—that somewhere, somehow or other, this force in the Pay Department ought to be reduced to correspond to the strength of the Army. There may be some sense and some reason in maintaining the other arms of the service in the numbers which they now contain; but in time of actual war, while we may need trained officers to organize the Army as a nucleus to muster the volunteer force around, you can always get paymasters and doctors by the regiment. You can hire a thousand of them in twenty-four hours who will perform the duty as well as the gentlemen who are now drawing the pay and, as it seems to me, doing mighty little for it. Anyone who knows the multiplication table and can add figures and who can give a bond for the faithful performance of his duty can be a paymaster. There is no mystery about it.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, just one word.

The CHAIRMAN. There is now no motion pending before the committee. The gentleman has withdrawn his pro forma amendment.

Mr. HULL. I will renew it. If the gentleman had been present at the hearings before the committee, he would have found that the Medical Corps is asking for an increase, and makes a good showing for the necessity of it.

Mr. PALMER. I don't doubt it.

Mr. HULL. We cut them down in the reorganization bill below the amount they desired. The Army is largely scattered. We have troops in Porto Rico, in Alaska, in Manila, in Honolulu, and we have them scattered in different portions of this country. We have two battalions of a regiment in Porto Rico now and the doctors must be placed wherever there are troops.

At one time there were over 400 posts in the Philippine Islands alone—small detachments—and I know my good friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] would not like to send out even 25 men in the Tropics away from the base of supplies, where it would be impossible to get medical attendance, without having an officer of the Army there to minister to them in case of sickness. The contract surgeons are in some sense a precautionary measure. The Surgeon-General says that we do not know when we may need them by this process of sending out troops in small detachments.

Now, as to the Pay Department, I can only say that when that question was before the committee and before Congress in the reorganization of the Army we took the evidence submitted by the Secretary of War, who has wonderful efficiency in his administrative as well as his executive office, and we took the smallest number of men for the Pay Corps that the Secretary of War certified would be necessary to promptly pay the troops.

If any gentleman can give the Committee on Military Affairs any evidence that this corps is too large, or if he will introduce a bill and give the evidence, I will promise him we will give it careful consideration, and if he can establish his case we will be glad to cut out any of this corps that are unnecessary.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if he had any evidence before the committee when he made this bill up on this subject?

Mr. HULL. Certainly, we took evidence; and in this bill we are appropriating for those provided for by law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Those officers are provided for by law?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We have reduced the Army from 100,000 to about 60,000. Have we the same number of officers for the 60,000 that we had for the 100,000?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Of the class the gentleman has described?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. In other words, we have the same number of doctors and the same number of clerks for 60,000 troops that we had for 100,000. That is frugality run mad.

Mr. HULL. I will say that during the progress of the war, when we had additional regiments and a volunteer corps in the field, the Pay Corps was very much larger, and so was the Medical Corps, but this is a permanent establishment, and whether the Army is 100,000 or 60,000 does not make any difference as to the number of officers.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will tell us why we have not some departmental recommendation or some recommendation from the President, the Commander in Chief of the Army, urging a reduction of these officers? Why is it Secretary Root has not made some recommendation about reducing these officers?

Mr. HULL. Because they do not want them reduced.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] has made a remarkable argument here in a minute or two, showing to me that there is no desire on the part of the powers that be—the Commander in Chief of the Army—to cut off these unnecessary officers and lessen expenses. The gentleman's statement is remarkable for brevity, as well as for meat, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] now states that he has had some testimony, and what was your evidence on this point?

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Tennessee certainly did not understand the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I hope he did not.

Mr. HULL. I stated positively that when the reorganization of the Army was before the committee they had very full hearings. They went over all these staff corps, and they cut it down to what they now stand at and what we believe to be a proper force.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Haven't they reduced the Army since that time?

Mr. HULL. No; the Army has been reduced in its enlisted force under the provisions of that law, but under the provisions of the law that was adopted by Congress at that time we are now simply appropriating for offices provided for in the permanent law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many soldiers have we in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. HULL. I can not answer that offhand. I should imagine about 10,000.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many of these officers, these clerks and typewriters and stenographers, are there with them?

Mr. HULL. I do not understand that the stenographers have gone with them. The gentleman made a very careful investigation of the Philippines, and I will ask him if he found any stenographers at these posts?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think the Government sent a number over there that were mighty glad to get back, and a great many of them came back with the lids down over their faces.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will renew it. The gentleman himself had some little reminder of coming back that way himself. I think he stayed in the Philippines a little too long for his physical welfare. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have alluded to this very thing time and again in my strenuous opposition to this newborn babe in American jurisdiction, known as "imperialism" or "colonialism."

Here the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER], the ex-attorney-general of that State, the State from which the chairman of the committee himself comes, has had the courage to say, old soldier that he is, that this expenditure is quite unnecessary, as are the excessive number of officers, the excessive number of messengers, and the excessive pay; and all of it is brought about, as explained by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] because the Army is spread all over the face of the earth.

Mr. Chairman, I want to dilate a little on what the gentleman has said. He rightfully complains of too many officers, too much salary, and too many clerks. But this all follows colonialism. We have carried our jurisdiction, and with it our Army, in the past six years to Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the Philippines, and we must keep the Army in these countries to control the people who unwillingly submit to the white man's control.

I believe we have an army post in Alaska, too, and now righteous complaint comes from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] because of the unnecessary officers and clerks under them and the salaries paid—but all this naturally comes from colonialism, the child of the Republican party.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is a mighty short cow that does not want a tail in fly time. This colonialism and its cost is coming back and haunting the Republican party, and it will continue as long as we own colonies. It is becoming a burden and a menace to the American people. Thomas Jefferson warned us against this spirit of territorial aggrandizement. He told us to stay on this side of the Atlantic, and congratulated us that a wide ocean separated us from the war powers of the Old World; and our forefathers took his advice.

They undertook to build a government to suit themselves on this side of the world and called it "United States of America." That was the policy until commercialism and grab and greed got into the saddle and now are aiming at supreme control. The old policy of keeping the ship of state between the two oceans is abandoned, and a big army of soldiers and an army of officers is the result in part—death, disease, pensions, and high taxes we are used to nowadays.

I dare say that some other old soldier—and I am glad I am not one, but I am delighted to see my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] looking so well——

Mr. PALMER. I do not want to sail under false colors. I am not an "old soldier"——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, you look like one. [Laughter.]

Mr. PALMER. I was an humble paymaster's clerk; but I undertake to know something on the subject I am talking about; and I say I will take the job of paying these 60,000 men in the United States Army at this time for 10 per cent what the Government is paying for the business now, and will make money out of it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is a downright, eighteen-carat fine, honest Republican. [Laughter.] I hope he will live long and prosper. I want to have the tax reduced on alcohol; and if the gentleman will permit his friends, and I am one, will preserve him, and put him on exhibition here to succeeding Republican Congresses if we ever have one. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAY. In answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I wish to say that so far as the Medical Corps of the Army is concerned, his statement that he can get a thousand regiments——

Mr. PALMER. A thousand doctors.

Mr. HAY. That he could get a thousand doctors in twenty-four hours, I believe he said——

Mr. PALMER. Yes.

Mr. HAY. To do as good work as the present Medical Corps is doing, I must respectfully take issue with him. He is evidently entirely unacquainted with the work of the Medical Corps of the Army.

There is not a more efficient class of men in the Army to-day than the Medical Corps. No discovery in modern times in connection with medicine has been of greater benefit to the world than those that have been made by the Medical Corps of the Army. And that corps is not sufficient to do the work which it ought to do for the Army. Anybody who is acquainted with the question, anybody who knows or who has studied the conditions that surround the Medical Corps of the Army and the Army itself, knows that what I say is true. That corps in the last six years has contributed to science more than any other branch of the medical profession within my knowledge. If the gentleman can get together a thousand men such as Reed and Gorgas and the present distinguished Surgeon-General and the late Surgeon-General of the Army, and others who might be named, he can do more than anybody else in this country or in this world can do. It seems to me it ought to be a matter of pride to the people of this country that we have a Medical Corps of which we can be proud and whose opinions are valued by every scientific and medical association in the world.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I made no criticism on the Medical Corps of the Army nor on the efficiency of the physicians employed in it. I do not yield to the gentleman from Virginia or anybody else in my respect for that corps. But I did undertake to say that there are too many men in that corps; that there is no sense in having one for every 180 men. I further undertook to say that if war came a sufficient number of contract surgeons could be employed to do the necessary work, and it does not seem to me worth while to keep up in time of peace an establishment which is five or ten times larger than it need be.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

RETIRED OFFICERS.

For pay of officers on the retired list and for officers who may be placed thereon during the current year, $1,944,900.95.

For additional pay to such officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $425,000.

In all, $2,369,900.95.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10675, the army appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. GILLESPIE for ten days on account of important business.

Mr. HULL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

DAM ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. LIND. Will the gentleman withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. HULL. I will.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9308) permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River between the counties of Wright and Sherburne, in the State of Minnesota.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Minnesota Power and Trolley Company (a Minnesota corporation), its successors or assigns, to construct and maintain across the Mississippi River a dam, canal, and works necessarily incident thereto, for water-power purposes, at any point between section 17, in township 121 north, of range 23 west, in Wright County, and section 6, in township 32 north, of range 26 west, in Sherburne County, Minn.

SEC. 2. That suitable fishways, to be approved by the United States Fish Commissioner, shall be constructed and maintained at said dam by said corporation, its successors or assigns.

SEC. 3. That the right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved; and the same shall become null and void unless the construction of the dam hereby authorized be commenced within one year after the passage of this act and completed within three years thereafter.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 8, page 1, after the word "seventeen," insert the words "or eighteen."

On page 2, line 1, after the word "Minnesota," strike out all down to and including the word "situated" in line 19, and insert the following:

Provided, That the plans for the construction of said dam and appurtenant works shall be submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War before the commencement of construction of the same: And provided further, That the said Minnesota Power and Trolley Company, its successors or assigns, shall not deviate from such plans after such approval, either before or after the completion of said structures, unless the modification of said plans shall have previously been submitted to and received the approval of the Chief of Engineers and of the Secretary of War: And provided further, That there shall be placed and maintained in connection with said dam a sluiceway so arranged as to permit logs, timber, and lumber to pass around, through, or over said dam without unreasonable delay or hindrance and without toll or charges: And provided further, That the dam shall be so constructed that the Government of the United States may at any time construct in connection therewith a suitable lock for navigation purposes, and may at any time, without compensation, control the said dam so far as shall be necessary for purposes of navigation, but shall not destroy the water power developed by said dam and structures to any greater extent than may be necessary to provide proper facilities for navigation, and that the Secretary of War may at any time require and enforce, at the expense of the owners, such modifications and changes in the construction of such dam as he may deem advisable in the interests of navigation: And provided further, That in case any litigation arises from the building of said dam, or from the obstruction of said river by said dam or appurtenant works, cases may be tried in the proper courts, as now provided for that purpose in the State of Minnesota and in the courts of the United States; but nothing in this act shall be so construed as to repeal or modify any of the provisions of law now existing in reference to the protection of the navigation of rivers or to exempt said structures from the operation of same.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, I would ask the gentleman if this bill is reported from any committee?

Mr. LIND. It is unanimously reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It is reported by my colleague [Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota].

Mr. PAYNE. It has not been considered by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, has it?

Mr. LIND. No.

Mr. PAYNE. Is it approved by the War Department?

Mr. LIND. It is in the exact language approved by the War Department.

Mr. PAYNE. Which is written in the amendment?

Mr. LIND. It is.

Mr. PAYNE. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LIND, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. HULL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for field maneuvers of the Army and militia—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of State submitting an estimate of appropriation for marking the boundary line between the Territory of Alaska and the Dominion of Canada—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the chairman of the United States Government Board, Louisiana Purchase Exposition, submitting an estimate of appropriation for rent of temporary quarters in Washington for certain exhibits—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of the journals of the twenty-second legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona—to the Committee on the Territories.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending an immediate appropriation for purchase of site for Federal building at Los Angeles, Cal.—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HEMENWAY, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the printing clerk of the Senate to $2,500 while held by the present incumbent, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE RELATIVE TO PANAMA, ETC.

Mr. CULBERSON. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to inform the Senate whether all the correspondence and notes between the Department of State and the legation of the United States at Bogota, and between either of these and the Government of Colombia for the construction of an isthmian canal, and all the correspondence and notes between the United States and any of its officials or representatives or the Government or Panama concerning the separation of Panama from Colombia have been sent to the Senate, and if not, that he be requested to send the remaining correspondence and notes to the Senate in executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. LODGE. Let it go over.

Mr. CULLOM. I think I shall have to object to its consideration to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rule.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not fully hear the resolution read. I think it had better go over for to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed and go over under the rule.

JUDGMENTS IN INDIAN DEPREDATION CASES.

Mr. BAILEY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be directed to transmit to the Senate a list of judgments of the Court of Claims for Indian-depredation cases rendered up to the time this call reaches his office, and requiring appropriations at the present session of Congress, not already transmitted.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 9308) permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River between the counties of Wright and Sherburne, in the State of Minnesota, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 9658) to provide for the withdrawal, free of duty under bond, from the Louisiana Purchase Exposition of any articles and materials donated to incorporated institutions established for religious, philosophical, educational, scientific, or literary purposes, or to any State or municipal corporation, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. 8748) for the relief of Serenus Kilbourne was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SNAKE RIVER BRIDGE, ALASKA.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3341) authorizing the city of Nome, a municipal corporation organized and existing under chapter 21, title 3, of an act of Congress approved June 6, 1900, entitled "An act making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes," to construct a free bridge across the Snake River at Nome City, in the Territory of Alaska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not rise to object to the consideration of the bill, but I should like to have the privilege of making a statement, occupying a few minutes, touching the order of business in the Senate.

Rule VIII provides that—

> At the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar of bills and resolutions, and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock; and bills and resolutions that are not objected to shall be taken up in their order, and each Senator shall be entitled to speak once and for five minutes only upon any question; and the objection may be interposed at any stage of the proceedings, but upon motion the Senate may continue such consideration; and this order shall commence immediately after the call for "concurrent and other resolutions," and shall take precedence of the unfinished business and other special orders. But if the Senate shall proceed with the consideration of any matter notwithstanding an objection, the foregoing provisions touching debate shall not apply.

Now, Mr. President, the Senate has been in session, I think, about six weeks since the commencement of the regular session, and during those six weeks the Calendar has not been proceeded with a single day under the provisions of that rule.

I do not expect, Mr. President, to interrupt the debates, interesting as they are, which are going on in the Senate, but I wish to give notice that I shall watch an opportunity, day by day, if the opportunity shall present, to ask the Senate that it shall give some consideration to the Calendar, as it is provided that the Senate shall give consideration to the Calendar.

We have now a very considerable Calendar. Take, for instance, the very arduous committee of which I chance to be chairman, the Committee on the District of Columbia. We have reported a large number of bills. I do not feel like getting up day after day and asking unanimous consent to have those bills considered, but unless something is done to facilitate the ordinary business of the Senate the Calendar will not be reached possibly for weeks to come.

I should wish, Mr. President, that if no Senator is prepared to speak to-day on the pending resolutions we might devote an hour or two to the Calendar this very day. But I apprehend that the business of the Senate will be occupied otherwise. I simply want to have it understood that I shall take it upon myself, if no other Senator does, to urge at every opportune moment the fact that we ought not to neglect the Calendar for the purpose of indulging even in debate on very important questions that are agitating the country at the present time.

I simply wish to make this statement so that if I shall be somewhat importunate hereafter it will be understood what my purpose is in being so.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I am much pleased that the Senator from New Hampshire has given this notice. In the last Congress, at the request of many Senators, I took upon myself the same rôle, and I did push, in season and out of season, for the consideration of the Calendar. The result was that long before the end of the session we cleared up the Calendar, and Senators were not obliged to watch for a chance to get through particular bills.

I am very glad the Senator from New Hampshire, who is an old and experienced Senator and knows parliamentary law, who knows how business can be done here, has consented to take upon himself the charge of this matter, and I hope whenever other business is not pushing and pressing he will keep the Calendar before the Senate in the morning hour. Then he will find and we will find that in two or three months, as soon as other matters are out of the way, we will have cleared up the Calendar, and Senators will have gotten their bills through without having been obliged to watch for every chance.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has the floor. Does the Senator from South Carolina rise to the request made by the Senator from Minnesota for the consideration of a bill?

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Minnesota. If we begin the matter of going to the Calendar upon special requests, I do not know how long it will last. The business I have is purely morning business, and I should like to finish it, if he will allow me take the floor and get up my resolution. If the Senator will permit me, of course I will then yield to him and others who are importunate about getting special measures through. I make the suggestion to the Senator, and ask his consent to that arrangement.

Mr. NELSON. I have no special objection to the course proposed, Mr. President, but this is a local bill, relating to Alaska, providing for a bridge, and I am very anxious to secure its early consideration.

Mr. TILLMAN. The subject I want to call up has had some debate on it and will likely lead to more, but I think it is a very important matter. We left it dangling in the air on our last day.

Mr. NELSON. The bill has been brought before the Senate, and it will take but a minute to dispose of it. I suggest to the Senator that he allow the bill to go through.

Mr. TILLMAN. If it takes no debate, I will consent.

Mr. NELSON. It will take no debate at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill which the Senator from Minnesota desires to have acted upon will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in section 1, page 2, line 11, after the word "prescribe," to insert:

> Any bridge constructed under this act shall be a lawful structure, and shall be known as a post-road, for which no higher charge shall be made for the transportation of mail, troops, and munitions of war or other property of the United States over the same than the rate per mile charged for such transportation over the railways leading to said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHANGES IN RAILWAY TARIFF RATES.

Mr. QUARLES. The Senator from South Carolina, who I believe has the floor, has very kindly consented to yield to me that I may ask simply that a matter of morning business be transacted.

Some days ago I introduced a Senate resolution, No. 87, requesting certain information from the Interstate Commerce Commission. I asked for its present consideration, and an objection was made. Therefore the resolution went over. It has fallen under this mass of resolutions here. It is the desire of the Committee on Interstate Commerce to have the resolution referred to it. They have agreed to take prompt action upon it. I therefore ask unanimous consent that resolution No. 87 be taken from the Calendar and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the resolution submitted by him directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to furnish the Senate a report showing the principal changes in railway tariff rates, etc., be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. The Chair hears no objection, and that order is made.

COLLECTION DISTRICT OF INDIANA AND ILLINOIS.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who, I understand, has the floor, has kindly consented to permit me to call up a bill from the Calendar. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 540) providing for additional officers in the district of Chicago, in the collection district of Indiana and Illinois.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 5, after the words "naval officer," to strike out "and a surveyor for the district. The naval officer shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year, and the surveyor shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year" and insert "for the district, who shall perform the duties pertaining to that office, and shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year;" so as to make the bill read:

> Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be in the district of Chicago, in the collection district of Indiana and Illinois, in addition to the officers now provided for by law, a naval officer for the district, who shall perform the duties pertaining to that office, and shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for an additional officer in the district of Chicago, in the collection district of Indiana and Illinois."

REPUBLICS OF NICARAGUA AND COSTA RICA.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire demands the regular order. The Chair lays before the Senate the first resolution in order, which will be stated by title.

The SECRETARY. Senate concurrent resolution No. 32, submitted by Mr. MORGAN January 11, 1904, declaring it to be the duty of the United States to open negotiations with the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica as required under the act of June 28, 1902, providing for the construction of an interoceanic canal.

Mr. TILLMAN. In the absence of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] who introduced the resolution, I ask that the resolution go over, retaining its place and its privileges.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

HOURS OF LABOR IN EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution the title of which will be stated.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. STEWART on the 11th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be instructed to inquire what amount of money would be necessary to provide sufficient additional clerks in the Departments to avoid the necessity of extending the hours of labor from 4 to half-past 4 o'clock.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to modify that resolution by inserting the word "requested" for the word "instructed;" so as to make it a request to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has the right to modify the resolution. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the resolution as modified?

Mr. COCKRELL. Why should not that resolution go to the Committee on Organization, Conduct, and Expenditures of the Executive Departments?

Mr. STEWART. I prefer that it shall go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think that the Committee on Appropriations has anything to do with that subject. It is a matter of management of the Executive Departments and not of appropriations. We have a specific committee for that purpose, which has not much business to do, and this would be a very good job for them to undertake.

Mr. STEWART. I think this a question on which we want the experience of the Committee on Appropriations, because the question of the number of clerks is determined by that committee. So I think that is the committee that should consider and investigate this matter. The Senator from Missouri will know all about it without any investigation.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then I shall say in advance that I believe in the theory of more work and less clerks, instead of more clerks and less work.

Mr. STEWART. Very well; but my preference is that the resolution should go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COCKRELL. As the object of the resolution seems to be to increase the number of clerks, I think it had better go to the committee I have indicated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH COLOMBIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate——

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. TILLMAN. There seems to be a considerable number of these resolutions which have come over from day to day. I was about to ask, and will now ask, if I may be allowed, that by unanimous consent they stay on the table, as nobody seems to be fretting about them or trying to dispose of them.

Mr. LODGE. Some of these resolutions can be disposed of. We have already disposed of one or two.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Two have been disposed of. The one referred to by the Senator from South Carolina may be reached very shortly.

The Chair lays before the Senate resolution numbered 81, submitted by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] on the 12th instant, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 81, requesting the President to send to the Senate all correspondence between the Secretary of State and Colombia relating to that country since November 4, 1903, and which has not been heretofore transmitted.

Mr. LODGE. That is covered substantially by the resolution introduced to-day. I suggest that it go over without losing its place.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that that may be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over without losing its place.

RELATIONS WITH COLOMBIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] on the 12th instant, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 82, informing the President that the Senate favor and advise the negotiation of a treaty with the Republic of Colombia to satisfactorily determine and adjust all differences between the United States and Colombia growing out of the recent revolution in Panama, etc.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I have unfortunately been unavoidably absent from the Senate for some time. I am not able to-day to address to the Senate the few remarks which I desire to submit upon the resolution. For that reason, I ask that the resolution may go over until some time in the near future, possibly to-morrow, when I shall desire to be heard upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia asks that the resolution may go over, retaining its place. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

SAFETY APPLIANCES ON RAILROADS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate Senate resolution numbered 86, submitted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] on the 13th instant, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 86, directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to send to the Senate copies of all petitions, etc., received relative to relieving common carriers by railroad from, etc., any of the provisions of safety-appliance acts, etc.

Mr. KEAN. When that resolution was heretofore under consideration I made a motion to refer it to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the pending motion.

Mr. KEAN. But I do not see the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] present; and so I ask that the resolution may go over, retaining its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks that the resolution may go over, retaining its place. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

RELATIONS WITH COLOMBIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] on the 13th instant as a substitute for the resolution submitted by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. The resolution will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 88, that in any claim which the Republic of Colombia may make against the Republic of Panama for indemnification or loss of territory or increased burden of the debt of said Republic of Colombia, the President is requested to tender his best offices toward the peaceful adjustment of all controversies that have arisen, etc., between the two Republics.

Mr. LODGE. That should go over with the resolution of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. That, as I understand, is a substitute for the resolution offered by me. After the statement made at the time it was offered, that it was to accompany my resolution and take whatever direction was given to that by the Senate, I think it should go over.

Mr. HALE. Let it take the course to which the Senator has referred. It was offered as a substitute for the resolution of the Senator from Georgia, and may go over, retaining its place, as his resolution has gone over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

PAWNEE INDIAN SCHOOL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate Senate resolution numbered 93, submitted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] on the 15th instant, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution (S. Res. 93) directing the Secretary of the Interior to transmit to the Senate the original or copies of all charges, etc., relating to the superintendent and other employees of the Pawnee Indian School, etc.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to make another parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to know under what rule these resolutions get their status or condition of precedence. The resolution I am trying to call up was introduced on the 11th of December and is numbered 51. I notice that at least half a dozen resolutions that were subsequently introduced, and lie behind it, have been called up ahead of the one which I had on the table, which has been already called up once, but not completed. I am not complaining, but I just want to know how this thing goes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerks are instructed to present to the Chair the resolutions in the order in which they are offered in the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then mine would have precedence over all of these, because it is numbered 51 and was offered on the 11th of December.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the Senator's resolution was laid on the table, in the ordinary way of a resolution offered on the floor, and placed on the Table Calendar.

Mr. TILLMAN. But my resolution was offered, as the RECORD shows, subject to call at any time, and was so recorded on the Calendar.

Mr. MCCOMAS. If the Senator will permit me, I see his resolution was introduced December 11, and on January 22 it was modified. Perhaps that may explain its present status.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then I stand corrected. I am not complaining, and we shall get to my resolution after a while, I suppose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are two Calendars, so far as that is concerned, for the guidance of the presiding officer here. One is a Calendar of resolutions that are presented and lie on the table subject to the call of the Senators offering them; the other is a Calendar of resolutions which go over under the rule, and the Chair is informed that the Senator's resolution is one which he asked might lie on the table.

Mr. TILLMAN. Subject to call, the same as the rest of the resolutions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; not the same.

Mr. COCKRELL. They are not all subject to call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Some are not subject to call at all.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then, if I am displaying my ignorance, I am not at all mortified, because I just want to understand how resolutions Nos. 84 and 93, and all that kind of thing, can get ahead of No. 51, and how a resolution offered in January can get ahead of one offered in December. I should like to have light on that point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not undertaking to prevent the Senator——

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Chair does not imagine for a moment that I have a suspicion or even the scintilla of a suspicion that the Chair is unfair. He is incapable of such a thing.

Mr. BATE. As the resolution which was last laid before the Senate by the Chair is the one offered by my colleague [Mr. CARMACK], who is not now present, I ask that it may go over without prejudice, retaining its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

NICARAGUA CANAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] on the 20th instant, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate concurrent resolution 36, declaring that obedience to law requires that the President shall proceed to open negotiations with Nicaragua and Costa Rica for a treaty for a canal on Nicaragua route.

Mr. GORMAN. That is a resolution submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], is it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that it may go over without prejudice, retaining its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and that order is made.

RECESS APPOINTMENTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina desire to call up his resolution now?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do. I ask unanimous consent that Senate resolution No. 51 be taken from the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to take from the table a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. TILLMAN December 11, 1903, and modified January 22, 1904, as follows:

Whereas article 2, section 2, of the Constitution of the United States provides:

"The President shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint * * * all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law;"

And further:

"The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session;"

And

Whereas it is known that certain officers appointed during the recess of Congress from March 4 last to November 9, and whose appointments were not confirmed by the Senate, are now in possession of and exercising the powers and functions of said offices: Be it

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee of the Senate be, and it is hereby, authorized and instructed to report to the Senate—

First. What constitutes a "recess of the Senate," and what are the powers and limitations of the Executive in making appointments in such cases.

Second. What legislation is necessary to prevent the holding of an office by any person or persons whose commissions issue or are held by Executive exercise of unlawful authority, if any there be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none; and it is before the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, on Friday last, when this resolution was under discussion, we did not complete the statement of the case or the bringing clearly before the Senate just what the actual facts are. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] called attention to the fact that so far as he knew or understood no one on that side of the Chamber stood sponsor for or believed in the legality or constitutionality of a constructive recess. He declared, as I remember, that the appointments under discussion were not subject to any such criticism. I believe that is a correct statement of the Senator's position. If I misunderstood him, why, of course, he will correct me. The Senator also stated that an examination of the papers in the cases would disclose at once and clearly, beyond dispute, just what the status is.

Mr. HALE. I stated that I took no stock in this theory of a constructive recess, and doubted whether many Senators did, and that I did not know that the President, in sending in nominations, had committed himself to that proposition. Afterwards some question arose as to the two nominations, those of General Wood, and of Mr. Crum, of the Senator's State, which would be representative cases, covering the point which the Senator from South Carolina suggests. I stated that from an examination made, not by myself, but by some one else, I believed that the nominations sent in by the President did not disclose that he had committed himself in any way to the proposition—the new proposition, the strange proposition—of a constructive recess, but that they were sent into the Senate as original nominations.

I have since looked at the records, and they disclose as to these two cases, this condition: That after the long recess between March and November, the nominations of General Wood and Mr. Crum were sent in, referring to their being recess appointments, but that the nominations sent into this session—the regular December session—disclose nothing of that kind. They are original nominations, without referring to or setting up any question of there being a constructive recess, and we are dealing with them as original nominations.

I have the two nominations here. This is the nomination of Mr. Crum that was sent in after the actual recess, the long recess, between March and November.

William D. Crum, of South Carolina, to be collector of customs for the district of Charleston, in the State of South Carolina, in place of Robert M. Wallace, deceased.

Mr. Crum is now serving under a temporary commission.

Nobody denies that that is right. There had been a real recess, and he held the place under a recess appointment. The nomination shows that.

In December, in this session, when the nomination was sent in—the one we are considering now—it was simply sent in as an original appointment. It reads:

William D. Crum, of South Carolina, to be collector of customs for the district of Charleston, in the State of South Carolina, in place of Robert M. Wallace, deceased.

That is just like any original nomination. So that the statement I made, not on my authority, but on the authority of others, on Friday last is borne out.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to ask the Senator from Maine if this nomination gives Mr. Crum the right to hold office?

Mr. HALE. That is not the question we are considering. That is a question which will come before the Comptroller when a claim is made for salary.

Mr. MITCHELL. But what is the Senator's opinion?

Mr. HALE. I have not looked into the matter.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have.

Mr. HALE. I am willing to leave it to the Comptroller. He is a man of large experience, undoubted integrity, and great industry, and I have no doubt he will make short shrift, if the question comes before him, of any such thing as a constructive recess.

Mr. BAILEY. May I ask the Senator from Maine a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I agree with the Senator from Maine that it is a question for the Comptroller so far only as the salary is concerned, but that it is a question for the Senate whether a man pretending to be an officer is exercising the duties of an office without the proper appointment. The only way in which the matter can be presented to the Comptroller is on the question of salary. I take it that is the smallest part of the question presented here.

Mr. HALE. That does not take it away from the Senate. The Senate does not settle that question.

Mr. BAILEY. Not the question of salary, but I take it that no Senator will agree that the President may appoint men to office and that they may enter upon the discharge of the duties of their offices without the sanction of the Senate when the Senate is in session, and that we should dispose of it all by waiving it back to the Comptroller of the Treasury to say whether he shall pay the salaries or not.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will bear in mind that we are not now considering the nominations. We are not in executive session. We have neither Mr. Crum nor General Wood before us.

Mr. BAILEY. I perfectly understand that.

Mr. HALE. This is only, you may say, an academic discussion.

Mr. BAILEY. My sole purpose was simply to dissent from the idea that the President could appoint a man during the session of the Senate, and that man, before he was confirmed by the Senate, could enter upon the discharge of his duties and hold the office, and that the Senate had no further concern about the matter. I simply dissent from that view of the question.

Mr. HALE. My point was only that the nomination—and my search into the documents, going to the executive room of the Secretary's office and getting the original appointment—shows that when the President sent in these nominations to this session he did not do what he did in the executive session after the actual recess. So that my original point holds good that the President does not, from anything we see here, commit himself to the theory or the proposition of a constructive recess when the two sessions were merged on the same point of time. As I said the other day, the Constitution is not a pitfall for the unwary; it does not deal in devices and surprises; but it is a plain open way. The recess provided for in the section and article of the Constitution which was read the other day is an actual recess, in which business can be done and when offices can be filled, as they ought to be filled in order to run the Government. But the discussion the other day showed that all the precedents were against the theory of a constructive recess when there is no actual recess.

All I wanted to say was that I have looked at the records and they do not show that the President sent these nominations in at this session with reference to the recess appointment, as he did in the November session. That is all that I wanted to say. We do not adopt the idea that there has been a recess at all; we are not committed to it, and there is nothing in the papers to show that the President has committed himself, and I hope he has not committed to that proposition.

Mr. TILLMAN. The papers themselves show.

Mr. HALE. I have the original nominations here, and I refer to them. I do not refer to any mere letter such as the Senator may have, but I have the original nominations, which are official documents, which speak for themselves. I do not know what the Senator has, but he can have nothing so fundamental and so conclusive as the original nominations sent by the President to this body.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, as I said the other day, this is too great a question to be decided from any partisan standpoint. I deprecated the entry into it of any partisan feeling or any supposed necessity that Senators here must express themselves and take attitudes in accord with their party affiliations. It is too serious and too great a question to be thus belittled. I reiterate and I want to emphasize, so far as I am able, that the purpose and feeling I have is simply to guard the ancient rights, the constitutional rights, of the Senate in dealing with appointments which it has to confirm.

In order to get the facts more clearly before the Senate, I will produce the letters here. I have a copy of one and the original of the other. Here is a copy of the correspondence that occurred in regard to the Crum appointment. On January 8 I addressed the following letter to the Secretary of the Treasury:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., January 8, 1904.

Hon. LESLIE M. SHAW,
Secretary of the Treasury Washington, D. C.

SIR: Will you please give me an answer to the following questions:

First. When was Dr. W. D. Crum appointed collector of customs at the port of Charleston, S. C.? The date and character of his commission.

Second. Is he now in office? If so, under what authority of law?

Third. Did a new commission issue under the last appointment? If so, give date.

Fourth. Has he been required to give a bond under his last appointment?

Fifth. Has he ever received any compensation for his services, and if not, why not?

An early reply will be appreciated by,

Yours, respectfully, B. R. TILLMAN.

I received this answer from Secretary Shaw:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 8, 1904.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Replying to your note of January 8, relative to Dr. W. D. Crum, collector of customs at the port of Charleston, S. C., I beg to advise:

The vacancy occurred in the fall of 1902, possibly in September, during a recess of the United States Senate. Congress regularly convened in December of that year, and on December 31 Mr. Crum's nomination was sent to the Senate. The Senate adjourned on the 4th of March without confirming the nomination. On the 5th of March, the Senate being in special session, the nomination was again sent in. The Senate adjourned without confirming, and on March 20, 1903, the President issued a temporary commission, under which Mr. Crum entered upon the discharge of his duties. He was allowed no compensation, however, in view of the statute prohibiting it under similar circumstances. I doubt not you are familiar with the statute. The Senate again convened in special session in November, 1903, and the nomination was again sent in, but was not acted upon.

Now, here is the point:

At the adjournment of that special session, and at precisely 12 o'clock noon of the first Monday in December, 1903, Mr. Crum was reappointed:

In other words, at the precise minute when the one session died and the new session began, the extra session disappearing, the regular session began.

At the adjournment of that special session, and at precisely 12 o'clock noon of the first Monday in December, 1903, Mr. Crum was reappointed, and his nomination is now pending before the United States Senate. Under this last appointment Mr. Crum has again given bond and is in discharge of the duties of the office, but without compensation, for reasons heretofore referred to.

Very truly, yours,

(Signed) L. M. SHAW.

Hon. B. R. TILLMAN,
United States Senate.

Now, Mr. President, if the President has not given his sanction to the constructive recess, there are two things to which I would like to call attention. The first is that it was entirely unnecessary for the Secretary of the Treasury to notify me, as he has done, that this last appointment was made precisely at 12 o'clock, between the two sessions; secondly, that under the unbroken custom and, I believe, the law, no man can hold a position and discharge its functions under such circumstances.

The appointment last March, during the recess after the Senate adjourned, was entirely legitimate and lawful. When the Senate adjourned at the special session, which began on the 9th of November, without taking action, that temporary appointment, which is mentioned here, expired by limitation of law, and under the Constitution and the laws, as I understand them, there was no authority anywhere and there is no authority now to give him another appointment, except one such as the Senator from Maine contends for, which does not give him the office, which does not induct him into office, which gives him no commission, because without the consent of the Senate he can not hold that office lawfully. We have to confirm him. He has to pass the gamut of the votes of this body in order to be able to hold that office and discharge its functions.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. HALE. Now, the Senator is discussing what will result from certain conditions about holding office and drawing pay. That is something which, while we can inquire into it and take an interest in it, does not come before us by the nomination that the President sent in. The nomination which I have just read is dated December 7, the day we assembled here. That it was made the minute this session began gives it no special rights. It is an original appointment. It is not made as the appointment was made at the beginning of the extra session, referring to the recess appointment, but is an original appointment, like anything else. That is all we have before us. I do not know what the result will be. That has to be fought out before the Comptroller.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have here a resolution, of which the Senator has failed to take cognizance, which seeks to have the Judiciary Committee investigate and report and give their authoritative opinion as lawyers as to what are the powers and rights of the Senate and what are the powers an drights of the Executive under these very conditions.

Moreover, I saw in the morning paper—I think it was this morning; certainly within the last two or three days—a cablegram from the Philippines from "Leonard S. Wood, major-general." He is not a major-general, but he is exercising the power and functions of a major-general, and with no lawful authority.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to having the resolution referred to the Judiciary Committee and let them look up this question of constructive recess; but I do not need that. My mind is as clear as the daylight——

Mr. TILLMAN. But the Senator proposes no remedy. We all agree as to our legal rights as Senators and the powers of the Executive. At least I believe we do. But the Senator is endeavoring—I will not say that either—but he appears to be willing to let the rights of the Senate drop into abeyance or become eclipsed and to let the will of the Executive go on in filling offices contrary to the law and the Senate sit idly by.

Mr. HALE. That is not my position at all.

Mr. TILLMAN. I may be mistaken. I am merely giving his attitude as I understand it.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to the committee reporting, but I do not need that. My mind is so clear that there is no such thing as a constructive recess that I do not need that. All I say is that the papers which we have before us and all that will be in executive session are these original appointments, which make no reference to a recess appointment, and do not in any way by themselves commit the President to that proposition. I should be sorry to learn that the Chief Executive had adopted the strained construction, of which I have never been able to find the father, that there is a constructive recess when the two sessions come together at the identical moment of time.

As I have repeatedly said, the Comptroller will make short work of that when it comes before him, and we have not got it before us by the nomination. I have no objection to the Senator getting the Committee on the Judiciary to report if he wants to, but I could guess what their report would be.

Mr. TILLMAN. Undoubtedly; but, Mr. President, we are not considering Mr. Crum's confirmation here. If so, these doors would be closed and we would be in executive session. Mr. Crum is a mere incident—a very slight, insignificant incident—to a great constitutional question which I am trying to present here.

I am opposing the establishment of a precedent which will destroy the rights of the Senate in regard to this supposed confirmation that is necessary. If the President can do this, he can fill the most important office in the Government, and until the Senate takes up the matter and rejects it, or takes him by the throat as a predecessor of his was taken by the throat, the thing goes on, and that is the whole sum and substance of it.

I reiterate that I am not undertaking to attack the individual here, and I am not considering the individual. I am considering the constitutional condition and the destruction of one of the foundation principles of the Government.

The Senator from Maine says he does not know who is the author of the constructive-recess idea. I happen to have here a newspaper. Newspapers are not always reliable, especially when they talk about me. [Laughter.] But nevertheless they are the best light we can get, and I can gather from the statements made here a considerable amount of light on this question. I read from the Evening Star of this city of December 8. It is, as you all know, a strong Republican paper and more than friendly to the President.

RECESS COMMISSIONS—LIVELY CONTROVERSY OVER GENERAL WOOD'S NOMINATION—NO CHANGE IN STATUS—OFFICERS, IF CONFIRMED, WOULD RANK FROM YESTERDAY—MANY EXPERT OPINIONS OFFERED—WAR DEPARTMENT WILL TEST THE CASE BY PAYING OFFICERS' SALARIES.

According to the officials of the War Department the ending of the special session and the beginning of the regular session of Congress has made no change in the status of General Wood and the 167 other army officers whose nominations failed of action at the special session. What the President has done is for the purpose of protecting the interests of all the officers concerned in the event that there was actually a constructive recess even for an almost inappreciable period of time.

As has been stated by the Star, the President and officials of the War Department hold to the view that there was a recess, and, in order to meet that situation, recess commissions bearing date of yesterday were issued by the President to General Wood and all the other officers concerned. These commissions were in the form of commissions issued when Congress is not in session and are identical, except in the matter of date, with the recess commissions issued to the same officers in August last when the vacancies to which they were appointed occurred. Such commissions hold good until the expiration of the succeeding session of Congress.

I hope the Senator from Maine will call for those papers if they are not in the possession of individual officers. We can address a communication to the Secretary of War and ask him to tell us whether there is anything in this but mere idle reportorial gossip; whether it is a statement of the facts.

Mr. HALE. Now, the Senator can do that, but he has not done it. He can address a Senatorial inquiry to the Secretary——

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not like to have the burden of upholding the dignity of the Constitution and the time-honored traditions of this Government fall upon such weak shoulders as mine. I have an Ajax on my left and a Titan on my right, and between the two they ought to sustain this proposition and let me out.

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senator would permit me to finish my sentence.

Mr. TILLMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. He is always so courteous and so kind, especially to me, that I beg his pardon if I have seemed to be rude.

Mr. HALE. The Senator need not do that. All I was saying was that he indicated what he might do——

Mr. TILLMAN. No; I was asking the Senator from Maine to do this very thing.

Mr. HALE. Perhaps I will. I can do it. He can or I can introduce a Senatorial resolution, asking the Secretary of the Treasury what has been the actual course in this case and whether Mr. Crum has been installed in this office.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was asking the Senator to write to the Secretary of War——

Mr. HALE. The Senator does not let me finish my sentence.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will sit quietly down.

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senator would occasionally restrain what I may call these ebullitions. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], who has had experience in it, says to me it is the impetuosity of youth. We are all in love with the impetuosity of youth. Most of us have left it far behind, except the Senator from South Carolina. If he will hold on a moment, I will say what I started to say.

If the Senator or I choose to direct a Senatorial inquiry to the Secretary of the Treasury, asking him if Mr. Crum has been installed in this office since the extra session expired and by what method it has been done, and under what claim of law or under what commission, the Senate will pass the resolution at once, whether he introduces it or whether I do, and then we will have the subject-matter before us. But I repeat that under the nominations sent by the President to this session of Congress it does not appear that there is any reference to a recess appointment.

I do not object, as I said, to have this matter go to the Committee on the Judiciary and let them look it up, but I am afraid that, by asking the Committee on the Judiciary to consider the question, the Senator has unduly magnified the importance of this fugitive, stray, nebulous proposition, that somewhere somebody has fathered the proposition that when two sessions come together at the same point of time there is a constructive recess. And yet I will not object to his request.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Maine is so adroit a fencer and he takes things so much for granted sometimes, as a matter of course, and is apparently so innocent of guile or suspicion of guile in others—I will relieve the Senator from the suspicion of guile in himself—I take that back, I modify that——

Mr. HALE. Of course.

Mr. TILLMAN. He has had such extensive experience with public men, he has been so great a part and instrument in this Government that of course he has rather a bucolic or youthful understanding of human nature, and to that extent he is sometimes given to the pooh-poohing of things as a most effective weapon of defense, and undertaking to belittle this case and set it aside as unworthy of consideration, I think, is rather a ruse than any actual opinion of his that it can be determined in that way.

I was reading from the Star a very interesting presentation of what is asserted to be a fact. According to this paper—

In the Administration's view the original commissions expired at the end of the special session of Congress—

That was on the 7th of December—and the new commissions will run until the expiration of the pending session provided no action is taken in the meantime on the nomination before the Senate.

In addition to the issue of these recess commissions direct to the officers, the President has also sent in their regular nominations to the same offices.

We would seem to have a double-barreled commission here, a special, so-called constructive recess appointment, and then this simple, lawful subsequent appointment, the one which we are considering and which we will consider in executive session.

In doing which he has simply followed an unbroken custom in the case of all recess appointments. These nominations are made out to take effect at the time of the original recess appointments in August last, and if they are confirmed will smooth out all the complications that have arisen over the existing anomalous situation. The action taken by the President in issuing the recess commissions is designed to continue General Wood and the other officers in the rank and grade to which they were promoted last August, thus clothing them with the authority of the higher rank and giving them the benefit of the higher pay and emoluments.

In view, however, of the contention that there was no legal recess of Congress yesterday for which these commissions were issued—

In other words, that there was not any break; we simply merged and went on, and according to the view of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], which he tentatively suggested the other day, these officers would hold until the end of this session, because there was absolutely no interregnum between the two. However, the Senator did not stand by that contention, I believe.

But you see that this whole subject has been very thoroughly canvassed and considered at the War Department, and of course by the Attorney-General and the other legal advisers of the President, and it is not a case which we can pooh-pooh and dismiss with a wave of the hand. A precedent is being established, and we can stop it only by calling attention to it and having the Senate announce authoritatively its view or by having Congress reenact a statute which unfortunately is not now on the statute books.

Secretary Root has decided to bring the question before the accounting officers of the Treasury as soon as possible. He has therefore instructed Paymaster-General Bates to make a test case by paying the salary of the higher grade to one of the officers concerned to cover a portion of the period in dispute, and forward the accounts to the Auditor of the Treasury for the War Department and the Comptroller of the Treasury with as little delay as possible. It will then be for those officers to determine the legality of the payment, and their decision on that point will also cover the much-mooted question as to whether there was or was not a recess of Congress just before the beginning of the present session.

Now, I want to ask my great friend and lawyer and constitutional headlight whether he is willing to allow a subordinate in the Treasury Department to pass upon the constitutionality of these appointments and leave the Senate dawdling around here, neglecting its duty, and too cowardly apparently to discharge it and to claim its rights and maintain them?

Mr. HALE. I can not hinder a subordinate in the War Department, or the Treasury Department, or the Secretary of either Department trying this. I do not propose——

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me to read a statute?

Mr. HALE. Wait a moment until I get through. I have no objection to their trying it, but it will not avail; if it is not law, nothing will come of it; there will be no salary drawn; there will be no legal incumbency of the office if the Comptroller, who has to settle this question, decides that there is no law for these men holding the office; that they can not get the pay. Then the understrapper, to whom the Senator refers, whether in the Treasury Department or in the War Department, will be up against the law. But we shall have nothing to do with it. The Comptroller will settle that question. We can express our opinion about it. The Senator, as I said before, can have an inquiry directed, but it is not before us now except in this way, that the Senator wants the Committee on the Judiciary to consider this subject. I will not go over that again.

But I do not know anybody who is responsible for the Star article. I never heard of it before. I was unfortunate enough not to read it at the time; perhaps I ought to have read it. But it never occurred to me that the Star or the Post or the Times is the exponent either of the Congress or the President. If I followed newspaper articles, as the Senator says about articles that deal with him personally, I do not know where I would be. My wits would go woolgathering all the time. I do not know of anybody who is responsible for that article, and I do not know whether these Treasury and War Department underlings have undertaken to do this; but if they have, and there is no law for it, they will get what we call in the country their come-up-ance when the matter reaches the Comptroller.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will read section 1761 of the Revised Statutes:

No money shall be paid from the Treasury as salary to any person appointed during the recess of the Senate to fill a vacancy in any existing office if the vacancy existed while the Senate was in session and was by law required to be filled by and with the advice and consent of the Senate until such appointee has been confirmed by the Senate.

It looks to me like the Comptroller would simply have to draw that, and he certainly will not pay any money. But that does not relieve the situation at all.

Mr. SPOONER. What section is it?

Mr. TILLMAN. Section 1761. Now, we will see who some of these understrappers are, according to the Star reporter:

Secretary Root and Judge-Advocate General Davis of the Army hold that as there was constructively—an interval between the adjournment of the Senate in special session and its reassembling in regular session the recess commissions heretofore issued lapsed and made necessary the issue of fresh recess commissions.

In discussing the question of a recess, General Davis said that the special session of Congress must have been either continuous or discontinuous. "If continuous into the regular session," he said, "the original recess commissions ran until the expiration of the present regular session. On the other hand, if the special session was discontinuous," said General Davis, "there must have been a lapse of time, no matter how minute, before the beginning of the regular session, which would justify the issue of new recess commissions."

The officials say that the most interesting legal question relates to the standing of the officers promoted and retired upon the promotion of General Wood. The questions to be determined are whether these officers are on the active list or the retired list, and whether they are entitled to the pay of a brigadier-general or colonel, retired, or of a colonel on the active list. These are some of the matters to be determined by the Treasury officials.

Mr. HALE. The Comptroller.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; this is the Star quoting Secretary Root and Mr. Davis.

Mr. HALE. The Treasury official referred to is the Comptroller.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, the Comptroller.

It happened, as I said the other day in quoting the RECORD to show the attitude of the Senate in the past, that certain statutes were placed upon the statute books in 1867, at the very time when the debate from which I quoted was had. I want to read how the Congress which had to deal with Andrew Johnson thought it necessary to make the law over his veto:

SEC. 1769. The President is authorized to fill all vacancies which may happen during the recess of the Senate by reason of death or resignation or expiration of term of office, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session thereafter. And if no appointment, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is made to an office so vacant or temporarily filled during such next session of the Senate, the office shall remain in abeyance, without any salary, fees, or emoluments attached thereto, until it is filled by appointment thereto by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and during such time all the powers and duties belonging to such office shall be exercised by such other officer as may by law exercise such powers and duties in case of a vacancy in such office.

I will read the next two sections:

SEC. 1770. Nothing in sections 1767, 1768, or 1769 shall be construed to extend the term of any office the duration of which is limited by law.

SEC. 1771. Every person who, contrary to the four preceding sections, accepts any appointment to or employment in any office, or holds or exercises, or attempts to hold or exercise, any such office or employment, shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and shall be imprisoned not more than five years, or fined not more than $10,000, or both.

Mr. ALDRICH. That act was repealed long ago.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, I know it was repealed. Otherwise we would have had several of these gentlemen arrested and we would be dealing with the cases in court. But because the act was repealed in 1887, unfortunately, I say, repealed, we find that a President is now attempting to exercise authority under the constructive recess idea; that a hundred and sixty-seven officers of the Army now hold commissions contrary to law, contrary to the rights and powers, and I may say the duties of the Senate, and at least one little collector of customs down in my part of the world is in office with the commission issued under an appointment made precisely at 12 o'clock, between the two sesions of the Senate. We are face to face with the inevitable conclusion that a precedent is being established, which can only be brought up standing, and checked and destroyed, or have its force and effect destroyed by the Senate taking some action to protect itself.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I ask this question for the sake of information. Will the Senator from South Carolina state just what has been done in the case of Crum? Has there been a commission issued to him? Does the Senator know that fact?

Mr. TILLMAN. I only know what the Secretary of the Treasury writes. I have not gone to Mr. Crum——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Secretary of the Treasury, as I listened to his letter——

Mr. TILLMAN. I know this: Mr. Crum is in office.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But what I am trying to get at is——

Mr. TILLMAN. I know Mr. Crum has been required to give a new bond in order to meet the conditions which were disclosed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] in the decision of the Supreme Court in regard to an officer thus occupying an office and his bondsmen not being responsible. This is all I know. I know Crum is in the collector's office. I know he must have a commission or he would not be there, or else the Secretary of the Treasury is grossly neglecting his duties. I take it for granted that that is so.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is an inference of the Senator from South Carolina that Crum has a regular commission.

Mr. TILLMAN. Undoubtedly. It is obliged to be; it could not be otherwise. Who can accuse the Hon. Leslie M. Shaw of palpably and willfully neglecting his duty or even of a transgression of law, unless he is backed by the President? I would not for a moment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. As I heard the letter, I thought there was an absence of the statement that there had been any commission issued to him, and that is the reason why I asked the question.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to know, then, how he exercises the functions and powers of collector without a commission?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not know. I thought perhaps the Senator did.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then we had better ask the Secretary of the Treasury to be a little more explicit. I asked him this question, but he did not give me that explicit answer which my inquiries would have warranted. What I am after is to try to know what we are going to do about it—to discover what action the Senate will take to brush aside all this new-fangled doctrine of a constructive recess and protect itself and protect the country from such a transgression and abuse of power.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will read that letter again. Let us hear it.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is as follows:

Washington, January 8.

Mr. BACON. What was the inquiry directed by the Senator, to which that is a reply?

Mr. TILLMAN. I read my letter to the Secretary. Possibly it will answer the Senator's purpose if I hand him both letters and let him read them. They will both be in the RECORD; but I can read them again.

Mr. BACON. Just as the Senator pleases.

Mr. TILLMAN. My inquiry was as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., January 8, 1904.

Hon. LESLIE M. SHAW,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Will you please give me an answer to the following questions:

First. When was Dr. W. H. Crum appointed collector of customs at the port of Charleston, S. C.? The date and character of his commission.

Second. Is he now in office? If so, under what authority of law?

Third. Did a new commission issue under the last appointment? If so, give date.

Fourth. Has he been required to give a bond under his last appointment?

Fifth. Has he ever received any compensation for his services; and if not, why not?

An early reply will be appreciated by,

Yours, respectfully, B. R. TILLMAN.

The Secretary answered on the same date, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 8, 1904.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Replying to your note of January 8, relative to Dr. W. D. Crum, collector of customs at the port of Charleston, S. C., I beg to advise:

The vacancy occurred in the fall of 1902, possibly in September, during a recess of the United States Senate.

I will note here that the duties of the office were performed in the interim by the deputy collector.

Congress regularly convened in December of that year, and on December 31 Mr. Crum's nomination was sent to the Senate. The Senate adjourned on the 4th of March without confirming the nomination. On the 5th of March, the Senate being in special session, the nomination was again sent in. The Senate adjourned without confirming, and on March 20, 1903, the President issued a temporary commission, under which Mr. Crum entered upon the discharge of his duties. He was allowed no compensation, however, in view of the statute prohibiting it under similar circumstances. I doubt not you are familiar with the statute. The Senate again convened in special session in November, 1903, and the nomination was again sent in, but was not acted upon. At the adjournment of that special session and at precisely 12 o'clock noon of the first Monday in December, 1903, Mr. Crum was reappointed, and his nomination is now pending before the United States Senate. Under this last appointment Mr. Crum has again given bond and is in discharge of the duties of the office, but without compensation, for reasons heretofore referred to.

Very truly, yours,

L. M. SHAW.

Hon. B. R. TILLMAN,
United States Senate.

Mr. HALE. Now, right there——

Mr. TILLMAN. Right there it says, "Mr. Crum has again given bond and is in the discharge of the duties of his office, but without compensation." It does not say whether he got a commission or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is reciting what took place. What took place at the beginning of the undoubted recess after March was that the new appointment was made and a commission issued. The Secretary says, when he comes to deal with the conditions at the end of the extra session, that an appointment was made at precisely 12 o'clock, and that the Senate now has that before it. That is this appointment which I have read:

William D. Crum, South Carolina, to be collector of customs for the district of Charleston, in the State of South Carolina, in place of Robert M. Wallace, deceased.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

DECEMBER 7.

There is nothing said to the effect that a commission was issued.

Mr. TILLMAN. That would not be stated in any communication of an appointment.

Mr. HALE. He goes further than that. He says that an appointment was made the moment Congress expired, and that the Senate now has it. That is what we have. This is not a recess appointment. It is a regular appointment.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is the only one we have.

Mr. HALE. It is the only one we have.

Mr. TILLMAN. This is the one made at precisely 12 o'clock. It is obliged to be that one, because there is no other.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is it not very clear from the whole correspondence that no commission has been issued this last time?

Mr. TILLMAN. Then it would be very clear that Mr. Shaw is very negligent of his duty and is indictable for malfeasance or misconduct. He states here——

Mr. MITCHELL. The letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, among other inquiries, inquired whether a commission had been issued, and the Secretary replies, "Yes; a commission was issued when the appointment was made in the regular recess."

Mr. HALE. Yes; in March.

Mr. MITCHELL. In March. Then he goes and recites later that an appointment was made at 12 o'clock, and says nothing about a commission having been issued.

Mr. HALE. And the Senate has it now.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senate has it now under consideration. It is very clear, it seems to me, from the correspondence, taken altogether, that no commission has been issued by the President.

Mr. TILLMAN. What is Crum doing in office?

Mr. MITCHELL. I know nothing about that. I know not whether he is in office.

Mr. BAILEY. The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury states that he is.

Mr. TILLMAN. The letter states that he is and that he has given a new bond.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the letter make that statement?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is nearly 2 o'clock. I should like to make a practical suggestion to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator is the most practical man I ever met, and I welcome any kind of a move in the direction of solving this question according to the Constitution and laws.

Mr. ALDRICH. The original contention of the Senator from South Carolina, as I understood him, was that certain nominations had been sent here by the President which were improperly and unlawfully made. That contention, as shown by an examination of the papers, is not correct.

Mr. TILLMAN. I dispute that. I deny it.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is certainly nothing in the nomination made——

Mr. TILLMAN. There is nothing there but the statement that the appointment was made precisely at 12 o'clock, and as that is the only one it follows as a matter of course that it is the one alluded to by the Secretary of the Treasury in his letter; that it was made during this constructive recess, or else Mr. Crum is not nominated now.

Mr. ALDRICH. With the contention that nominations were improperly made the Senate has great concern, of course, but the Senator now discloses a new condition of affairs. He raises a new question, which has no relation to the other that I can see, and that is, that certain persons are improperly holding office. I would suggest that he request the Senate to pass a resolution asking the Secretary of the Treasury to define the status of Mr. Crum, if he is holding the office of collector, and if so, by what right.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have asked him that in the letter.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is certainly no definite answer as to the status of Mr. Crum. So far as the nomination is concerned, it was entirely regular. There is no question whatever that any provision of the law or Constitution has been violated. Now, if there is another question, I would suggest to the Senator that he prepare a resolution asking for this information, and when the information is secured then it will be time enough to discuss punishment, if any, that shall be inflicted.

Mr. TILLMAN. If my friend will permit me, will he do me the kindness to draw such a resolution and submit it to me?

Mr. ALDRICH. No.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, the Senator has suggested that way out, and I know that he knows a great deal more about how to get out of any difficulty than I can possibly ever learn.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from South Carolina does not need any assistance from me.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to know what kind of a commission has been issued to these army officers, and if possible——

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator from South Carolina will permit me to make a suggestion in reply to the Senator from Rhode Island, such a resolution can not be necessary now, because the Senate has before it the official reply of the Secretary of the Treasury to a letter addressed to him by the Senator from South Carolina, in which the Secretary of the Treasury expressly declares that this appointee is now in the discharge of the duties of his office. If the Senator will permit me, I will read the Secretary's very words:

Under this last appointment Mr. Crum has again given bond and is in discharge of the duties of the office, but without compensation, for reasons heretofore referred to.

Now, the Secretary of the Treasury must clearly treat this as an ad interim appointment, as a recess appointment, because unless it be a recess appointment there is no reason for withholding the salary of the official.

Mr. MITCHELL. That law only applies to a recess appointment.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly. But the papers presented to the Senate by the Senator from South Carolina raises another very grave question, and that is the right of the President to appoint a man to office while the Senate is in session and to permit that man to enter upon the discharge of the duties of that office before his confirmation. The Secretary of the Treasury brings himself within a controverted point, an absolute controversy. I cordially agree with the Senator from Maine that there can be no such thing as a constructive recess between two sessions of Congress, one beginning the instant at which the other expires. But still there are some grounds for controversy, though not much for argument on that point.

However, when the papers are presented here intended to show that the President does not commit himself to the Secretary of the Treasury in support of a theory of a constructive recess, he does present to the Senate another and a very grave question as to his power to induct men into office during the session of the Senate before they have their appointments confirmed.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas clearly confuses nominations and appointments in his mind. At least that is the impression——

Mr. BAILEY. Not at all. I am contending that the President can nominate during the session of the Senate, but the nominee can not enter upon the discharge of the duties of the office until the Senate confirms the appointment. I make no question about his sending the nomination to the Senate, but the question I make is that he sent a nomination to the Senate regular, so far as the papers appear, but the fact develops from a letter written by the Secretary of the Treasury that his nominee is now in the discharge of the duties of the office, although his nomination was made while the Senate was in session and the Senate had not confirmed it.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the appointment made in that case was in the nature of a recess appointment, he would be clearly entitled to compensation.

Mr. BAILEY. No; he clearly would not be.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is just the reverse of that. The withholding of the salary only applies to recess appointments.

Mr. BAILEY. He would be clearly entitled to enter upon the discharge of his duties, but without salary until he was confirmed.

Mr. ALDRICH. Still the salary would date back——

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Until the time of the original appointment.

Mr. BAILEY. That is true.

Mr. ALDRICH. The papers show, if they show anything, that Collector Crum is now discharging the duties of the office. Under what kind of a commission or by virtue of what kind of appointment, I submit, is not clear from the Secretary's letter.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me to make a suggestion? The Secretary of the Treasury distinctly states that Crum is in the discharge of the duties of the office under an appointment made exactly at 12 o'clock on the 7th day of December. Now, one of two things must necessarily follow from that statement. The Secretary of the Treasury regards that as an ad interim appointment, and therefore the appointee had the right to enter upon the discharge of the duties before confirmation. That must be one alternative. On the other hand, he must contend that it is not an ad interim appointment, but a regular appointment sent during the session into Congress, and that under it the appointee has the right to enter upon the discharge of his duties prior to confirmation. Now, one of those two cases must necessarily be true. There is no escape from it.

Mr. HALE. The Secretary says——

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, as to the first, I understand there is no Senator in this Chamber who has risen in his place and taken the position that an appointment under those circumstances, as an ad interim appointment, can be defended. All declined to take that position and to defend that position. Therefore they are remitted to this proposition. If it was not an ad interim appointment, is there any possible justification under the law for the Secretary of the Treasury to recognize as a duly constituted incumbent one whose name had been sent into the Senate during a session of the Senate, but who has not been confirmed?

Now, Senators may take either horn of the dilemma they wish.

Mr. ALDRICH. What I was trying to bring to the attention of the Senator from South Carolina was that this is not a constitutional question at the present moment which demands the action or consideration of the Senate, but that we should first ascertain the precise facts. We should ascertain the entire facts. It is not to ask the Judiciary Committee for facts.

I would suggest to the Senator from South Carolina, if he is not willing to take the other course, that he allow this resolution to go to the Committee on the Judiciary, and they can take up not only the suggestions made by the Senator, but all the cognate facts and questions relating to this matter and consider them. Certainly the Senate could not pass the resolution in the form in which it is now presented, because it contains implications and insinuations which the Senate would not be willing to make; but if the Senator will allow the resolution to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary I have no doubt he could have the matter investigated as to both the law and facts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the Calendar of General Orders.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senate will indulge me a moment, I ask that the resolution may go over and retain its place on the table. I think if I get an opportunity I will ask the Senate to pass a resolution later specifically calling for all the facts, and be prepared to have no further dispute as to what really is the status. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the resolution may go over, retaining its privileges.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the resolution shall go over without prejudice. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. TILLMAN subsequently said: Mr. President, in furtherance of the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], made a while ago, that additional information be obtained in regard to the matter then under discussion, I have prepared a couple of resolutions and ask unanimous consent that they may be taken up and considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution he how submits. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, instructed to send to the Senate information by way of reply to the following questions:

First. What is the date of the first appointment of W. H. Crum to be collector of customs at the port of Charleston?

Second. What is the date of the second appointment, and was any commission issued thereunder?

Third. What is the date of the third appointment and its character and limitations?

Fourth. What is the date and circumstances of the fourth appointment? Has any commission been issued under it? If so, under what authority of law? Is Crum now in office; and if so, under what authority of law?

Mr. TILLMAN. I now present another resolution of a similar character, calling upon the Secretary of War for certain information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina offers a resolution and asks for its present consideration. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, instructed to send to the Senate information in the nature of answers to the following questions:

First. What officers in the Army were appointed during the recess of the Senate occurring between March 19, 1903, and November 9, 1903? Were commissions issued these officers; and, if so, of what character? What officers failed of confirmation during the special session beginning November 9 and ending December 7, 1903? Have these officers been reappointed, and have commissions been issued to them? If so, what is the character of the commission and what authority of law is there for its being issued?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, in the absence of the acting chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. PROCTOR], I will ask that the resolution go over.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator had been in the Chamber he would know that these resolutions have been suggested after a long debate covering this whole subject, and that it was the consensus of opinion on all sides that it was necessary to get this information in order to proceed intelligently.

Mr. WARREN. Has the Senator had any conference with the acting chairman of the committee, the Senator from Vermont, regarding it?

Mr. TILLMAN. No, sir; but we had the entire matter up this morning.

Mr. WARREN. Well, Mr. President, it strikes me that a matter as broad as that and referring so directly to the duties of the Committee on Military Affairs ought not to be acted on in the absence of the acting chairman of the committee. So, unless there is some special reason to the contrary, I will ask that the resolution may go over.

Mr. TILLMAN. There is some special reason. As I said, if the Senator had been in the Chamber he would understand it. This whole subject has been under discussion during nearly the entire morning hour. I assure the Senator there is no trick in it; there is no effort to corkscrew any information. It was done in furtherance and at the suggestion and advice of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. WARREN. Of course, I know that the Senator would not propose anything with a trick in it. It was a mere matter where I thought somebody ought to speak for the committee. If there are other members of the Committee on Military Affairs who believe that it has been properly considered by that committee, I, of course, would have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution will go over under the rule.

Mr. TILLMAN. Do I understand the Senator from Wyoming to object?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It goes over under the rule.

GRAVES OF CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2081) to provide for the appropriate marking of the graves of the soldiers and sailors of the Confederate army and navy, and for other purposes.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to ascertain the locations and condition of all the graves of the soldiers and sailors of the Confederate army and navy in the war between the States, 1861 to 1865, who died in Federal prisons and military hospitals in the North, and who were buried near their places of confinement; to acquire possession or control over all grounds where said prison dead are buried not now possessed or under the control of the United States Government; to cause to be prepared accurate registers in triplicate, one for the superintendent's office in the cemetery, one for the Quartermaster-General's Office, and one for the War Record's Office, Confederate archives, of the places of burial, the number of the grave, the name, company, regiment, or vessel, and State of each Confederate soldier and sailor who so died, by verification with the Confederate archives in the War Department at Washington, D. C.; to cause to be erected over said graves white marble headstones similar to those recently placed over the graves in the "Confederate section" in the National Cemetery at Arlington, Va., similarly inscribed; to build proper fencing for the preservation of said burial grounds, and to care for said burial grounds in all proper respects not herein specifically mentioned.

That for the carrying out of the objects set forth herein there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to appoint some competent person as commissioner to ascertain the location of such Confederate graves not heretofore located, and to compare the names of those already marked with the registers in the cemeteries, and correct the same when found necessary, as preliminary to the work of marking the graves with suitable headstones, and to fix the compensation of said commissioner, who shall be allowed necessary traveling expenses.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 18, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one" and insert "two;" so as to make the paragraph read:

That for the carrying out of the objects set forth herein there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FORAKER the title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the appropriate marking of the graves of the soldiers and sailors of the Confederate army and navy who died in northern prisons and were buried near the prisons where they died, and for other purposes."

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, now let us have the regular order, and take up bills on the Calendar in their order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine demands the regular order. The regular order is the Calendar.

NATIONAL APPALACHIAN FOREST RESERVE.

The bill (S. 887) for the purchase of a national forest reserve in the southern Appalachian Mountains, to be known as the National Appalachian Forest Reserve, was announced as first in order on the Calendar.

Mr. LODGE. I think that bill had better be passed over.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the bill may be passed over. The Senator who reported it is not here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

IMPROVEMENT OF BRIDGEPORT (CONN.) HARBOR.

The bill (S. 1681) to provide for the modification of the project for the improvement of Bridgeport Harbor, Bridgeport, Conn., was announced as next in order; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the Secretary of War to make such modification of the project for the improvement of Bridgeport Harbor, Bridgeport, Conn., adopted in the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, as in his judgment the commercial interests of the harbor require. But the cost of completing the project as fixed by the act shall not be increased by reason of such modification.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOLICITING SEAMEN AS LODGERS.

The bill (S. 2261) to amend section 4607 of the Revised Statutes was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4607 is hereby amended by adding thereto the following:

"This section shall apply to vessels of the United States and to foreign vessels."

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect one month after its passage.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, submitted by Mr. HANNA December 19, 1903, as follows:

The Senate Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2261) to amend section 4607 of the Revised Statutes, having considered the same, report it back with an amendment to the title, and as thus amended recommend its passage.

The bill is drawn in accordance with the following suggestions of the Commissioner of Navigation in his annual report for 1903:

"An act specifically extending the provisions of section 4607 of the Revised Statutes to foreign vessels would, doubtless, curtail the opportunities of sailors' boarding-house keepers and crimps. That section provides:

"'R. S. 4607. If, within twenty-four hours after the arrival of any vessel at any port in the United States, any person, then being on board such vessel, solicits any seaman to become a lodger at the house of any person letting lodgings for hire, or takes out of such vessel any effects of any seaman, except under his personal direction, and with the permission of the master, he shall, for every such offense, be punishable by a fine of not more than $50, or by imprisonment for not more than three months.'

"The section was originally section 63 of the act of June 7, 1872. In Grant v. The United States (58 Fed. Rep., 694) the United States circuit court of appeals held that this act was made to govern the conduct of American seamen within the territorial limits of the United States and on board American vessels, and does not apply to foreign vessels. While section 4601, Revised Statutes, since repealed, was at issue in that case, the decision appears to be equally applicable to section 4607. The decisions quoted in the decision in Grant v. The United States, reprinted in Appendix O, explain the unsatisfactory condition of the law. If Congress shall see fit to render section 4607 applicable to foreign as well as to American vessels successful enforcement of the law will still depend on the cooperation of foreign masters and foreign authorities with the authorities of the United States. By the act of March 31, 1900, section 4606 of the Revised Statutes was amplified to cover all vessels instead of vessels of the United States. As a rule, runners for sailor boarding houses are, in consequence, kept from vessels until the quarantine and customs inspections have been passed.

"The measure proposed will keep them from vessels for twenty-four hours after arrival. The period is none too long for full compliance with all our laws relating to navigation, customs, and immigration, without interference from runners whose operations on board create conditions unfavorable to the successful prosecution of commerce. The measure proposed does not involve the abstract question of 'the right to quit work.' It places foreign vessels on the same plane as American vessels. It will not, of course, stop desertions after the lapse of twenty-four hours. In the last analysis desertions from British ships in American ports must still depend more upon the disposition of the officers of British ships than on any other one cause."

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 4607 of the Revised Statutes, relating to soliciting seamen as lodgers."

REVENUE CUTTER AT HONOLULU, HAWAII.

The bill (S. 901) providing for the construction of a vessel of the first class for the Revenue-Cutter Service, to be stationed with headquarters at Honolulu, Hawaii, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $225,000 for the construction, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, of a steam vessel of the first class for the Revenue-Cutter Service, to be stationed with headquarters at Honolulu, Hawaii.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIFE-SAVING STATION NEAR MONTARA REEF, CALIFORNIA.

The bill (S. 1748) to provide for the establishment of a life-saving station at Half Moon Bay, south of Point Montara and near Montara Reef, California, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY D. HALL.

The bill (S. 469) to restore Henry D. Hall to the Revenue-Cutter Service was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, in line 5, after the words "on the," to strike out "permanent waiting orders" and insert "retired;" in line 7, after the words "officers on," to strike out "permanent waiting orders" and insert "the retired list;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and is hereby, authorized to commission Henry D. Hall, late captain in the United States Revenue-Cutter Service, a captain on the retired list of said service, with the pay of that grade provided by law for officers on the retired list.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to hear the report of the committee read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. MARTIN December 10, 1903, and read as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 469) to restore Henry D. Hall to the Revenue-Cutter Service, having considered the same, report it back with amendments, and as amended recommend that the bill pass.

A like bill was favorably reported from this committee in the Fifty-seventh Congress and passed the Senate. The report then made is appended and adopted as the report of the committee on the present bill. It is as follows:

"The facts in the case fully appear in the petition of Captain Hall and the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, which are appended and made a part of this report.

"To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

"May it please your honorable bodies, your petitioner respectfully represents that he formerly held a commission as captain in the Revenue-Marine Service of the United States and was dismissed therefrom in what he considers to have been a summary and unjust manner.

"He therefore prays your honorable bodies to give consideration to his case and (for the reasons your petitioner herein sets forth) direct his restoration to the position aforesaid.

"To this end your petitioner would respectfully submit the following statement:

"In the spring of 1861 your petitioner (then 27 years of age) held an excellent position as first officer of the ship Joshua Mauran, then lying at the port of New Orleans loading for Europe. Flattering as the prospect was before him in the merchant marine, your petitioner considered it his duty to join those who, at the call of their country, volunteered their services to put down the rebellion, and he accordingly resigned his position, and, hastening to his home in the State of Maine, immediately enlisted in the first regiment of volunteer infantry raised in that State under President Lincoln's first call for 75,000 men, and in the following August (the term of enlistment of the three-months men having expired) your petitioner (at the solicitation of the late Hon. William Pitt Fessenden) was appointed to a third lieutenancy in the Revenue-Marine Service, after having passed the prescribed examination for that position, and in February, 1863, was promoted to a second lieutenancy (after a second examination), and in May, 1864, after passing a successful examination for the position of first lieutenant, was promoted to that grade.

"In 1868 your petitioner received his commission as captain without examination, such having been the custom and it always having been considered that the successful passage of the first lieutenant's examination was sufficient proof of an officer's competency to command, and in proof of this your petitioner would state that he was ordered to the command of various vessels prior to his promotion to a captaincy.

"In November, 1870, your petitioner was ordered to appear before a board of officers (his own peers in rank, who had never passed any examination for their own positions) for an examination as to his professional qualifications for his then present status, and as a result of said examination (which was purely theoretical in its character) was summarily dismissed the service, but not until five months subsequent to the examination; your petitioner having during this time been retained in command of a valuable vessel with many officers and men under his control, on the New England coast, in the worst season of the year and on special duty, having for its object the assistance of vessels in distress, and while performing this duty he was successful in saving the crew of a wrecked vessel (eight in number) who otherwise must have perished.

"The action of this board appears to your petitioner to have been in the last degree unjust, inasmuch as only a portion of the list of captains was called up for examination, the dividing line having been drawn by certain officers of your petitioner's own grade, who carefully drew the same below their own names, thereby leaving many officers, themselves included, exempt from this test of professional competency.

"Your petitioner would respectfully refer to his official record at the Treasury Department during nearly ten years of uninterrupted service, not a shadow of a charge having been made against him either as a gentleman or officer, of which fact, indeed, your petitioner was assured by the honorable Secretary of the Treasury subsequent to his expulsion.

"In this connection your petitioner desires to mention that among the various services rendered by him while an officer of the Revenue Marine Service was the saving of the revenue steamer Reliance from capture after the death Capt. Thomas M. Dungan, during an action with the enemy in August, 1864, in Wicomico River, Virginia, and valuable assistance rendered to vessels in distress while in command of the revenue steamer Moccasin, at Wilmington, N. C., letters commendatory of which are on file at the Treasury Department.

"Your petitioner having during his term of service retained the confidence, respect, and protecting influence of the late Senator Fessenden up to the time of his decease, and having zealously endeavored to pursue such a course as would meet the best interests of the service, he had no reason to fear that (being deprived of influential friends by death) he would be subjected to the ordeal of a partial board only to lose a position he had so legitimately earned and so studiously endeavored to retain by strict adherence to duty and careful observance of official orders and interests.

"With regard to this examination to which your petitioner was subjected, he would respectfully state that the manner in which it was conducted convinced him most conclusively of its marked partiality and left him satisfied that, however meritorious his examination might have proved, the final report of the board would place him below the required standard.

"In view of the foregoing, and more especially of the fact of your petitioner having been examined by his own peers in rank, who had themselves never been subjected to a similar examination, and this, too, more than two years after his commission had been confirmed by the United States Senate, he can not but look upon the whole proceeding as illegal, arbitrary, and unjust, and he would beg that, in consideretion of his general record, extending over a period of nearly ten years, he may be restored to his position and placed on the permanently waiting-orders list, as the sight of one eye is entirely gone and the other seriously impaired by the constant use of binocular glasses at night while on blockade duty on the Chesapeake from 1861 to 1864, and he is also a sufferer from chronic rheumatism, contracted by exposure during the same period.

"Your petitioner is constrained to believe that his dismissal was solely attributable to the fact that he was without the necessary influence to control the action of this board, and in support of this assertion I invite the most searching investigation of my official record at the Treasury Department during my whole term of service, including certificates of examinations before boards composed of officers who were my superiors in rank, and therefore fully competent to conduct such examinations, which I have always contended that the board of 1870 was not.

"Your petitioner desires to state further that since the date of his dismissal he has never ceased his effort to obtain some redress for the great injustice that he feels has been done him, by personal appeals to the Treasury Department and otherwise; failing in all which, he makes this appeal to your honorable bodies in the hope that you may take favorable action thereon.

"And your petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray, etc., while he remains,

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"HENRY D. HALL,
"Late Captain, U. S. R. C. S."

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not know that ultimately I shall oppose the passage of that bill, but I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice. I should like to look into it a little further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a letter in the report from the Secretary of the Treasury, which has not yet been read.

Mr. HOPKINS. Recommending the passage of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. Very well. I withdraw my objection, then, and I ask that the letter be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will resume the reading of the report.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the report, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 10, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of Senate bill 2178, etc.

The following record of Mr. H. D. Hall is drawn from the files of this Department, from which it will be seen that as an officer of the Revenue-Cutter Service it was a good one, and that he reached a captaincy after passing the required examinations; that he served as such from September 4, 1868, to April 15, 1871, efficiently and without ever having a charge of any kind against him, thus proving his ability to command and his fitness for the commission he held:

Henry D. Hall, late captain in the Revenue-Cutter Service, was, on August 6, 1861, commissioned third lieutenant; September 6, 1861, to Baltimore, to report to Captain McGowan; September 17, 1861, to the Hercules, at Baltimore, Md.; April 2, 1863, to the Jackson, at Baltimore, Md.; July 13, 1863, commissioned second lieutenant; May 17, 1863, to the Kewanee, at Baltimore, Md. (building); June 4, 1864, to the Reliance, at Baltimore, Md.; July 11, 1864, commissioned first lieutenant; March 23, 1865, to the Kewanee, at New York, N. Y.; August 11, 1865, to the Kankakee, at New York, N. Y.; August 23, 1865, to the Campbell, at New London, Conn.; April 23, 1867, to the Black, at Edgartown, Mass.; April 22, 1868, to the Moccasin, at Wilmington, N. C.; September 4, 1868, commissioned captain; January 28, 1869, to the Vigilant, at Boston, Mass.; May 7, 1869, to the Active, at New Bedford, Mass.; April 15, 1871, dismissed, upon recommendation of a board of examiners.

Before being appointed, and as a prerequisite thereto, and also before his promotions to second and first lieutenant, Captain Hall passed a successful professional examination. Such examinations were not then required of first lieutenants upon being promoted to the rank of captain.

On August 12, 1864, while Captain Hall was serving on the revenue steamer Reliance, that vessel was attacked by a force of infantry and artillery in the Great Wicomico River, Virginia. The commanding officer, Capt. Thomas M. Dungan, was killed, a number of men killed and wounded, and some on boat duty made prisoners. The attacking force was so disposed as to render the vessel's capture imminent in the narrow river. Lieutenant Hall, who succeeded to the command upon the death of Captain Dungan, by his coolness and skill extricated the vessel and brought her away without further loss.

The records show Lieutenant Hall to have been a capable and faithful officer, and contain nothing indicating a lack of qualifications for the grade he held at the time of his dismissal, aside from the recommendation of the board of examiners that he be dismissed.

It further appears that the board making this recommendation was the only board of examiners in the history of the service before whom captains who had attained this rank by faithful and efficient service and the possession of necessary professional qualifications (as ascertained in previous test examinations, as above indicated in this case) were ordered for examination.

I recommend the passage of this bill.

Respectfully,

L. J. GAGE, Secretary.

Hon. W. P. FRYE,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

Mr. HOPKINS. I withdraw any objection to the bill, Mr. President.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the Committee on Commerce have not yet been acted upon. The question is on agreeing to those amendments, which have been read.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move an amendment, to come in at the end of the bill, to insert "from and after the passage of this act;" so that it will be specific that pay is not to accrue until after the passage of the act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANN A. DEVORE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1760) granting a pension to Ann A. Devore; which was, in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twelve" and insert "eight."

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendment of the House of Representatives and ask for a conference with the House on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. BURTON were appointed.

AUSTIN ALMY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 200) granting an increase of pension to Austin Almy; which was, in line 8, to strike out "twenty-four" before "dollars" and insert "twenty."

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendment of the House of Representatives, and ask for a conference with the House on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. FOSTER of Washington, and Mr. TALIAFERRO were appointed.

AMY C. BOSWORTH.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1334) granting a pension to Amy C. Bosworth; which were in line 9, after the word "month," to insert "in lieu of that she is now receiving;" and to amend the title so as to make it read "A bill granting an increase of pension to Amy C. Bosworth."

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

FOREST RESERVE LANDS.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to interrupt the business of the Senate long enough to give notice that to-morrow, after the disposal of the morning business, I shall submit some remarks on the joint resolution (S. R. 30) directing the stay of all proceedings now pending upon any application to enter or patent even-numbered sections of the public lands of the United States in lieu of odd-numbered sections surrendered by any railroad company or its assigns within the limits of any forest reserve.

GENERATING ELECTRICITY FROM COOSA RIVER, ALABAMA.

The bill (S. 1319) authorizing Robert A. Chapman, of Alabama, his associates and assigns, to use the waters of the Coosa River, in Alabama, for the purpose of generating electricity, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes Robert A. Chapman and his associates to erect, construct, and maintain a dam across the Coosa River, in Alabama, at Lock No. 25, 26, 27, or 28, as now indicated by the Government survey of that river, with all other works incident thereto, for water-power purposes for generating electricity, and provides that plans, specifications, and exact location of the dam shall first be submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War, etc.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSION AND MILITARY RELIEF BILLS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, at this time I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow at 4 o'clock the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senator if he will not include the bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs relieving soldiers of charges of desertion? It is usual to consider them along with pension bills.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that at 4 o'clock to-morrow the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension bills and bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs relieving soldiers from charges of desertion. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota has just been talking to me in regard to this matter. I do not know certainly, but it is possible a condition may arise in the Senate which will render it inadvisable to consume to-morrow afternoon in the consideration of pension bills. I have, however, said to the Senator that if to-morrow there shall be nothing pressing for attention in connection with the subject which has been under discussion for some time, so far as I am concerned, I shall have no objection to pension bills being considered. Believing that there will be no trouble about it when the time comes, I do not object now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota that to-morrow afternoon at 4 o'clock unobjected pension bills and bills correcting the military records of soldiers be considered; and that order is made.

LIGHT-SHIP OFF OUTER BAR, BRUNSWICK, GA.

The bill (S. 462) to construct and place a light-ship off the outer bar of Brunswick, Ga., was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia suggested to the Chair that he might wish this bill to go over for the present.

Mr. CLAY. I will state to the Senate, Mr. President, that after a conference I have secured the necessary information and am ready to have the bill taken up and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So that there is no objection to it now?

Mr. CLAY. There is no objection to the bill being passed.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, in line 6, before the word "thousand" to strike out "one hundred," and insert "ninety;" and in line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred," and insert "ninety;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to have constructed and placed off the outer bar of Brunswick, Ga., a light-ship: Provided, That the cost shall not exceed $90,000, and the sum of $90,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for that purpose.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISSUE OF DUPLICATE MEDALS.

The joint resolution (S. R. 9) authorizing the issue of duplicate medals where the originals have been lost or destroyed was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in any case where the President of the United States has heretofore, under any act or resolution of Congress, caused any medal to be made and presented to any officer or person in the United States on account of distinguished or meritorious services, on a proper showing made by such person to the satisfaction of the President that such medal has been lost or destroyed through no fault of the beneficiary, and that diligent search has been made therefor, the President is authorized to cause to be prepared and delivered to such person a duplicate of such medal, the cost of which shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATUE OF COMMODORE JOHN D. SLOAT.

The bill (S. 906) to aid in the erection of a statue of Commodore John D. Sloat, United States Navy, at Monterey, Cal., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $10,000 to aid in the erection and completion of a statue of the late Commodore John D. Sloat, United States Navy, at Monterey, Cal.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONUMENT IN MEMORY OF JOHN PAUL JONES.

The bill (S. 23) for the erection of a monument to the memory of John Paul Jones was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that there shall be erected in the city of Washington, D. C., a statue to the memory of John Paul Jones and to appropriate $50,000 for the purpose of procuring and erecting the statue, with a suitable pedestal, and for the preparation of a site.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REVENUE CUTTER ON NARRAGANSETT BAY.

The bill (S. 131) to provide for the construction and equipment of a revenue cutter for service in Narragansett Bay and adjacent waters was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $225,000 to be expended in constructing and equipping a steam revenue cutter for service in Narragansett Bay and adjacent waters, with headquarters at Newport, R. I.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPOT SITE FOR REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The bill (S. 1380) to provide for a site for a depot for the Revenue-Cutter Service was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire a suitable site upon which to establish a depot for the Revenue-Cutter Service, and appropriates therefor the sum of $30,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 492) to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Diocese of Washington" was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAKE SUPERIOR AND MISSISSIPPI CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

The bill (S. 711) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to fulfill certain treaty stipulations with the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and the Mississippi, and making appropriation for the same, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report in this case be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. CLAPP December 11, 1903, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred Senate bill 711, reports the same favorably and recommends that it be passed.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 15, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated the 27th instant, submitting report on S. 4283, "A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to fulfill certain treaty stipulations with the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and the Mississippi, and making appropriation for the same," which was referred to the Department on the 5th instant for a report thereon; also copy of a letter from the Department, dated April 19, 1900, reporting on a similar bill, and the recommendation therein made is hereby renewed.

The attention of the committee is also called to Document No. 97, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, Senate, and to Report No. 8, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session, Senate, which contains full information on the subject.

Very respectfully,

THOS. RYAN, Acting Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, November 23, 1903.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by your reference of the 17th instant, for report, of S. 711, being a bill "To authorize the Secretary of the Interior to fulfill certain treaty stipulations with the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and the Mississippi, and making appropriations for the same."

In reply I beg to state that the claim of these Indians was fully investigated in 1879, under a resolution of the House of Representatives, by a subcommittee (a full report of which is to be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 8, p. 3, and appendix, 45th Cong., 3d sess., p. 134), and said committee found, upon data obtained from the records of the Treasury Department and the Office of Indian Affairs, that the amount of treaty funds covered back into the Treasury was $81,702.61 and that the difference in value of the annuities paid in currency instead of coin was $18,670.39, or a total principal of $100,373, and the Department, in a report to the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, under date of April 19, 1900, recommended, for reasons given in said report, that that amount be appropriated, which recommendation is hereby renewed.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK,
Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 5, 1903.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by your reference of the 1st instant, for report, of S. 1833, being a bill "Conferring upon the Court of Claims authority to hear and determine certain claims of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota."

In reply I beg to state that on the 28th ultimo a report was submitted to your committee on S. 711, a bill "To authorize the Secretary of the Interior to fulfill treaty stipulations with the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and the Mississippi," which has the same object in view by authorizing the Department to settle these claims.

As early as 1879, under a resolution of the House of Representatives, these claims were fully investigated by a subcommittee composed of Hon. George M. Beebe and Hon. J. H. Stewart, assisted by I. L. Mahon, Indian agent, detailed to assist in the investigation, the report of which committee will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 8, part 3, Forty-fifth Congress, third session, page 134, and which report is full and explicit. The committee found that $81,702.61 of treaty funds were covered back into the Treasury; that the difference in value of the annuities paid in currency instead of coin was $18,670.39, or a total of $100,373, and the Department, in a report to the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, under date of April 19, 1900, recommended that that amount be appropriated, which recommendation was renewed to your committee on the 28th ultimo.

This claim has been before Congress and the Department for over twenty years and repeatedly recommended for appropriation. It is a just claim and should be paid. The Chippewa Commission, in their report of December 26, 1889, on the negotiations had with the Chippewas of Minnesota under the act of January 14, 1889, states as follows:

"In regard to the treaty of September 20, 1854, it was impossible for us to explain why its plain and unquestioned provisions had not been fulfilled. The Chippewas employed an agent, and a delegation accompanied him to Washington some years ago, and after urgently insisting upon a settlement there was found due to him the sum of $118,400, which had accrued from balances that had been covered into the Treasury between the years 1843 and 1878. This amount has never been questioned as being due under the treaty stipulations, and in the opinion of this commission should be included in regular estimates. We gave the most solemn promises that our best efforts would be given to secure justice in this case, believing that we but voiced the intent of the Government in so doing. After giving assurances that justice would be speedily done and that we would bring the attention of the Department to those claims, the acceptance and signing of the propositions made was nearly unanimous." (See House Ex. Doc. 247, 57th Cong., 1st sess., p. 15.)

Under these circumstances I recommend that S. 1833, referring these claims to the Court of Claims, be not enacted into law, but that S. 711, on which the Department submitted a report on the 28th ultimo, be substituted therefor.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RED LAKE INDIAN RESERVATION, MINN.

The bill (S. 1490) to authorize the sale of a part of what is known as the Red Lake Indian Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to sell, subject to the homestead laws of the United States, to the highest bidder, at public auction, in tracts not to exceed 160 acres to each individual, all that part in the State of Minnesota lying westerly of the range line between ranges 38 and 39 west of the fifth principal meridian, approximating 256,000 acres. It is provided that the land shall be sold for not less than $4 per acre.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEMORIAL BRIDGE ACROSS THE POTOMAC.

The bill (S. 820) to provide for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from Washington to the Arlington estate property was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that the bill had better be passed over without losing its place, as the Senator who reported it is not present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks that the bill may be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

THIEF RIVER (MINNESOTA) BRIDGE.

The bill (S. 708) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to authorize the building of a bridge across Thief River, in the State of Minnesota, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, in line 4, after the word "public," to insert "municipal;" and in line 5, before the word "wagon," to insert "free;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to authorize the proper public municipal authorities to construct a free wagon bridge across Thief River, in the State of Minnesota, at such point and subject to such conditions and restrictions as he may designate and require.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask why the Secretary of the Interior has jurisdiction over this river?

Mr. NELSON. I think the reason is this: At Thief River Falls, where this bridge is to be built, under an old treaty a chief, who was called in the books Moose Tongue, had a section of land awarded to him, and I think one end of the bridge is to rest on his allotment and the other end on the Red Lake Reservation. In other words, both sides of the stream at the point where it is proposed to construct this bridge are on Indian lands. I suppose that is the reason why it is left to the Secretary of the Interior.

I have been at the very point in question. The Thief River is a little nonnavigable stream flowing into the Red Lake River, and there never has been any navigation on it. There are no logs or anything on the stream. I hardly think a bill for a bridge there is necessary, but at all events it is wholly Indian country on both sides.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT YANKTON, S. DAK.

The bill (S. 270) authorizing the Winnipeg, Yankton, and Gulf Railroad Company to construct a combined railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Yankton, S. Dak., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 25, after the word "unbroken," to strike out "or" and insert "and;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under the provisions of this act may, at the option of the corporation building the same, be built as a drawbridge, or with unbroken and continuous spans.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, on page 3, line 11, after the word "drawbridge," to insert "with one or more draws, as the Secretary of War may prescribe;" and in line 23, after the word "signal," to strike out "without unnecessary delay" and insert "for the passage of boats and other water craft;" so as to read:

And provided also, That if a bridge shall be built under this act as a drawbridge, the same shall be constructed as a pivot drawbridge, with one or more draws, as the Secretary of War may prescribe. * * * And provided also, That said draw shall be opened promptly, upon reasonable signal, for the passage of boats and other water craft.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 5, line 13, after the word "removed," to strike out "at" and insert "by:" in the same line, before the word "owner," to strike out "expense of the;" and in line 15, after the word "same," to insert "at their own expense;" so as to read:

And whenever said bridge or its accessory works shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, unreasonably obstruct the free navigation of said river, he is hereby authorized to cause such change or alteration of said bridge or its accessory works to be made as will effectually obviate such obstruction; and all such alterations shall be made and all such obstructions be removed by the owner or owners of said bridge, or the persons operating or controlling the same, at their own expense.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 5, line 22, after the word "touches," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to repeal or modify any of the provisions of law now existing in reference to the protection of the navigation of rivers, or to exempt said bridge from the operation of same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 6, line 14, after the word "bridge," to insert:

and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies.

So as to read:

The United States shall also have the right to construct, without charge therefor, telegraph or telephone lines across said bridge, and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 6, line 17, after the word "That," to strike out "Congress may at any time" and insert the words "the right to;" and in line 18, after the word "act," to insert "is hereby expressly reserved;" so as to read:

SEC. 5. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPRESENTATIVES OF M. F. MERRITT, DECEASED.

The bill (S. 352) for the relief of the representatives of M. F. Merritt, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that the claim of M. F. Merritt for further compensation for the construction of the light-draft monitor Cohoes may be submitted by his personal representatives, within six months after the passage of the bill, to the Court of Claims.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT D. M'AFEE AND JOHN CHIATOVICH.

The bill (S. 175) for the relief of Robert D. McAfee and John Chiatovich was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to release and discharge Robert D. McAfee and John Chiatovich from all obligation to the United States on account of the official bond executed by them on the 14th day of February, 1890, as sureties for the late Elias B. Zabriskie, as melter and refiner of the United States mint at Carson City, Nev.

Mr. SPOONER. This is the bill which was called up the other day?

Mr. STEWART. It is the same one.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is the same bill.

Mr. STEWART. It ought to be passed. There is no question about it. There is nothing to cause any hesitation in its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REIMBURSEMENTS TO CITIZENS OF NEVADA.

The bill (S. 177) to reimburse certain persons who expended moneys and furnished services and supplies in repelling invasions and suppressing Indian hostilities within the territorial limits of the present State of Nevada, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish the Senator from Nevada would give a little bit of explanation of the bill.

Mr. STEWART. In 1860 there was an Indian war in Nevada, in which a large number, seventy or eighty, of our best citizens were killed. Then Captain Stewart came over with Gen. Jack Hays, Jack Hays commanding the volunteers and Stewart the regulars. The supplies were furnished to the Army for the use of the Army acting under Captain Stewart. A commission was appointed by the State to investigate these claims many years ago.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. This occurred in 1862?

Mr. STEWART. In 1860; many years ago. The claim has been here ever since, and it has passed the Senate so often that it has become very familiar.

Mr. SPOONER. I thought I recognized it.

Mr. STEWART. You have heard of it often. I suppose it passed the Senate a dozen times or more. We thought we had disposed of it in the omnibus bill about three years ago, but in making up the bill the clerk took a copy that was first introduced, the old bill, and it did not contain the whole of the claims. So they were not all in that bill. It was agreed to put them all in, but they were not in. Consequently, when the omnibus bill passed these claims were not paid. The House at that session and at the next session reported favorably on these claims, but they have not been paid. I believe that if there is anything which it has been settled ought to be paid, it is these claims. The rule is that the Government shall pay for volunteers who served with and under the direction of regular army officers.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is to pay the heirs or representatives of the original parties?

Mr. STEWART. Their heirs and representatives.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is not to pay the soldiers?

Mr. STEWART. It is not to pay the soldiers. It is to pay persons who furnished supplies.

Mr. CULLOM. How much is involved in the bill?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What is the total?

Mr. STEWART. I think nearly $25,000.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator a question? I have no desire to obstruct his bill. I did not understand it, and the statement seemed a little strange to say that it had passed the Senate about a dozen times.

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. How did it fail in the House?

Mr. STEWART. It failed in the House as bills usually fail there. It was reported favorably, but did not get through the House. Such bills often fail on account of the names; somebody objects because the names have to be read. The bill was never discussed in the House unfavorably.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It also says "whose claims were presented to and allowed by the State board of examiners of Nevada." I did not understand that.

Mr. STEWART. The State board of examiners of Nevada sent them here and they were here examined by the Committee on Claims. They were gone through with in great detail until the committee were satisfied. They eliminated everything that was doubtful.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. When did the State board pass on the claims—a long time ago?

Mr. STEWART. A long time ago.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not recently?

Mr. STEWART. Not recently.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not know that I have any personal objection to the consideration of the bill. There are two or three things about it that struck me enough to make the inquiries of the Senator.

Mr. STEWART. Yes; that is proper.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. First, that it occurred way back, a long time ago.

Mr. STEWART. No; it occurred in 1860.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is forty-three years ago.

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. This is a payment to the representatives, and as the bill carries, as the Senator says, about $25,000 it seemed to me worthy of a little explanation. It seems that the older Senators here are familiar with the claims.

Mr. STEWART. There have been repeated reports—elaborate reports—in both Houses, going into details and giving each item.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator if there has been any payment made by the Government on account of these claims?

Mr. STEWART. On account of a part of them. As I stated, a part of these claims were paid.

Mr. SPOONER. Why were not these claims paid then?

Mr. STEWART. Because the clerk in making up the bill got hold of the first bill. That was years and years ago.

Mr. SPOONER. What clerk?

Mr. STEWART. The clerk of the committee who made it up.

Mr. SPOONER. Where were the Senators and Members from Nevada?

Mr. STEWART. The Senators and Members from Nevada were not present when the bill was made up.

Mr. SPOONER. Were they not present in the Senate and House when the bill was passed in an imperfect condition?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. Why did they not correct it?

Mr. STEWART. Because they did not observe it. I did not notice it, and I generally notice almost everything.

Mr. SPOONER. You do.

Mr. STEWART. I did not notice that they had been left out.

Mr. BAILEY. And you are trying to remedy that omission.

Mr. STEWART. I am trying to remedy it. I am trying to to make amends for my former negligence.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not mean to reflect upon the Senator. Are these claims precisely of the same nature as those that were allowed?

Mr. STEWART. They are of the same nature and were allowed by the same board.

Mr. SPOONER. And proven in the same way?

Mr. STEWART. They were proven in the same way. There is no distinction between them.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If the Senator will allow me, I think he ought to explain why the old bill, the first bill introduced, did not include all the claims that had been allowed by the examiners.

Mr. STEWART. It was because they examined them from time to time. They were several years in making the examination and getting the proof. They sent some to the Treasury Department and some here. After I came here they sent some to me. The claims were scattered. I introduced a bill which passed covering those that came to me, but it did not include all of th m. There was a bill that had passed the Senate three or four times with all of them in. In preparing the bill an old bill was used and it left out these claims that were afterwards collected and put in. They were all the same kind of claims.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator assures us that these have all been audited by the examining board of the State of Nevada?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And that certain claims audited by them have already been passed and paid?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But these have not been paid?

Mr. STEWART. No.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. So these claims are of the same character?

Mr. STEWART. They are of exactly the same character.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to have one other bit of information from the Senator, and that is whether any have been left out now?

Mr. STEWART. No; none have been left out.

Mr. SPOONER. They are all included?

Mr. STEWART. They are all included.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. STEWART. Oh, yes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The report is No. 117.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I confess that I should like to hear the report read. Would the Senator object to having the bill go over for a day or two?

Mr. STEWART. It is up now, and it is very hard to call up bills here.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am not insistent upon it.

Mr. STEWART. This same bill has passed the Senate before.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. All right.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

N. F. PALMER, JR., & CO.

The bill (S. 334) for the relief N. F. Palmer, jr., & Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to N. F. Palmer, jr., & Co. the sum of $63,620.59, in full of their claim for damages and losses incurred in the construction of the armored cruiser Maine, that being the amount recommended to be paid by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. CULLOM. We have been passing bills here every few minutes, making large appropriations, without having the reports read.

Mr. STEWART. There is a report accompanying this bill. Here is the written report.

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to me that in every case of this character we ought to have the report read.

Mr. STEWART. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Before the reading of the report, may I make an inquiry? The sum here appropriated is $63,620.59. That has been recommended——

Mr. STEWART. By the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. By the Secretary of the Navy. The Secretary of the Navy, however, says that if it is proposed to add to that anything for insurance——

Mr. STEWART. We do not propose to do that; we just take what the Secretary recommends.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There is nothing for insurance in the bill?

Mr. STEWART. No.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have no objection to it.

Mr. STEWART. The reading of the report will make it very clear.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the report had better be read.

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The total is $63,620.59?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes. The original claim was $99.000, I believe.

Mr. STEWART. The reason why it was cut down and everything is stated in the report. The report is not very long.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. STEWART December 16, 1903, which is as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 334) for the relief of N. F. Palmer, jr., & Co., report as follows:

A similar bill was favorably reported by this committee and passed the Senate at last session, but reached the House too late in the session to be considered by the House Committee on Claims.

An amendment to the general deficiency providing for the payment of this claim was favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs and passed the Senate as an item in said bill, but failed to pass in conference.

Your committee's report made at last session contains all the facts in this case and is adopted as a part of this report, and your committee recommend that S. 334 do pass.

[Senate Report No. 2577, 57th Cong., 2d sess.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6375) for the relief of N. F. Palmer, jr., & Co., report as follows:

This claim is for the losses and damages sustained by the firm of N. F. Palmer, jr., & Co., of New York City, in furnishing and installing the machinery, including engines, boilers, and appurtenances, of the ill-fated U. S. armored crusier Maine.

The Maine and the Texas, sister ships, were built by the Navy Department in Government navy-yards, the former vessel at New York and the latter at Norfolk. Contracts were made with outside firms for the machinery of these vessels. In both instances there were delays on the part of the Government in the building of the vessels, mainly caused by the inability of the Department to get the armor. The result was that when the contractors for the machinery had the engines, boilers, etc., ready for delivery and installation the vessels were not far enough advanced to receive the said machinery, and the contractors were subjected to unusual expenses and losses by reason of the unreadiness on the part of the Government. In the case of the Texas the builders of the machinery presented a claim to Congress for their losses as aforesaid, and were paid $99,550.30. (See act approved May 7, 1898, 30 Stat. L., 1431.)

The bill under consideration containing the amount claimed by the firm of N. F. Palmer, jr., & Co., $99,661.07, was referred by your committee to the Navy Department for recommendation as to what would be a fair and reasonable compensation for the losses and damages sustained by the firm. The Secretary referred the bill and accompanying papers to the bureaus of Construction and Repair and Steam Engineering, the bureaus under whose direction the work was done, for examination and recommendation. These bureaus, in a joint report, find that the claimants are "justly entitled" to compensation, and after carefully auditing the claim they find $63,620.59 to be "a fair award." Having incorporated this report of the two bureaus in his letter, the Secretary of the Navy "concurs in the views of the bureaus and approves the statement made by them of the amount to which said company is entitled."

In view of the report of the Secretary of the Navy fixing the amount justly due the claimants, to wit, $63,620.59, your committee recommend that said amount be paid the firm of N. F. Palmer, jr., & Co., and accordingly report back S. 6375 with the following amendment:

In lines 5 and 6, in lieu of the words "ninety-nine thousand six hundred and sixty-one dollars and seven cents," insert "sixty-three thousand six hundred and twenty dollars and fifty-nine cents."

With this amendment your committee recommend that S. 6375 do pass.

The letter of the Secretary of the Navy is appended.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 10, 1903.

SIR: The Department acknowledges the receipt of your letter of the 5th ultimo, inclosing a copy of the bill (S. 6375) for the relief of N. F. Palmer, jr., & Co, accompanied by the following documents, which are returned herewith:

House Report No. 2114, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session.
House Document No. 68, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session.
Senate Report No. 154, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session.

The claim of N. F. Painter, jr., & Co. for the sum of $99,661.07 arises from a contract dated April 3, 1889, entered into by that company with the Navy Department for the construction of the machinery for the United States armored cruiser Maine and the delivery and connection of the same on board that vessel. The terms of the contract required that the machinery should be completed and erection on the vessel begun in two years and six months, or by October 3, 1891, and that the erection should be completed one year later, or by October 3, 1892, when it was to be subjected to a four hours' trial with the vessel under way and accepted subject to satisfactory compliance with the contract stipulations as to power, weights, etc.

The hull of the Maine was built by the Government at the navy-yard, New York. The armor was furnished under a separate contract with the Bethlehem Iron Company. The Maine was launched November 18, 1890. By October 3, 1892, as required by the contract, N. F. Palmer, jr., & Co., had completed and erected on board the vessel the main engines, boilers, auxiliaries, etc., except some minor details and the hydraulic machinery for turning the turrets, which could not be installed, as the turrets and conning towers to be supplied by the Government were not yet in place. The contractors had at that time substantially completed their contract.

Owing, however, to the delay in delivery of armor, the Maine was in such incomplete state that it was unsafe to permit a trial under way.

On July 22, 1893, the vessel having reached a suitable state of completion, the Department permitted a dock trial to be made of the machinery, and made a partial payment to the contractors.

The official trial under the terms of the contract took place in Long Island Sound October 17, 1894, and the contractors were informed under date of October 31, 1894, of the preliminary acceptance of the machinery.

The Maine was not ready for the final trial required by the contract to be held six months after the preliminary acceptance, so that the machinery was finally accepted under date of June 21, 1895, after a careful inspection at the dock.

When the machinery was accepted the contractors executed the usual release provided for by the contract, but appended to it the following:

"This release is given by us with the understanding that we are not precluded thereby from presenting our claim to Congress for compensation on account of delays caused by the Government, and for expenses incurred in the care and preservation of machinery during such delays."

The claimants are now barred by the statute of limitations from prosecuting this claim before the Court of Claims.

The Department, having referred your letter and accompanying documents to the bureaus of Construction and Repair and Steam Engineering, quotes below their report in the premises:

"It appears that all the information from the files of the bureaus necessary to a recommendation in this case is contained in the documents herewith.

"We are of the opinion that the claimants are justly entitled to some compensation and that amounts should be allowed on the following points:

"(1) Interest on reservations of contract payments for the time delayed through fault of the Government.

"(2) Expenses of dock trial over and above any expense of such dock trial as is usual and necessary for every contractor to make at his own expense under the fulfillment of his contract.

"(3) Expenses of care and preservation of machinery during the time its acceptance was delayed through fault of the Government.

"(4) Additional cost of insurance and bond required by the contract for the same period.

"It does not appear from these papers, but can be determined from the records of the Department, whether the usual insurance on the machinery installed in the ship was maintained during the period of delay; but if so, its expense is a just claim. The bureaus are of the opinion that the contract requires insurance to be maintained on the trial trip, and therefore the claim should not be allowed.

"(5) The performance of a large and special contract of this nature causes any contractor a large increase in general expense by the maintenance of an extra office force of clerks and draftsmen, experts, foremen, and superintendents of labor, and the claimants are justly entitled to recover for such part of this force as it was necessary to maintain during the period of delay caused by the Government.

"Undoubtedly the best method of settling the amounts due the contractors on those several grounds would be to refer the case to the Court of Claims, where they can be thoroughly and carefully determined, as recommended by the Department in its letter of December 8, 1896; but as such a long time has elapsed already since the contractors were justly entitled to compensation, the bureaus are of the opinion that a definite recommendation should be made to enable the Department and Congress to act without the delay and expense to both parties to the case, which would be further incurred by reference to the court.

"RECOMMENDATION OF AMOUNTS DUE CLAIMANTS.

"1. Interest.—The claim for interest begins to accrue on October 3, 1892, the date of expiration of the contract, which it appears the contractors could have fulfilled but for faults of the Government. The contractors ask for interest at 6 per cent on all amounts then to be paid, viz:

"Nine reservations on previous payments	$66,150
"And the last payment	73,500
"Total	139,650

"Under the schedule of just claims given above, however, interest can not be allowed on the last payment, for the work it was to pay for had not been wholly, nor probably largely, performed, as the record shows.

"Interest on this payment should not be allowed to begin to accrue until it was earned and unpaid. This date is difficult to determine, but injustice will probably not be done by assuming it earned at the date of application for the official trial, April 19, 1893, although considerable work on the turrets was done after that date. The interest account would, therefore, appear as follows:

"From October 3, 1892, date of expiration of contract, to August 5, 1893, date of payment on account ($39,825) after dock trial, three hundred and six days, on $56,150, at 6 per cent, $3,327.44.

"From April 19, 1893, date of application for official trial, to November 7, 1894, date of payment after trial, $58,500, for one year and two hundred and twelve days, $5,548.68.

"From May 7, 1895, six months after the date of payment after official trial, to July 10, 1895, sixty-four days, at 6 per cent, on $15,000, special reservation, $157.80.

"Item 2—Dock trial.—It would seem reasonable to accept as extra expenses to the contractors, say at 80 per cent of what was expended on the official dock trial held under the auspices of the board, $8,653.80×$0.80=$6,925.04.

"Item 3.—Expenses of care and preservation, as rendered by the contractors, are reasonable, $2,513.63.

"Item 4.—Insurance can not be determined by the bureaus.

"Extra bond expense, $1,400.

"Item 5—Extra general expense.—It may be assumed for purposes of this case that the general expenses of the character described above which would have been incurred by the contractors under their contract if performed in the original contract time of three and one-half years would have properly amounted to 10 per cent of the contract price, viz, $73,500, and that these expenses would be increased in proportion to the extension of the time over which the contract actually extended by delays on the part of the Government. This extension liberally construed might be considered to reach the date on which the contractors were informed of the preliminary acceptance of the vessel after official trial, which was November 1, 1894; therefore, the extension was from October 3, 1892, to that date, or two years and one month.

"On this basis the expense would be $$73{,}500 \times \frac{2\frac{1}{12}}{3\frac{1}{2}} = $43{,}750$.

"Total, $63,620.59.

"To which should be added any cost for insurance incurred from October 3, 1892, to November 1, 1894, except that for the trial trip.

"This is considered a fair award."

The Department concurs in the views of the bureaus and approves the statement made by them of the amount to which said company is entitled on account of the matters set forth. Should it be determined to add to said amount an allowance for the cost of insurance, the company should be required to make an authentic statement relative thereto, and the matter should be submitted to the Department for verification, so far as may be permitted by its records, which will show the amount of insurance placed but not the cost thereof to the contractors.

The inclosures with your communication are returned.

Very respectfully,

W. H. MOODY, Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM M. STEWART,
Committee on Claims, United States Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. I have looked over this report a little and having heard the Senator from Connecticut state that the bill is indorsed by a Cabinet officer, Mr. Moody, I am inclined to withdraw my request.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NICARAGUAN CANAL.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to allow me to submit some remarks on a resolution that I offered the other day that I wish to send to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The remarks that I have to submit are in explanation of the resolution and ought to be made before it goes to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the Senate will proceed to the consideration of concurrent resolution No. 36.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand that it is a resolution in reference to the ownership of the territory of the Isthmus.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; it is in relation to the bill I introduced the other day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. MORGAN on the 20th instant, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That obedience to the act of June 28, 1902, known as the "Spooner law," and the preservation and execution of the agreements between Costa Rica, Nicaragua, and the United States, entered into, sealed, and interchanged on December 1, 1900, requires that the President shall proceed to open negotiations with Nicaragua and Costa Rica for a treaty to further arrange and settle the terms, in detail, for the construction of a ship canal on the Nicaragua route.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope there will be no objection to the Senator from Alabama making his speech.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the concurrent resolution is before the Senate. The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the resolution that I offer is a companion piece, I might say, of a bill I had the honor to introduce in the Senate the other day, which has been referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I wish to speak on it in connection with the topic presented in that bill.

This resolution relates solely to the duty of the United States in its dealings with Costa Rica and Nicaragua, and the duty of the President to render respect and obedience to the laws of Congress.

If the Spooner law had never passed Congress, a very powerful claim to the respectful consideration of the President is presented in dealing with the question of the location of the isthmian canal, which is based on two grounds:

First. On the relations of the United States with Nicaragua and Costa Rica since 1848, especially with reference to the enterprise of locating and constructing a canal along the San Juan River and across Lake Nicaragua, and under the conclusive agreements with those States made by President McKinley on the 1st day of December, 1900.

Second. On the ground that the Nicaragua route is the better route and is free from the engineering, sanitary, and political difficulties that already overhang the Panama route with the clouds of pestilence and war. It has no safe engineering basis or prospect of success on which we can confidently rely in building a permanent dam at Bohio, which is the key to the canal. The probabilities are strongly against the prospect of ever constructing a safe dam at Bohio. The speeches of Senator Harris, of Kansas on the Spooner bill, so completely demonstrate this proposition that its further discussion seems to be unnecessary.

The duty imposed upon the President by the Spooner law, which he repudiates and wilfully disobeys, is the question I will discuss, as it is presented in this resolution.

Under the first of these propositions I will present the records, the treaties and other agreements made between Costa Rica, Nicaragua, and the United States, in respect of canal rights and privileges, since 1848, including the McKinley compacts of December 1, 1900, with Nicaragua and Costa Rica.

I will omit any detailed account of the concessions made to private parties by those States since 1846 with the express approval of the United States, only stating that they all correspond in their purposes and general provisions with the treaties made by and on behalf of the United States. In the treaties that failed of ratification by our Senate there was no objection that they were in any sense too restricted in the terms of the concessions, or too costly to meet the requirements of our Government. They were rejected, not for any defects in them, but for political reasons that were involved in our relations with Great Britain under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. For one, I conceive that the abrogation of that treaty is the most important act of the great career of President McKinley, and that, if the Hay-Pauncefote treaty had never been ratified, that Mr. McKinley had struck the Clayton-Bulwer treaty a fatal blow in the compacts he made with Nicaragua and Costa Rica on the 1st day of December, 1900. Those compacts and that treaty could not be reconciled; they could not possibly stand together.

The first canal concession made by Nicaragua to the United States is dated June 21, 1849. It was negotiated and signed by Elijah Hise, who was chargé d'affaires of the United States in Central America.

I will append a copy of this treaty to my remarks. (See Appendix A.) I will quote parts of articles 1, 2, and 11 to show that the grant was in perpetuity, and its scope, which is broader in its advantages than any canal concession ever made to the United States.

ARTICLE I.

It is solemnly agreed between the two high contracting parties that the State of Nicaragua doth grant to and confer upon the United States of America, or to a company of the citizens thereof, the exclusive right and privilege to make, construct, and build within the territories of the said State of Nicaragua, through or by the use and means of any of the streams, rivers, bays, harbors, lakes, or lands under the jurisdiction or within the limits of the said State, a canal or canals, a road or roads, either railways or turnpikes or any other kind of roads, for the purpose of opening a convenient passage and communication, either by land alone, or water alone, or by both land and water, and by means, if deemed proper, of locks and dams, or by any other mode of overcoming and removing the obstructions to the navigation of the said rivers, lakes, harbors, etc., between the Caribbean Sea and the Pacific Ocean, for the transit and passage of ships, steamers, sailing vessels, boats, and vessels of all kinds, as well as vehicles of every sort used for the transportation and conveyance of persons and property and of goods, wares, and merchandise of every description, and the United States or the company which may be formed by virtue of such charters as shall be made as herein provided shall be permitted for the construction of said works to procure, take, and obtain within the territories of Nicaragua all kinds of materials, such as stone, timber, earths, and whatever else may be necessary and proper for the said purposes, free of any charge so far as the said materials may be procured on the lands belonging to said State.

ARTICLE II.

The State of Nicaragua cedes and grants to the United States, or to a chartered company of the citizens thereof, as the case may be, absolutely, all the land that may be required for the location and construction of said canal or canals, road or roads, and which may be necessary for the erection of buildings and houses of every description for the residence and accommodation of the engineers, superintendents, and laborers, and all others employed in the making and construction of the said works, or in governing, managing, and controlling the same, and also for the erection of all such necessary buildings as may be requisite and proper for the purpose of storing away therein all the tools, machines, materials, and property of every description which may be required for the use in the construction, repairing, preservation, and management of said works, and should any portion of the lands or materials, or of the rivers, bays, ports, or their coasts or lakes, and their shores, which may be necessary and proper to be applied for the location and construction of said works and its appurtenances, belong to individuals, the State of Nicaragua agrees and undertakes to extinguish the titles thereto, and to procure the same upon a just principle of valuation for the aforesaid public works. The aforesaid cession and grant shall include a space of not less than 300 feet on each side of the lines of said works, and extending all along the whole length thereof, so that ample space be secured on the margins of said works for the convenient use thereof. The just value of such of said lands and materials as may be private property at the date of this treaty will be paid for by said company.

ARTICLE XI.

The State of Nicaragua agrees that the United States shall have, possess, and enjoy forever the following rights and privileges; that is to say, the right and privilege to pass, convey, transport, and send through all or any part of the territories and dominions of the State of Nicaragua, on land or water, from ocean to ocean, by means of her ports, bays, rivers, lakes, and roads, troops, infantry or cavalry, all kinds of arms, artillery, and munitions of war of all kinds, her public property of every description, public officers, civil and military, consuls, ministers, dispatch agents, her public mail and mail agents, and all other employees of the Government of the United States of America; and the same shall all and each be permitted to pass, be sent, and be conveyed through said State, in any manner, as aforesaid, in the public armed vessels of the United States, and in all such other vessels or vehicles, public or private, which may be in the temporary or permanent employment of the Government of the United States for any of the purposes aforesaid, or in any other way, free from all cost and exempt from all taxes, duties, imposts, charges, or exactions of any kind whatever, either on the persons, property, vehicles, or vessels aforesaid; and all the aforesaid privileges and the said free right of way and of transit shall be held, used, and enjoyed by the United States of America (but not by any other nation, state, or government, except Nicaragua) without cost or charge, and freely, whether the same be made through the dominions and territories of Nicaragua as they now exist, or whether the said troops, munitions of war, public officers, agents, employees, mails, public property, vehicles, and vessels, etc., shall be sent, transported, or conveyed by means of improved navigable rivers, canals, or turnpikes, or railroads, or any other public improvements which may be hereafter made in the State of Nicaragua, either by the Governments or citizens of the contracting parties, or by the governments, citizens, or people of any other nation, kingdom, or country; and the citizens of the United States shall have and enjoy all the rights and privileges of travel, passage, transit, and conveyance for themselves and their property and vessels of all kinds through the territories and dominions of the State of Nicaragua as they now exist, or through such canals or roads, railways or turnpikes, or other improvements as may be hereafter made in said State, upon terms and conditions in every particular as favorable as those enjoyed by the citizens of Nicaragua, or by the citizens of any other nation, kingdom, or country.

This treaty was not laid before the Senate by Secretary Clayton, because he was afraid the Senate would ratify it, and thereby defeat the negotiation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty he was then conducting. I need not comment on that disaster.

Mr. Squires, minister to Nicaragua, a little later negotiated and signed another treaty with Nicaragua, making still more extensive concessions to the United States.

This treaty did not reach Washington until after the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was ratified, on July 4, 1850, and was not laid before the Senate. I pass over the Vanderbilt concessions, that Walker's raid prevented from being carried out, under which the celebrated Childs survey was made. It was to a private company, but is exceedingly liberal in its terms.

Other concessions to private persons were also made by Nicaragua, in succession, that were in like manner liberal and gave the preference in every case to American citizens.

Historical facts taken from the records of the Senate that are of great importance, as to the Panama route, were presented by me in remarks made in the Senate on the 24th of November, 1903, some of which I will again repeat:

TREATIES WITH COLOMBIA MADE BY PRESIDENT JOHNSON IN 1868 AND BY PRESIDENT GRANT IN 1870.

Mr. Seward, when he was Secretary of State, was anxious to enlarge the scope and to include specific canal concessions in the treaty of 1846-1848 with Colombia, knowing that treaty did not confer upon the United States any right to construct or own a canal or railroad on the Isthmus of Panama, and he sent Hon. Caleb Cushing as minister to Colombia, in 1868, to negotiate such an amendment to that treaty.

Mr. Cushing found the Jesuits in control of the Colombian Government, but the Liberals were in the popular majority in the Republic, and he believed they would regain power at an early date. He awaited that event, and in 1869 he concluded a treaty with Colombia under which the United States were to have the sole right of constructing a canal within the territory of Colombia, and for this purpose the Colombian Government was to reserve a strip of land across the Isthmus for the canal route itself and 10 miles on either side.

This was the first canal zone ever projected, and such a zone, with the right of our Congress to legislate for its municipal government, is the necessary corollary to the right of sole ownership and control of the canal by the United States in any foreign country.

To this great American jurist and publicist the world owes the plan that some day will give trouble in Egypt, for the want of such a provision for governing the Suez Canal by the Government that owns the controlling interest.

In Mr. Cushing's treaty the improvement of the value of lots to be held by each Government, in equal alternate parcels, was the chief consideration of the concession.

The canal was to be constructed by the United States Government, and its government and control was also to remain in our hands, and for that purpose our Government was authorized to employ military forces if the occasion should arise.

Colombia was still to retain the "political sovereignty and jurisdiction over the canal and territory appertaining thereto," but only with the proviso that she should not only allow but guarantee to the United States of America the peaceable enjoyment, control, direction, and management of the same; and in conclusion it was declared "that the political obligations herein assumed by the United States of America and the United States of Colombia are permanent and undefeasible." This is just the reverse of the provision of Article IV of the Hay-Concha treaty and the Hay-Herran treaty.

On the 15th of February, 1869, this treaty was sent to the Senate by the President, and it was rejected by that body as being "inadequate."

Mr. Cushing anticipated our present embarrassment under new counsels, but he is out of date—a back number—and I claim the honor of sharing with him the recent criticism of the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the Republic of Panama, just arrived from his native and beloved France, and creditor of the Panama Canal Company and legitimate successor of the king of the Mosquito tribe of Indians, who had interested their enmity toward Nicaragua, has informed the world that I am also out of date as to my information about canal facts.

In 1869, General Grant being President, negotiations with Colombia were again opened by Mr. Fish, Secretary of State, for canal concessions at Panama. He appointed Gen. Stephen A. Hurlburt, the military companion and trusted friend of President Grant, as minister to Colombia, especially charged with this negotiation.

On January 26, 1870, General Hurlburt signed a treaty with Colombian authorities which conferred on the United States the same rights, substantially, with that negotiated by Mr. Cushing. It granted to the United States the right of constructing and operating a canal within the territory of Colombia, but it looked to an international military control of the canal and its zone.

Mr. Fish submitted that treaty to the Senate for ratification or amendment, but was not thoroughly satisfied with its provisions. It was also amended by the Colombian Congress after it had been signed.

I again note the fact that De Lesseps came to Nicaragua and, by offering a large sum of money, got the House of Representatives to vote him a concession, and the Senate wanted a single vote of granting it, but the President of Nicaragua interfered and pointed to the invasion of Mexico by the French and warned the Congress against him. He then turned to Panama and the sea-level canal as his only alternative. It was not his choice, but a desperate ambition that led him to Panama.

Our Isthmian Canal Commission and the French engineers alike have pronounced that a sea-level canal at Panama is a hopeless undertaking, after most careful examination. Yet, Senators continue to attempt to revive such hopes as an argument in favor of the Panama route.

This sea-level prjoect was attempted after the Lull survey had demonstrated (as De Lesseps admitted before a committee of the House, of which the present President pro tempore of the Senate was a member) that if a canal with locks was to be built Nicaragua was the only proper location.

And we have the results before the country, in the rash effort of the French to construct a canal with locks at Panama, on a route selected and surveyed for a sea-level canal, and our engineers have adopted such a survey for a canal with locks, never having run a line of levels between the two oceans over that ground. Contention and dispute have arisen as to the practicability of such a route, in which our expert engineers are the chief wranglers.

If history repeats itself, this folly is still certain of repetition, and its disasters will also be repeated. And fraud being once planted in a great financial scheme that offers premiums to robbers, as has been the case in the Panama Canal project, will reproduce itself, clothed in scandals, as long as it can deceive an eager and unwary public.

The next treaty with Nicaragua for canal rights was the Dickenson-Ayon treaty, ratified June 20, 1868.

This treaty gives the United States the right to construct, use, and own a ship canal through Nicaragua, not as a sovereign, but under the authority and sovereignty of Nicaragua, as will appear from article 14. I will place all the articles from the fourteenth to the conclusion in the appendix to my remarks. (See Appendix B.)

For this concession, far exceeding in breadth the concession of Colombia in the treaty of 1846-1848, no compensation is asked.

The Wyse concession was made by Colombia March 20, 1878. That concession is the mother of all that has occurred since in respect of the two Panama canals. It was made to induce and to enable De Lesseps to organize a company of construction under its provisions. I will attach a copy in the appendix to my remarks. (See Appendix C.)

De Lesseps and his associates organized the "old" Panama Canal Company under the Wyse concession, under permission from Colombia, to reside in Paris, and it began work on the canal in 1880. This privilege granted by Colombia extended to four places—Bogota, Paris, New York, or London—where the Colombian corporation had the privilege of having its residence, but was not subject to the jurisdiction of the country of either of those cities except Bogota, being a mere corporation living by comity within the borders of a foreign state.

Mr. Frelinghuysen, the Secretary of State, was alert as to this French enterprise, and believing that it would lead to failure he opened negotiations with Nicaragua, which resulted in a treaty, dated December 1, 1884, and was sent to the Senate with a view to its ratification.

I will insert a copy in the appendix to my remarks. (See Appendix D.)

This treaty, in articles 1 and 2, provides as follows:

ARTICLE 1. The canal shall be built by the United States of America and owned by them and the Republic of Nicaragua, and managed as hereinafter provided.

ART. 2. There shall be perpetual alliance between the United States of America and the Republic of Nicaragua, and the former agree to protect the integrity of the territory of the latter.

At that time it was not known that Costa Rica had any interest in the San Juan River, because its boundaries were disputed. That question was afterwards settled by Mr. Cleveland as umpire while he was President of the United States.

This treaty created a joint ownership of the canal by the two Governments, but the United States was to construct the canal, and the management of it was intrusted to a board of six managers, three to be appointed by each Government, the chairman of the board to be a citizen of the United States, with an additional vote in case of a tie. No compensation was to be made to Nicaragua, except $4,000,000 as a loan, to bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent and to be paid by Nicaragua out of its one-third of the net revenues of the canal.

This joint agreement was designed to avoid apparent conflict with the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. Yet it was, in fact, in actual conflict with that treaty.

A long nonpartisan debate on this treaty occurred in the Senate. On the vote for ratification it failed of gaining a majority of two-thirds of the Senate, wanting two votes. Mr. Edmunds, of Vermont, having changed his vote to the negative, to be in order to move for a reconsideration, he made the motion, and the debate upon it occupied much of the attention of the Senate, when in executive session, until that Congress expired.

Mr. Cleveland took office as President on the 4th of March, 1885, and on the 5th sent a message to the Senate withdrawing the treaty from examination.

His right to withdraw it, unless by resolution of the Senate, was questionable, but the point was not raised by objection. Shortly thereafter he sent a message to the Senate, in which he stated his reasons for withholding the treaty, the chief of which was that it created an entangling alliance with Nicaragua and contained a guaranty to protect the sovereignty of that Republic.

After that, during that Administration, the policy of the Government was to foster the efforts of private persons to build the canal under concessions from Nicaragua, and assistance was given by the Secretary of the Navy in detailing an engineer of the Navy to survey the canal and by Congress, in granting a charter to the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, to be managed under the supervision of the United States.

Afterwards the Senate passed bills in two Congresses, with very impressive majorities, to assist the company by an indorsement of its bonds in one case and the purchase of its stock in the other.

Neither of these bills was considered in the House.

The House, in the Fifty-sixth Congress, passed the first Hepburn bill by a vote of 224 yeas to 36 nays. This bill was a clean-cut and definite expression of the will of the American people that the canal should be constructed, owned, and controlled exclusively by the United States, and this could be done without regard to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

Thereupon, Great Britain entered into negotiations with our Government to remove the obstruction of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, which resulted in the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

When that treaty was under consideration in the Senate certain amendments to it were supported by leading Republican Senators that threatened its rejection by Great Britain if it was so amended. That treaty passed the Senate with those amendments on the 20th day of December, 1900, and Great Britain refused to accept them.

Before this vote of the Senate was had Admiral Walker made to President McKinley the preliminary report of the Isthmian Canal Commission on the 30th of November, 1900, in which that Commission recommended the Nicaragua route as being the most feasible and practicable route for an isthmian canal. They repeated that recommendation to President Roosevelt in their final report on the 16th of November, 1901, a year later, before the second Hay-Pauncefote treaty was ratified.

When the preliminary report was made to Mr. McKinley on November 30, 1900, he had been already thoroughly informed of the facts through the depositions of the members of the Commission, which had been made in May, 1900, and he was prepared to act promptly and effectively to decide the question as to the location of the canal, and the question then under discussion in the Senate as to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and the question of the purchase of the concessions and properties from the New Panama Canal Company. As to this purchase he had been intrusively urged by Cromwell, Bonnardell, and Hutin, director-general of the New Panama Canal Company, to his great annoyance, and he determined to end it.

Hutin, president of the canal company, addressed to Mr. Hay a caustic letter of complaint as to the report and conduct of Admiral Walker in dealing with him, which is printed in report No. 1, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, on pages 521 to 526.

An examination of this letter, which I will insert in the appendix to my remarks, will lay widely open the whole purpose of the New Panama Canal Company in its effort to raid the Treasury of the United States by introducing and attempting to force the purchase of these fraud-infected and scandalized concessions and the miserable débris of the property in Panama that was then, as it is now, worth no more to them than the price they could wring out of the United States, our Government being the only possible purchaser.

This letter is dated November 22, 1901, after the death of President McKinley.

M. Hutin must have forgotten the first letter he wrote President McKinley, on February 28, 1899, on this subject, which is printed on pages 195–196 of the report above referred to. It opens with this statement, intended to mislead the President:

SIR: The New Panama Canal Company has never proposed and does not seek any appropriation or financial aid from the Government of the United States in the completion of its canal.

The letter of November 22, 1901, simple proves, in the first sentence, that his previous statement was false.

Mr. McKinley was as apt to detect this fraud as anyone, and he determined to crush it at one blow. He did it, like an honest, brave man. We are about to revive it, put a varnish of respectability on it, and take it into our embraces "for business reasons," the chief of which is the robbery of the Treasury of the United States.

Thus history repeats itself; fraud gains a new indorsement, and scandal is revived.

Mr. McKinley penetrated with his keen and just vision into every phase and bearing of the entire situation, and at once disposed of it by a single act. He directed Mr. Hay to open negotiations with the ministers of Nicaragua and Costa Rica on the 1st day of December, 1900, not allowing even a day to elapse after the Walker report was made to him; and on that day the following agreements were made in the same terms with Costa Rica and Nicaragua.

I will read one of the protocols, and follow it with an extract from the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty that defines the canal rights therein conceded to the United States:

Protocol of an agreement between the Governments of the United States and of Nicaragua in regard to future negotiations for the construction of an interoceanic canal by way of Lake Nicaragua.

It is agreed between the two Governments that when the President of the United States is authorized by law to acquire control of such portion of the territory now belonging to Nicaragua as may be desirable and necessary on which to construct and protect a canal of depth and capacity sufficient for the passage of vessels of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use from a point near San Juan del Norte, on the Caribbean Sea, via Lake Nicaragua, to Brito, on the Pacific Ocean, they mutually agree to enter into negotiations with each other to settle the plans and the agreements in detail found necessary to accomplish the construction and to provide for the ownership and control of the proposed canal.

As preliminary to such future negotiations it is forthwith agreed that the course of said canal and the terminals thereof shall be the same that were stated in a treaty signed by the plenipotentiaries of the United States and Great Britain on February 5, 1900, and now pending in the Senate of the United States for confirmation, and that the provisions of the same shall be adhered to by the United States and Nicaragua.

In witness whereof the undersigned have signed this protocol and have hereunto affixed their seals.

Done in duplicate at Washington this 1st day of December, 1900.

JOHN HAY. [SEAL.]
LUIS F. COREA. [SEAL.]

Article I of the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty—February 5, 1900—referred to and made part of that agreement, is as follows:

ARTICLE I.

It is agreed that the canal may be constructed under the auspices of the Government of the United States, either directly at its own cost or by gift or loan of money to individuals or corporations or through subscription to or purchase of stock or shares, and that, subject to the provisions of the present convention, the said Government shall have and enjoy all the rights incident to such construction, as well as the exclusive right of providing for the regulation and management of the canal.

In compliance with her agreement, Costa Rica instituted proceedings for the amendment of her constitution, and the President sent the following message to the Congress of that State:

Extract from the message of Señor Rafael Iglesias, President of Costa Rica, to the Constitutional Congress.

There are better prospects at this than at any other time that the project of construction by and under the control of the United States of America of an interoceanic canal across the Central American Isthmus will be carried out.

Costa Rica being directly interested in the construction of that great work by reason of a portion of her territory that may have to be occupied, the Government of the United States has opened with that Government negotiations looking to the conclusion of a treaty whose fundamental terms are that the United States will be authorized to occupy, under the head of a perpetual lease, a certain belt of territory for the construction, administration, and operation of the canal, and to exercise therein the jurisdiction which properly belongs to our sovereignty. In return for these and other minor concessions we are offered the guaranty of the independence and sovereignty of Costa Rica and of the integrity of her territory and the payment to the Government of a million and a half dollars.

In view of the great and paramount importance of this matter, I deem it expedient to call an advisory board consisting of persons of well-known ability and patriotism in order to enlighten me in so delicate and grave a question. A committee under the chairmanship of the secretary of state for the department of foreign relations was appointed among the members of that board. This committee has discharged its duties in a satisfactory manner touching all the points which, in its opinion, do not contravene the spirit of our political institutions, in conformity with the provisions of the fundamental code as regards the integrity of the territory and the exercise of sovereignty. In consequence thereof the Government is powerless to enter into positive negotiations with that of the United States of America unless there should be previously passed a constitutional amendment by which such concessions for the construction of the interoceanic canal may be authorized, or the matter referred to public opinion in some other way by calling a constituent assembly for the purpose.

And the constitution of Costa Rica was so accordingly amended.

President McKinley did not send these agreements to the Senate. Why? Because he did not wish to notify Great Britain, while engaged in treating with her, of his determined purpose to get rid of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty by making an agreement with Nicaragua and Costa Rica that simply revoked and annulled it, so far as the United States could do it. He knew the support he had in Congress and among the people and did not stop on the halfway ground, as Mr. Arthur had been compelled to do, in the Frelinghuysen-Zavala treaty, for the want of such support from an incoming administration.

He fully understood that in these compacts he had located the canal on the Nicaragua route; that he had freed the country from the scandals of the New and Old Panama Canal companies, and that he had removed the obstructions of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. In each of these results he quietly and firmly crystallized the wishes of the American people into compacts with these States, subject only to the authorization of Congress, and there they stand as living monuments of his wisdom and courage.

This act ranks in its importance even above the great protocols he was arranging, at the same time, with China and the five European powers, which involved the execution of princes and others of high dignity in China; the joint conduct of a great war; the protection of our missionaries; the revision of the entire tariff system of China, and hundreds of millions of dollars of fines and damages to various nations, imposed by those protocols.

They were never submitted to the Senate for its approval. Yet, we are regularly collecting the $25,000,000, our share of those fines, while China has paid many other millions to our missionaries.

Have we quarreled with these results or denied his power to make these agreements without the advice and consent of the Senate? On the contrary, have we not, within a few days, ratified a treaty with China the basis of which was one of several of these protocols?

If these protocols of agreements with China are valid, those made by the same President during the same period are quite as valid and binding on the parties.

Challenges of disputation are frequent in the Senate of late, and, following that questionable habit—lest my sincerity might be questioned—I challenge the refutation of this precedent which now controls this Government in the affairs of supreme importance in China and Manchuria.

It is easy to follow and applaud the course of a President whose conduct is to our advantage, even after he is in his grave. But it is easier to follow and applaud a living President, in the amplitude of power and patronage, when, for ambitious reasons, he destroys the work of his predecessor by denying his right to do a splendid act that would be a benediction to the country and refusing to execute it, even under the express mandate of a statute enacted by Congress and approved by him.

But I turn from the contempt thus visited on President McKinley to that which is being visited on the States that so generously assisted him in making these protocols. They also knew and fully appreciated the great work of the President, and stood by him. His pledge to them was a sacred thing. They knew he would keep it, and they had no conception of an American President who would break it.

The constitution of Costa Rica was probably in the way of their agreement, and that State at once proceeded to change it, on our suggestion, so as to free her compact from all doubt. She did so change her constitution. Can any one deny that this was a compact between the United States and Costa Rica, when she changed her organic law that stood in the way to its perfect obligation?

Nicaragua had reserved her lands within the canal zone for three years from settlement by her own people because she had granted them to the United States in her compact of December, 1900, and in negotiations based upon it.

In this matter and in the negotiations with Nicaragua and Costa Rica that were conducted to a conclusion with our Government every step taken by all the contracting powers was taken under and in pursuance of the protocols signed, sealed, and exchanged by Mr. Hay under the orders of President McKinley.

The light is not hid under a bushel. It is as a city seated upon a hill, which all the world can see. It is another signal light to show the world how the grand Republic deals with the little republics of America.

Let us not deceive ourselves. Because we are boasting that we are a world power, let us not forget that honor and justice are the true foundations of that power.

A correspondence between Mr. Hay and myself, as chairman of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, which I will now read, establishes the fact of our continued and unbroken confirmation of these compacts. I will first read my letter to Mr. Hay:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 11, 1902.

Hon. JOHN HAY,
Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: I am instructed by the Committee on Interoceanic Canals to communicate to them the information I should derive from a conference with you on the subject of an isthmian canal; and, having had the honor of such a conference this afternoon, and desiring to make my report with accuracy, I will state the substance of our conversation, or rather its results, that you may examine it and make any corrections you may desire.

1. The negotiations with Costa Rica can be concluded at the convenience of the United States, and without any probable disagreement as to details.

2. The basis of the negotiation with Costa Rica and Nicaragua conforms, substantially, to the canal rights and privileges referred to in the treaty ratified between the United States and Great Britain—that is to say, a perpetual lease of a canal belt, from ocean to ocean, with the right on the part of the United States to construct, own, control, manage, and protect the canal, and to collect and appropriate the tolls and income of the canal for the benefit of the United States in a canal belt of 6 miles in width; this belt to be increased, during the period of construction, to a width of 10 miles, at the option of the United States, during our occupancy, and to be subject to control and protection by the United States.

3. For the lease and rights and privileges granted the United States will pay Costa Rica $1,000,000 ninety days after the ratification of the treaty, and after that the sum of $10,000 annually. And the United States will pay Nicaragua $6,000,000 ninety days after the treaty with that Government is ratified, without additional stipend.

4. I refer only to the points of the negotiation above stated, as being mutually acceptable to the treaty powers, without stating in detail other points of minor importance, as to which there is substantial agreement and a confident expectation of an early conclusion of the terms of a treaty.

5. The United States does not assume any responsibility for any demand of any sort, if any exists, against Costa Rica or Nicaragua, connected with any prior concession of canal rights and privileges, or other privileges of navigation or transportation.

6. The protocols agreed to and signed in December, 1900, by the United States and by Costa Rica and Nicaragua, respectively, remain without alteration or dissent on the part of either of the Governments.

7. The former minister from Colombia, Mr. Silva, has had informal conversations with the Secretary of State on the subject of canal concessions along the Panama route, but no propositions for such concessions have been made by that Government.

Mr. Silva has taken leave of the United States as minister from Colombia, and Mr. Concha has been appointed to succeed him, but has not presented his credentials as minister to the United States.

8. Pending the negotiations with Nicaragua and Costa Rica, the above statements are as complete as the Secretary of State thinks it is proper for him to make them.

JOHN T. MORGAN, Chairman.

Mr. Hay, in replying to my letter containing these statements, says:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 12, 1902.

Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: I have received your letter of yesterday's date, and herewith return the copy you sent.

It states with substantial accuracy the purport of the conversation I had the honor to hold with you yesterday.

Yours, respectfully, JOHN HAY.

On the 15th of May, 1902, Mr. Hay, Secretary of State, sent me the following letter, addressed to me as chairman of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 15, 1902.

Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN,
Chairman Committee on Interoceanic Canals, United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose copies of letters from the Colombian minister, dated the 31st of March and the 18th and 23d of April, accompanied by the letter of exposition and the letter of William Nelson Cromwell, both dated the 31st of March, referred to in the minister's letter of that date, and also a memorandum of a convention which the Government of Colombia is ready to sign with that of the United States of America respecting the completion, maintenance, control, and protection of an interoceanic canal over the Isthmus of Panama.

I also inclose a copy of a letter which I addressed to the minister of Colombia on the 21st of April, announcing that I am directed by the President to inform him that I shall be ready to sign with him the proposed convention as soon as the Congress of the United States shall have authorized the President to enter into such an arrangement and the law officers of this Government shall have decided upon the question of the title which the New Panama Canal Company is able to give of all the properties and rights claimed by it and pertaining to a canal across the Isthmus and covered by the pending proposal. I inclose also a project of a treaty presented to me this day by the minister of Nicaragua in behalf of his Government. I have not yet received a definite proposition from the Government of Costa Rica, but am informed by the Costa Rican minister that his Government is ready to enter into any satisfactory arrangement with that of the United States on the basis of the protocol of December 1, 1900; but that, as set forth in the recent message of President Iglesias, an extract from which I inclose, it will be necessary that the Government of Costa Rica should, before entering into positive negotiations with that of the United States of America, adopt a constitutional amendment authorizing the necessary concessions for the construction of an interoceanic canal or to have the matter referred to public opinion in some other way by calling a constituent assembly for the purpose.

I am assured by the Costa Rican Government that these steps will be taken as soon as the Congress of the United States shall decide the question of the route of the canal. I also inclose, in accordance with the request of the Nicaraguan minister, a copy of the protocol entered into by this Government and those of Nicaragua and Costa Rica December 1, 1900.

I have the honor to submit all these documents to your committee, with the hope that this definite information as to the purposes and intentions of the Nicaraguan, Colombian, and Costa Rican Governments may be of service to you in determining the question of the route of the proposed interoceanic canal.

In view of the great interests involved the President wishes me to express to you and to the committee of which you are chairman his earnest hope that there may be as little delay as possible in the legislation which will authorize the beginning of this work, which he regards as so important and so beneficent to the country and the world.

I am, sir, very truly, your obedient servant, JOHN HAY.

The inclosures in that letter will be printed in the appendix to my remarks.

On the 18th of June Mr. Hay sent me the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 18, 1902.

Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN,
Chairman Committee on Interoceanic Canals, United States Senate.

SIR: I am requested by the minister of Costa Rica to inform the Committee on Interoceanic Canals that he has been instructed by his Government to make known to that of the United States that the Government of Costa Rica are prepared to take all necessary steps to put themselves in a position to negotiate with the Government of the United States a treaty for the appropriate concessions for an isthmian canal on terms substantially as proposed by the Government of the United States.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant, JOHN HAY.

The note of transmittal by Mr. Corea, minister of Nicaragua, to Mr. Hay, Secretary of State, of the draft of the completed negotiation with Nicaragua is as follows:

[Translation.]

Mr. Corea to Mr. Hay, May 14, 1902.

In pursuance of the offer made orally and in my personal note of the 12th instant to your excellency I have the honor to transmit herewith a draft of a treaty embodying the proposal of my Government touching the interoceanic canal through Nicaragua. This draft, save a few changes which I had to make in obedience to superior orders, is the same as that which your excellency prepared on February 12, and was pleased to amend on March 11 and 25 and on April 26 last, in deference to observations presented by me.

If your excellency will, as you said to me you would, lay this proposal before the proper committees of Congress, I should be pleased if it were accompanied by the protocol on the same subject which I had the honor to sign with your excellency on December 1, 1900. These papers will show that Nicaragua has been and is still disposed to enter into direct negotiations with the United States as soon as provision therefor shall have been made by Congress, and at the same time make it clear that, since no decision has yet been reached by that body in the matter, the present proposal is not to be taken as final, but remains subject to amendments by which the conclusion of a perfected and more suitable agreement between the contracting parties may be facilitated.

Please accept, Mr. Secretary, the assurances of my most distinguished consideration.

Soon after the date of Mr. Corea's note Mr. Calvo, as minister of Costa Rica, sent me, as chairman of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, a note, in which he asserted the rights of Costa Rica under the protocal of December 1, 1900, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 7, 1902.

MY DEAR SENATOR: It gives me pleasure to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 5th instant and report mentioned therein. In answer thereto, and in view of the reference made to the concessions granted by my country to the Maritime Canal Company in 1888, whereby my country is considered to be bound by the contract then signed, I will say that the terms of said contract clearly define the obligations of both contracting parties, and that, without entering into an analysis of this document, it can be readily seen that by its own wording it has expired by limitation. No declaration has been made by my Government in this respect, it is true, but, on the other hand, no extension of time has been granted thereon.

It is not my purpose to make at the present time any declaration defining the views of my Government on such points, but wish only to present the facts as they are in preservation of the rights involved, which, I may add, as far as Costa Rica is concerned, are all confirmed by the history of the abovementioned concessions. Nevertheless, you are aware that, acting on principles of equity in the pending negotiations of a treaty for the construction of the canal, as proposed in a draft submitted by his excellency the Secretary of State, provision is made for the settlement of any conflicting rights, if any, that may be claimed in this connection.

Moreover, Costa Rica has not granted any other concession to any citizens, corporations, or government for the construction of a canal or for any other work that may conflict with the pending negotiations with the United States, and therefore my Government was free to sign the protocol of December 1, 1900, for the construction by the United States of an interoceanic canal through its territory and that of the Republic of Nicaragua.

In regard to said protocol, I wish to say that no better proof can be given of the desire of my Government to stand by its terms than the interest shown in the steps taken to smooth the way for the final negotiation of a treaty for the construction of the Nicaragua Canal—if that route is chosen—as well as by the fact that I am advised by my Government that a proposition with that end in view will arrive soon, of which I have had the honor to inform his excellency the Secretary of State.

With great respect, I have the honor to be, my dear Senator, yours, very sincerely,

J. B. CALVO.

Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN,
United States Senator.

The Committee on Interoceanic Canals made the following report with reference to the obligations and legal and diplomatic effect of those prototols (Report No. 1663, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session), as follows:

THE CHARACTER OF THE AGREEMENTS MADE WITH COSTA RICA AND NICARAGUA.

The agreements with Costa Rica and Nicaragua of December, 1900, are definite and complete as to the character and the scope of the rights they have agreed to concede to the United States.

They are agreements under seal, exchanged between the United States and each of the other Governments, relating to the same subject. In form and solemnity and in respect of the powers of the negotiators they are of the most perfect obligation. They establish rights that only Congress can annul by refusing to accept them. And these Governments insist upon their acceptance by Congress, as is stated in Appendix B to this report.

Costa Rica and Nicaragua are bound by the stipulation of these agreements, without the right of withdrawal, according to their terms. The preliminary agreement takes effect forthwith.

Costa Rica and Nicaragua now accept the treaty that was confirmed under a subsequent negotiation as a sufficient statement of the agreement recited in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty that was pending for confirmation and was not confirmed, as they are substantially the same so far as those States are concerned. They insist on their agreements, notwithstanding the fact that the treaty of February 5, 1900, which set forth the terms of their agreement, was not confirmed, claiming that their agreements were independent of the confirmation or rejection of that treaty. The terms of that treaty were of immense importance to Costa Rica and Nicaragua, and the agreement of the United States to adhere to it was a pledge that these two Republics should no longer be shut out from all opportunity to make agreements for the construction of a canal by the United States in consequence of the doubt created by the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

THE EFFECT OF THE HAY-PAUNCEFOTE TREATY.

The terms of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty were made, by reference, a descriptive part of the contract between the United States and Costa Rica and Nicaragua, and were of great importance to the United States, as they completely defined the scope and meaning of the control the United States would obtain over the canal and canal route under the protocols of agreement with those States.

When these three States agreed to make the Hay-Pauncefote treaty the repository, or statement, of the terms of their agreement, and did not make its confirmation a condition of their agreement, and further provided that it should be forthwith obligatory, they clearly meant that it should operate forthwith, after its acceptance by Congress, and not that it should be inoperative if the Hay-Pauncefote treaty failed of confirmation. And to this construction of their rights and obligations Nicaragua and Costa Rica agree, and no possible doubt remains as to their attitude with reference to the binding force of these agreements, when Congress authorizes the President to acquire from them the right to construct and control a ship canal.

If Congress should now accept those agreements, as it would do by the passage of the House bill No. 3110, the Government of the United States would be bound by its agreement to accept the Hay-Pauncefote treaty as a full description of the terms of its agreement with Costa Rica and Nicaragua. It could not plead the want of confirmation of the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty to get rid of its contract with Costa Rica and Nicaragua. We are held to it in law, justice, equity, and honor. We can not afford to say that after entering into these protocols with Costa Rica and Nicaragua we forced the rejection of the treaty to which they related by Great Britain and thereby escaped from the obligations we assumed in them toward those States. Especially would this be unworthy of the United States when Costa Rica and Nicaragua claim that they are in force, notwithstanding the failure of confirmation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty of February 5, 1900.

THE PRELIMINARY AGREEMENT IS COMPLETE WHEN ACCEPTED BY CONGRESS.

The "preliminary agreement" is complete, without further negotiation, "to settle the plan and agreements in detail found necessary to accomplish the construction and provide for the ownership and control of the proposed canal."

Those "future negotiations" are pledged under the provision that the contracting parties "mutually engage to enter into such negotiations with each other." Such engagements are always regarded as honorable and imperative international obligations.

Suppose either party refuses to keep this solemn agreement, what is the remedy? There is none but the ultima ratio regum. But that is enough, for an engagement to enter into negotiations is the primary law of all peaceful solution of disputes between nations, which no nation can honorably break away from without sufficient excuse.

All the rights arising out of these agreements depend upon a fact, or condition, to be created by act of Congress. It is "that, when the President of the United States is authorized by law to acquire control of such portion of territory now belonging to Nicaragua (or Costa Rica) as may be desirable and necessary on which to construct and protect a canal," etc., "they mutually engage," etc., to do all the things that are completely defined by the protocol, and to enter into negotiations to do such other things as are "found necessary to accomplish the construction and to provide for the ownership and control of the proposed canal."

What remains to be done to make these protocols obligatory on the parties is for Congress to authorize the President "to acquire control of the territory" for these canal purposes from these States. When that is done the contracts become obligatory, according to their terms, and nothing remains but to put them into execution.

To do this it is not necessary for the complete realization of the purpose of Congress, that any term of these protocols should be changed.

Neither Nicaragua nor Costa Rica could demand any new provision in these contracts which would affect the exclusive right of the United States to construct, own, or control a canal on the route described in the protocols and the draft of the treaty to which they refer, nor make any unjust or unreasonable exaction in the future negotiations that would deprive the United States of the just and reasonable exercise of the rights established in these protocols.

Our rights are thus defined and established by agreements that only await the acceptance of Congress, which will cover every right and privilege needed for the exclusive ownership and control of the canal.

The matters left open for future negotiations are only such as relate to "the plan and arrangements, in detail, found necessary to accomplish the construction and to provide for the ownership and control of the proposed canal."

We can not obliterate these agreements by closing our eyes to them or by ignoring them. They live and will always live as mutual agreements until Congress has refused to execute them or the high contracting powers have abrogated them.

In another and most painful sense they will live to reproach us as a faithless nation, if we permit the President to violate an act of Congress that requires him to treat with these Republics with reference to the rights established under these protocols.

I will omit, at this time, the discussion of the second proposition stated in the beginning of my remarks, further than I have stated my views in that proposition. It has been often and fully discussed in the Senate, and it is not the only decisive factor in the discussion of the duty of the President which I will now attempt briefly to discuss.

It is the duty imposed upon the President by the Spooner law that he repudiates and willfully disobeys.

I will insert a copy of that law in the appendix to my remarks. (See Appendix E.)

I have no apologies or excuses to make for insisting, as a Senator and as a private citizen, that the President is bound to obey the laws enacted by Congress, nor for saying in plain speech that he has willfully refused to obey the Spooner law in its plain and undeniable purpose, intent, and mandate.

The fact is simple and clear, and is not to be avoided by the plea that this law gave him any discretion as to whether he would proceed to negotiate with Costa Rica and Nicaragua when the effort to get a concession from Colombia for canal rights at Panama had failed.

The Hay-Herran treaty, which the Congress of Colombia refused to approve, was the act of the Senate of the United States, as it was of the President. Without the assent of the Senate he could not have enacted that treaty, in conjunction with the Congress of Colombia, as the supreme law of the United States.

In enacting this law—the Hay-Herran treaty—sixty-one Senators in a full Senate cooperated with the President, and however they may have compared with him in wisdom and ability, they agreed with him that the treaty should terminate, lapse, and be utterly void unless the ratification by the Congress of Colombia should be made and exchanged at Washington not later than the 22d of September, 1903.

The ratification provided for in that vote of the Senate is the law of the treaty that the President could not revoke or alter without the consent of the Senate. By that law the Hay-Herran treaty was to live or die.

Not only was this proposed law defeated by its own limitations so that it was dead, but the President in his annual message to Congress on the 4th of January declares in terms of violent emphasis that a canal treaty with Colombia is impossible. I need not quote those statements from his message, because no one has insisted or will insist to the contrary.

The Hay-Herran treaty ceased to have any effect at the end of the 22d of September, 1903.

With that event and at that time all the provisions of the Spooner law as to a canal at Panama, including the appropriation for that object, ceased to be operative or capable of being executed, and the contemplated construction of a canal at Panama under that law and in accordance with it could not longer exist.

This annulled all discretionary power of the President as to a "reasonable time." For that discretion, which must always be exercised lawfully, was given alone as to the time of concluding a treaty with Colombia. When that ceased, the mandate of the law became imperative. All discretion ceased and the law commanded him to open negotiations with Costa Rica and Nicaragua, which he simply refused to do.

It is impossible and absurd that, in deciding that he will make no negotiations with Nicaragua and Costa Rica, he can claim the discretionary right of opening negotiations with them at an indefinite future period when he may have changed his mind, or until he could assist in creating a government in Panama with which to treat for canal concessions. The Spooner law had no more reference to a treaty with the then unbegotten Republic of Panama than it had to the yet unborn republic of Canada.

It alarms the people to witness the efforts of Senators to relieve the President of the dangerous attitude he thus assumes toward the law of the land. It is clear to them that his course is that of lawless disobedience, however painful it may be to the people to witness the fact. No American can take a just pride in any public act that requires for its explanation such a strain upon common sense and such draft upon the ingenious sophistries that Senators have been compelled to resort to in this debate.

The President says in his message that "the essence" of the Spooner law is that a canal shall be built at Panama. If there is such an essence in that law, I am sure its author was not aware of the fact when he formulated it. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], who is as clear in his forecast as most men are in their retrospect, did not divine this essence as being the master spirit of the act, that should overrule its solid substance.

The President says:

> When the Congress directed that we should take the Panama route under treaty with Colombia, the essence of the condition, of course, referred not to the Government which controlled that route, but to the route itself; to the territory across which the route lay, not to the name which for the moment the territory bore on the map. The purpose of the law was to authorize the President to make a treaty with the power in actual control of the Isthmus of Panama. This purpose has been fulfilled.

If that is true, the President concealed his real purpose when he approved the Spooner law, and that act speaks with a double tongue—one that speaks to the world and the other to himself alone.

No one, unless it was the President, then looked forward to the dismemberment of Colombia as the means of getting a canal at Panama. If he contemplated such a situation at that time, his bad faith toward Colombia and Nicaragua and Costa Rica is conclusively proven.

The deduction the President makes from his alleged "essence" of the Spooner law is that he has the right to locate and build the canal at Panama, contrary to the plain English of the law and to its clear intent and to all of its conditions and provisions and its positive injunctions and mandate. He has made the unique discovery on his own interpretation of the statute, as to its essence, that is related solely to a canal at Panama, to the exclusion of a canal on the route through Nicaragua and Costa Rica. He sets aside the law providing for that route as if it had neither essence nor substance.

He evidently conceives that his will is the real essence of that law, and not the will of Congress, conclusively expressed both in the language and purposes of that act.

If the President or any officer was sworn to obey and execute the "essence" of the law instead of its plain mandate, and against its positive injunctions of a specified duty imposed by its express terms, our country would soon cease to be a land of laws and would be ruled by sentiment and passion and all the unsubstantial things that are classified as essences. If this precedent is established on this momentous occasion, we will be compelled to change the oath and insert, as is done on some other occasions, that it is taken "without mental reservation or the purpose of evasion."

Socialism and anarchy could scarcely be supplied with a more satisfactory code than that it is the true rule of construction that the essence of the laws controls all their positive provisions so as to justify crime and social disorganizations, if the essence they wish to flavor it with is palatable to them.

The President's justification of his disobedience of the Spooner law is that its sole purpose was to locate and build a canal at Panama, which is not true; and that, this being the sole end to be accomplished through its agency, it is the essence of the law to do that and prevent the opening of a canal on the Nicaragua route, and that "the end justified the means," no matter what violence is done to plain language, or what injustice, or wrong, or disappointment, or public or private grievances may result.

In the discovery of this "essence" the President is quite as unique as he is in the methods by which he transforms it into the material agencies of force and arms, with which he breaks the peace of nations and disrupts an American republic by paralyzing all its rightful powers to protect its own life.

In the sight of God and of man it is not true that the treaty of 1846 gave us the right to destroy the sovereignty of Colombia for the purpose, if that was the purpose, of protecting the transit of lawful commerce across the Isthmus of Panama. In a case of extreme and unavoidable necessity arising out of the wrong or the neglect of Colombia our utmost limit of right would be to suspend her authority over the transit until the evil, either actual or threatened, has passed. Instead of that Mr. Hay turned over all the treaty rights of Colombia to the parties who assailed her sovereignty.

That act is without any excuse, either of necessity or justice, or of treaty right on the part of the United States.

The President, unconsciously, I hope, extracts this "essence" or dogma of higher law from the dungeons of the Spanish Inquisition of the middle ages, where all Christendom has earnestly hoped it would remain entombed forever.

The President's excuses are that "the end justifies the means;" and the "essence" is the end to be reached; and the judge of the essence is he who has the power to reach the end and the will to accomplish it, in defiance of the substance stated in the form and express declaration of statute laws. This is "the higher law" that the President appeals to in excluding the Nicaragua route from the provisions of the Spooner law.

In that law the Nicaragua route was as much a part of the essence of its provisions as those that relate to the Panama route. There is no discrimination as to the "essence" of the Spooner law, whether it is applied to the one canal route or to the other. It is an obvious perversion of that law to apply its provisions exclusively to the Panama route, and to the destruction of the Nicaragua route.

As to those routes the provisions were distinctive and separate, being connected only by two provisions: First, that of providing for the construction of a canal, including an indefinite sum of money for the purpose of purchasing concessions on either route, and, second, the provision for an isthmian canal commission and other agents or contractors to execute the work.

As to all other matters, the provisions of the Spooner law are as separate and distinct as if they were in separate laws, the provisions pertaining to the Nicaragua route to take effect when those pertaining to the Panama route ceased to be effective.

The provisions relating to the Nicaragua act came into full force and effect when either of the conditions stated in the laws and announced in the message of the President made it impossible for Colombia to grant concessions to the United States on the Panama route.

Such impossibility, when its existence became certain, covered the special appropriation for the Panama route into the Treasury, and that ended the matter as to that route.

The act relating to a canal at Panama would have been functus officio if it had been a separate law. It is not less so because it is a part of the Spooner law.

It is a law that has expired by its own limitations and is as dead as if it had been repealed.

The Spooner law prescribed the terms and conditions for the cesser or expiry of that part of the act that applied to a canal at Panama. The fact of the failure of Colombia to ratify the Hay-Herran treaty, and to exchange the ratifications with the Government of the United States on or before the 22d of September, 1903, even if standing alone, completed the condition on which the provisions in favor of the Nicaragua route became operative; and the condition on which any money could be applied, under that act, to a canal at Panama ceased and fell, and with it fell the appropriation of $40,000,000 for the purchase of concessions, rights of property, and all else, from the New Panama Canal Company, described in the first section of the Spooner law, because those conditions were mutually dependent.

This state of facts is put beyond dispute by the official statements of the President in his annual message to Congress, from which I will read extracts:

Nevertheless the Government of Colombia not merely repudiated the treaty, but repudiated it in such manner as to make it evident by the time the Colombian Congress adjourned that not the scantiest hope remained of ever getting a satisfactory treaty from them. The Government of Colombia made the treaty, and yet when the Colombian Congress was called to ratify it the vote against ratification was unanimous. It does not appear that the Government made any real effort to secure ratification.

Every effort has been made by the Government of the United States to persuade Colombia to follow a course which was essentially not only to our interests and to the interests of the world, but to the interests of Colombia itself. These efforts have failed; and Colombia, by her persistence in repulsing the advances that have been made, has forced us, for the sake of our own honor and of the interest and well-being, not merely of our own people, but of the people of the Isthmus of Panama and the people of the civilized countries of the world, to take decisive steps to bring to an end a condition of affairs which had become intolerable. The new Republic of Panama immediately offered to negotiate a treaty with us. This treaty I herewith submit. By it our interests are better safeguarded than in the treaty with Colombia which was ratified by the Senate at its last session. It is better in its terms than the treaties offered to us by the Republics of Nicaragua and Costa Rica.

Has the President asked Nicaragua or Costa Rica for better terms than those secured by Mr. McKinley in his compacts with those States? Or has he asked them for better terms than are agreed upon in protocols settled by the Secretary of State, in execution of those protocols, as is shown by his several letters which I have just read to the Senate? He has done neither of these things, nor has he invited either of those States to enter into any negotiations with our Government since the failure of the Hay-Herran treaty.

Without any such effort, why does he say to Congress that the Hay-Varilla treaty "is better in its terms than the treaty offered to us by the Republics of Nicaragua and Costa Rica?" To what treaties does he allude, and why has he not laid them before the Senate, that they may have a voice in determining their qualities and whether they are not so good as the Hay-Varilla treaty?

At a time prior to the Panama secession the President i forms Congress that he intended to lay this matter before them for consideration, but changed his purpose. He says in his message that he did not attempt to treat with Nicaragua or Costa Rica, and gives his reasons, as follows:

By the act of June 28, 1902, the Congress authorized the President to enter into treaty with Colombia for the building of the canal across the Isthmus of Panama; it being provided that in the event of failure to secure such treaty after the lapse of a reasonable time, recourse should be had to building a canal through Nicaragua. It has not been necessary to consider this alternative, as I am enabled to lay before the Senate a treaty providing for the building of the canal across the Isthmus of Panama. This was the route which commended itself to the deliberate judgment of the Congress, and we can now acquire by treaty the right to construct the canal over this route. The question now, therefore, is not by which route the isthmian canal shall be built, for that question has been definitely and irrevocably decided. The question is simply whether or not we shall have an isthmian canal.

Did the Spooner law empower him to refuse even to consider the alternative route through Nicaragua, if he should discover that there was a hope or prospect of the secession of Panama from Colombia? I voted for that law, it being the only chance to get any canal, and I protest, for myself and my colleagues in the Senate, that the construction placed on our votes, by the President, has no foundation in fact.

He also says:

As events turned out, the question of a reasonable time did not enter into the matter at all.

I hope that after this statement by the President we shall not hear very much debate or discussion on the floor of the Senate about a reasonable time given him in which to negotiate treaties with Nicaragua, or to see if he could not fight his way back into Panama. He says:

As events turned out, the question of a reasonable time did not enter into the matter at all.

Then, taking shelter under the "reasonable time" clause in the Spooner law, he says, I repeat:

A second alternative was that by the close of the session on the last day of October, without the ratification of the treaty by Colombia and without any steps taken by Panama, the American Congress on assembling early in November would be confronted with a situation in which there had been a failure to come to terms as to building the canal along the Panama route, and yet there had not been a lapse of a reasonable time—using the word "reasonable" in any proper sense—such as would justify the Administration going to the Nicaragua route. This situation seemed on the whole the most likely, and as a matter of fact I had made the original draft of my message to the Congress with a view to its existence.

What was this "alternative" to which he looked forward, and what was the "situation that seemed, on the whole, most likely" to happen? The President answers this query in terms that are direct and unmistakable, as follows:

My intention was to consult the Congress as to whether under such circumstances it would not be proper to announce that the canal was to be dug forthwith; that we would give the terms that we had offered and no others; and that if such terms were not agreed to we would enter into an arrangement with Panama direct, or take what other steps were needful in order to begin the enterprise.

If we follow the President in a declaration of this kind, we will have the reputation of being not only a great world power, but of being the most hectoring and arrogant nation that ever existed in the world. Again, he says:

A third possibility was that the people of the Isthmus who had formerly constituted an independent state, and who until recently were united to Colombia only by a loose tie of federal relationship, might take the protection of their own vital interests into their own hands, reassert their former rights, declare their independence upon just grounds, and establish a government competent and willing to do its share in this great work for civilization. This third possibility is what actually occurred. Everyone knew that it was a possibility, but it was not until toward the end of October that it appeared to be an imminent probability. Although the Administration, of course, had special means of knowledge, no such means were necessary in order to appreciate the possibility, and toward the end the likelihood, of such a revolutionary outbreak, and of its success. It was a matter of common notoriety.

This is a bold confession of an unworthy purpose—the waiting for the expected secession of Panama to obtain a canal route that we could not otherwise secure.

Surely this is not of the "essence" of the Spooner law.

It was this "third possibility" and only that which induced the President to refuse to treat with Nicaragua and Costa Rica, as he was required to do under the act of Congress called the "Spooner law," and this he admits.

He expected Panama to secede from Colombia for reasons which he says were commonly known, and he waited "a reasonable time" for that event, during which he insists that there was no reasonable time for even offering to treat with Nicaragua and Costa Rica.

The President found it necessary in his justification of this action to totally pervert the plain meaning of the Spooner law in his explanatory message.

He says:

It was further provided that "should the President be unable to obtain for the United States a satisfactory title to the property of the New Panama Canal Company and the control of the necessary territory of the Republic of Colombia * * *

There come in three asterisks indicating the omission of matter which changes the meaning of the act—within a reasonable time and upon reasonable terms, then the President" should endeavor to provide for a canal by the Nicaragua route. The language quoted—

It was not quoted; it was misquoted—defines with exactness and precision what was to be done, and what as a matter of fact has been done. The President was authorized to go to the Nicaragua route only if within a reasonable time he could not obtain "control of the necessary territory of the Republic of Colombia." This control has now been obtained; the provision of the act has been complied with; it is no longer possible under existing legislation to go to the Nicaragua route as an alternative.

No Senator on this floor has stated that proposition and nobody has attempted to defend it.

This act marked the climax of the effort on the part of the United States to secure, so far as legislation was concerned, an interoceanic canal across the Isthmus. The effort to secure a treaty for this purpose with one of the Central American republics did not stand on the same footing with the effort to secure a treaty under any ordinary conditions.

Why did not the President, in quoting the Spooner law in his message, add, as that law provides, that the control of the necessary territory should be obtained by treaty with Colombia?

That statement would have destroyed the whole fabric of his explanation, and would have saved the country from the moral pressure of his statement that—

> This control has now been obtained; the provisions of the act have been complied with; it is no longer possible under existing circumstances to go to Nicaragua as an alternative.

This is a final decree and is not based on what Congress enacted, or in the remotest degree contemplated when that act was passed, or that the President contemplated when he approved it.

The "essence" of the act, as it is construed by the President, gave off no intimation of its hidden existence until Congress had rejected the Hay-Herran treaty and it was commonly known that some conspirators in Panama would "rise as one man" and declare for independence.

The final fulmination of this "essence" took on immediately the odor of gunpowder and the "pomp and circumstance of glorious war." It startled our people, but it has failed to excite any other than serious inquiry whether it has not placed the country in a false and humiliating attitude.

Congress still has the opportunity, by adopting the concurrent resolution before the Senate, to refuse to accept the burden of this irregularity by asking the President to execute the still living parts of the Spooner law in opening negotiations with Costa Rica and Nicaragua under that law and in conformity with the compact made with those States by President McKinley. Let them at least have a chance to refuse to make concessions that we are satisfied with.

The Panama Canal is out of the question and will so remain until Congress shall, by legislation, substitute some other act for the Spooner Act, or shall make some other appropriation for building a canal at Panama in place of that provided in the Spooner law, which has lapsed and is covered into the Treasury.

Colombia has refused to create the condition on which the appropriation can be applied to a canal at Panama, and the President has officially informed Congress that the refusal of Colombia is final and irrevocable.

No officer of the United States can lawfully draw a dollar from the Treasury to pay for canal concessions to be purchased from Panama or from Colombia, or for any property or concessions from the New Panama Canal Company, and it may as well be said now as later that such money can not lawfully be drawn from the Treasury.

When the Hay-Varilla treaty is ratified, not one dollar of appropriation will remain available for constructing any isthmian canal. What then? A scramble for a new appropriation, with obstruction from all the opponents of any canal, unending debate, and a final adjournment of Congress, with great promises of appropriations, until after the Presidential election.

Has the vitality and force of the Spooner law been destroyed as to the provisions and appropriations made, separately, for the Nicaragua route, because the Panama route has been dropped from the law and has ceased to be possible under the provisions of the Spooner law? The appropriation for the construction of the canal at Panama is $130,000,000, while that for the canal on the Nicaragua route is $180,000,000. These separate funds are not a joint charge on the Treasury, subject at the same time to be drawn out on a warrant of the President. He must draw from each fund the money to construct the canal that is selected under the terms and provisions of the Spooner law, and his right to draw from either of these separate funds establishes the fact that neither the President nor any other person can lawfully draw money from the other fund.

The right to draw money from one of these funds negatives and destroys the other fund, for both can not be at the same time subject to the warrant of the President.

His right and duty to resort to the separate fund set apart for the construction of the Nicaragua Canal became effective, and the money became available, when the President's right and duty to apply it to the separate fund appropriated for the construction of the Panama Canal ceased, the only remaining condition being that the canal concessions described in the Spooner law should be obtained from Nicaragua and Costa Rica by satisfactory treaties.

But the ratification of the Hay-Varilla treaty repeals the appropriation in the Spooner law for the Nicaragua route, as the failure of the Hay-Herran treaty, in legal effect, covered the appropriation of that law into the Treasury. Those who shall vote to ratify the Hay-Herran treaty will vote to repeal all existing appropriation for any isthmian canal.

The plain and simple duty, enjoined on him and made mandatory by the Spooner law, the President has openly and defiantly refused to perform, and the purpose of this resolution is to further direct and urge him to perform that duty.

Before further discussing this very grave and important matter I will call attention to the present state of obligation resting on Costa Rica and Nicaragua under and in virtue of their agreements or compacts under seal, made with President McKinley on December 1, 1900.

Neither of those States has repudiated its agreement, nor could one State do this without the consent of the other, because they were made at the same time, in exactly the same terms, and with reference to a corresponding public policy of both of those States as to the same canal, in the prescribed route of which they had a joint and indivisible interest.

The San Juan River is the boundary between these States, and their rights in its waters are so held in commom that a canal could not be constructed, of which that river is an essential part, without the consent of both States.

Not only is it true that neither of these States has attempted to repudiate or to abrogate or to dissent from their respective agreements, but I have shown from the statements of the ministers of Nicaragua and Costa Rica that so long as they were permitted by our Government they proceeded with the treaty negotiations that are expressly provided for in those protocols and in conformity therewith, until they were concluded and the treaty drafts were ready for signature—a copy of which I have to-day and heretofore presented to the Senate.

These documents are in the archives of the Department of State.

The agreements of these Governments and of the United States to enter into treaties to arrange and execute in detail the basic concessions in those agreements, which are under seal and are duly signed by the accredited agents of all three of the contracting powers, are, of themselves, even as independent agreements, binding and in every sense obligatory under the laws of nations.

It is a serious breach of faith in a nation to refuse to negotiate, or to treat with another power with which it has made such an agreement. The United States is under that obligation to Nicaragua and Costa Rica in these protocols, and the President violates our plighted faith as well as the mandate of the Spooner law when he refuses to comply with that duty.

These States have waited with proper and dignified patience the ending of our dealings with Colombia under the Hay-Herran treaty and have made no demands or protests in respect of their rights under these protocols; but their silence is not in any sense to be construed to their disadvantage, and their respectful attitude toward the United States since the passage of the Spooner law and since the defeat of the Hay-Herran treaty can not be set up by us as an abandonment of their rights or the repudiation of their obligations under these protocols or of the pledges of our Government given to them in the Spooner law.

To Costa Rica and Nicaragua the canal through the route along their water courses is of such importance that few minds dare to conceive of its magnitude. They know and feel very deeply the blow inflicted upon their country by the breach of faith and the present ungrateful attitude of our Government toward them, in which they have my most sincere sympathy and commiseration and that of many millions of our people—indeed, of all Christian nations.

They have witnessed our struggle with Great Britain during more than a half century for the right and privilege of building a canal through their country to connect the oceans, and in every phase of that controversy, which called forth our best diplomatic efforts and aroused our deepest anxieties and apprehensions, these Republics stood by our Government as if they had been States in our Union.

They have refused us nothing that our Government or our people have desired at their hands, and have not even complained when we have broken the public faith with them.

This is all established by the official documents I have laid before the Senate to-day, which could be multiplied, twice over, by other evidence of equal value.

They have suffered war at the hands of Colombia and will again have to suffer it, because they granted canal concessions to the United States; and M. Bunau-Varilla, minister from Panama, and the cidevant "champion of the Panama Canal"—a contractor who grew rich in its service—has trumpeted falsehoods as to the Nicaragua route from the forums of many of our cities.

He joins Mr. Loomis, Assistant Secretary of State, in the grossest misrepresentations as to the opinion of great American engineers, whom he is afraid to name to the public, that the Nicaragua route is impracticable.

De Lesseps, after Nicaragua refused to sell him a canal concession at a great price, took his revenge by coming to the United States and leaving a fund of $2,500,000 in the hands of an "American committee" in New York.

A salary of $25,000 per annum was paid out of this fund to a Secretary of the Navy as president of that committee.

When President Hayes heard of this strange honor thus conferred on the Secretary of the Navy, that Cabinet officer could not resign his office quick enough to escape a summary dismissal.

That Secretary then devoted his best efforts to the work of "laying the Nicaraguans on their backs," as he wrote a friend, and De Lesseps and, succeeding him, the New Panama Canal Company, has kept up the fight against the Nicaragua Canal, which has finally created civil war in Colombia from 1898 to 1902, and has made every American republic unfriendly to the United States.

And Nicaragua and Costa Rica have taken shelter under the Republic of Panama and her queenly mother, the United States, to avoid the further hostility of Colombia.

It may be, very soon, that we will be cogitating the question whether Nicaragua and Costa Rica have escaped the conclusive grants in the protocols of December 1, 1900. We may find that they are of great service to the United States and have not perished through our indifference to the honorable obligations they impose on us. We may need those agreements in an hour that may be full of danger to the United States.

In such a case, I am glad that I have had occasion to say to their representatives that, in my judgment, they are irrevocably bound by these grants, unless the United States will voluntarily release them by act of Congress. This has never been done, and will never be done, no matter what national reproaches we may incur, for the owners and freighters of sailing ships, and the people who will soon be in the power of a great railroad and steamship trust, through the Panama Canal, will clamor for the competitive advantages of the Nicaragua route in a way not to be misunderstood.

And much sooner than we expect, the Panama Canal, with its sea gate at the western entrance to control the tide of 21 feet that is a daily visitor, will retard the passage of ships to less than one an hour, so that it can not accommodate even the steamships that will seek to pass through it; and sooner than we expect the wonderful increase in tonnage that passes the canal at Sault Ste. Marie will be only a feeble illustration of that which will pass through an American isthmian canal.

I am glad of the opportunity now to record the opinion that in fifty years another canal through the Isthmus will be as much needed to accommodate the commerce between the oceans as the one that is now so eagerly desired.

We look back for fifty years at the humiliating part we have played under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty with deep regret, but with some satisfaction, because it united all our strength on the Nicaragua canal route and abrogated that barrier to a splendid future.

We have still an enemy in our midst that divides our strength, and has suddenly and wickedly enticed us into discordant factions.

We look with a sense of shame and indignation at the part we are now playing in a sister republic, with a dummy we are using as Great Britain used the Mosquito King, that we call a republic.

The Panama Canal Company is the real enemy, with whose wiles and frauds and intrigues our country is being agitated and its splendid fame is being darkened.

The Republic of Panama is the spawn of the company. Its first breath of life came in a prediction, made last August, from the "champion" of the Panama Canal Company, and the officers of the railroad owned and controlled by that company fulfilled the prophecy on the 3d of November. This company, condemned in the reports of the Isthmian Canal Commission as having its origin in robberies of the old Panama Canal Company, for which its leading stockholders were convicted as felons in the French courts and were pardoned on their promise to organize the New Panama Canal Company and to complete the canal, has created all the discord that is now aggravated into war between Panama and Colombia, and has driven out the Republics of Costa Rica and Nicaragua as if they were culprit nations.

We see Nicaragua and Costa Rica, our true friends, cast out in hopeless despair, but still wearing, as chains that we may yet employ to bind them, the necklace that McKinley laid upon their shoulders as tokens of honor. And when we ask ourselves why there should be a tinge of shame on the brow of the Republic, we will say—if we should speak truly—the Senate will be compelled to say—it is because we aided the President to violate the law and in repealing all canal appropriations of the Spooner law, including that for the Nicaragua Canal, through a treaty with Panama, that he should thereby compel Democrats to support his wayward and defiant violation of the laws of the United States or else get no appropriation for a canal, even on the Panama route. Nor do I believe they will ever get any.

For one, I decline to assist the President in the open contempt and violation of an act of Congress which he approved, in order to gratify his latest whim.

Let him first cast out the beam from his own eye, that he may see more clearly the mote that is in our eyes.

Let him not force the New Panama Canal Company into the question of a canal at Panama or at Nicaragua. Let the country be free to do full justice to that company, its agents, and its diplomatic champions, without the handicap of "the contemplated purchase" of its alleged concessions and property rights, with France and Panama at its back, to force us to purchase these things at its own price and on its own terms.

Let full justice be done to the Panama Canal Company. In that case it will reap the harvest that comes from its own broken promises that it never intended to keep. It will not be of gold, if we are true to ourselves. It will cease to be known in our country except as the promoter of two wars in Colombia, the last of which is about to open, unless we intervene to prevent it.

I will devote some attention to these wars and prove the complicity of that company in them on another occasion.

APPENDIX.

[Extract from the message of Señor Rafael Iglesias, President of Costa Rica, to the Constitutional Congress.]

There are better prospects at this than at any other time that the project of construction by and under the control of the United States of America of an interoceanic canal across the Central American Isthmus will be carried out.

Costa Rica being directly interested in the construction of that great work, by reason of a portion of her territory that may have to be occupied, the Government of the United States has opened with that Government negotiations looking to the conclusion of a treaty whose fundamental terms are that the United States will be authorized to occupy under the head of a perpetual lease a certain belt of territory for the construction, administration, and operation of the canal, and to exercise therein the jurisdiction which properly belongs to our sovereignty.

In return for these and other minor concessions we are offered the guaranty of the independence and sovereignty of Costa Rica and of the integrity of her territory and the payment to the Government of a million and a half dollars. In view of the great and paramount importance of this matter, I deemed it expedient to call an advisory board consisting of persons of well-known ability and patriotism, in order to enlighten me in so delicate and grave a question. A committee, under the chairmanship of the secretary of state for the department of foreign relations, was appointed among the members of that board. This committee has discharged its duties in a satisfactory manner, touching all the points which in its opinion do not contravene the spirit of our political institutions, in conformity to the provisions of the fundamental code as regards the integrity of the territory and the exercise of sovereignty. In consequence thereof the Government is powerless to enter into positive negotiations with that of the United States of America unless there should be previously passed a constitutional amendment by which such concessions for the construction of the interoceanic canal may be authorized, or the matter referred to public opinion in some other way by calling a constituent assembly for the purpose.

NEGOTIATION WITH COLOMBIA.

LEGACION DE COLOMBIA,
Washington, D. C., March 31, 1902.

I have the honor to hand your excellency the proposal of the Republic of Colombia for a concessionary convention or treaty between the Republic of Colombia and the United States of America respecting the completion, maintenance, operation, control, and protection of the interoceanic canal over the Isthmus of Panama.

I soon shall hand you a letter of exposition, and also have requested Mr. William Nelson Cromwell, general counsel of the New Panama Canal Company, to present you a statement, which I have approved.

Please accept these additional communications in connection with the proposed treaty.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to your excellency the assurance of my high consideration.

JOSE VICENTE CONCHA.

Hon. JOHN HAY,
Secretary of State of the United States.

[Translation.]

LEGATION OF COLOMBIA,
Washington, D. C., March 31, 1902.

The undersigned, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the Republic of Colombia, has the honor to supplement the note which he had the honor to hand to the honorable Secretary of State, together with the memorandum setting forth the bases of a treaty between Colombia and the United States for the purpose of securing the authorization of Colombia for the New Panama Canal Company to transfer its rights and privileges to the American Government and of regulating the relations between the contracting parties in respect of this enterprise.

The bases have been formulated after a serious and mature consideration of those which were submitted to the legation on the subject by the president of the Isthmian Canal Commission, which had been intrusted by the honorable Secretary of State with the discussion of the question. The intent of these bases has been to condense the most liberal terms that could be granted by Colombia in the matter.

The Republic that I represent realizes the importance of the contemplated interoceanic waterway for the civilization and progress of the world, and since nature has placed the shortest and most expeditious route within the territory of the Republic, Colombia widely and generously opens her doors, so that the grand work may be achieved within the shortest possible time.

If the people of the United States evince an earnest desire that their Government apply its energies and treasure to the completion of the canal, Colombia not only will not place any obstacle whatever in the way of such a purpose or keep her concessions within the bounds of those previously conceded to private enterprise, but will enlarge those concessions to such an extent as to renounce a demand for the ownership after the lapse of a number of years of operation, as stipulated in the French company's contract; she will grant the use of a much more extensive zone than that originally conceded for the execution of the work, extend facilities in all the ports of the Republic for cooperation in the work of the enterprise, relinquish her proprietary and usufructuary rights in the Panama Railway, and, lastly, foregoes a fixed participation in the proceeds of the canal, confining her demands to a fee or annuity for the price of the zone, the revenues of the railway, and the heavier expenses put upon the public administration in the Isthmus by the increase of population and the traffic consequent to the work on the canal itself.

Thus does Colombia give fresh evidence of her long standing and cordial sentiments of friendship toward the United States, and evinces in a clear and sincere manner the gratification with which she will receive the industrious and intelligent citizens of your Republic in her territory.

Colombia has no lust of unwise lucre through the construction of the canal in her territory, and a final convention on this subject will not be hampered by pecuniary considerations. Her pride in the matter is bent on having the neutral waterway between the two oceans, that ideal of universal peace and progress, become a reality on her territory and under the protection of her sovereignty. The compensations asked by Colombia have special importance only in that they will imply a practical and constant recognition of her sovereignty.

The undersigned has no doubt that the mere perusal of the memorandum will bring forward the justice and equity of the propositions, which, if accepted, would be perfected in the same spirit.

The undersigned embraces this opportunity to reiterate to the honorable Secretary the assurances of his highest and most distinguished consideration.

JOSE VICENTE CONCHA.

Hon. JOHN HAY,
Secretary of State of the United States.

SULLIVAN & CROMWELL,
49 and 51 Wall Street, New York, March 31, 1902.

Hon. JOHN HAY,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In connection with the presentation by Señor Jose Vicente Concha, minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary from the Republic of Colombia, of a proposed concessionary convention or treaty between the United States and Colombia, to further the completion, operation, control, and protection of the Panama Canal by the United States, I have been requested by the minister, in view of my relation to the subject as general counsel of the Panama Canal Company, and of my knowledge of the minister's views derived from our daily conferences in the preparation of the treaty, to submit the following reflections:

Colombia welcomes the United States to its territory, and will facilitate in every way reasonable within its power the consummation of the desires and needs of the United States for the completion, operation, maintenance, control, and protection of the interoceanic canal across its domain—subject, of course, to the sovereignty of Colombia and a reasonable and just convention between the two nations.

Colombia views with admiration, as does the rest of the world, the splendid magnanimity, the farseeing statesmanship, the virile and comprehensive policy which moves this people to construct the greatest undertaking which ever has engaged the attention of mankind, not for its own benefit alone, nor with selfish preference to its own commerce, but for the common benefit, upon equal terms and under universal neutrality in times of peace for all the peoples of the earth.

History does not furnish another instance of such national generosity, patriotism, and wisdom.

This could not but call out from Colombia the warmest response; and that nation takes pride in associating herself with an affair conducted upon such an elevated plane of national and international duty and concern.

The Isthmian Canal Commission, a most distinguished and able body, selected with such care by President McKinley to consider all possible isthmian canal routes and to determine which of them it is most to the interest of the United States to acquire, has reported unanimously that the Panama route is the most practicable and feasible route for an isthmian canal, to be under the control, management, and ownership of the United States. Therefore the solution of the problem involves only two other conditions:

1. The sale by the New Panama Canal Company to the United States of the concession, property, and rights of the canal, with the shares of the Panama Railroad Company; and

2. A new concessionary convention or treaty with Colombia.

The first of these two conditions already has been made easy of fulfillment in the formal acceptance by the New Panama Canal Company of the valuation fixed by the Isthmian Canal Commission—$40,000,000—and by its duly authorized proposal to the United States for a sale of the property at that price (subject, or course, to a satisfactory convention being arrived at between the United States and Colombia).

The sole remaining condition, then, is the determination of the concessionary and treaty relations of the United States to a zone of territory across the Isthmus of Panama necessary for the consummation of the undertaking.

There has not been a moment in which Colombia has not entertained the keenest desire to further the designs of the United States, and this sentiment has prevailed under each succeeding administration in Colombia and alike in both of the great national parties who alternately have ruled in that country.

This sentiment is neither new-born nor inspired by hope of pecuniary gain. The two nations are old friends, and this feeling assumed practical form in 1846, when the treaty of that year was made, which expressly provided for the construction of this canal, in furtherance of which Colombia guaranteed to the United States the free transit of the Isthmus and granted extraordinary concessions to the people and commerce of the United States upon terms of perfect equality with its own citizens, while the United States in turn guaranteed the neutrality of the Isthmus and of the canal to be constructed upon it, as well as the sovereignty of Colombia over that territory.

It is a significant fact that this treaty of 1846-1848, assuring to the United States especial rights and privileges upon the Isthmus of Panama in connection with any interoceanic canal or railroad across the Isthmus of Panama, antedates the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. The treaty of 1846-1848 is in full force, as it has continued to be without change from the date of its execution.

Colombia has never made a treaty with any other nation upon the subject of an isthmian canal, although it was at liberty to do so.

These treaty ties, cementing their joint design for the construction of a new highway for the world, have held the two nations together in common interests and unbroken friendship for more than a half century.

By granting the concessions now owned by the New Panama Canal Company and by furthering the construction of the canal to its present advanced stage of completion by the old and new Panama canal companies, Colombia initiated the great work which now, happily, the United States may consummate.

While the minister of Colombia was in Washington for more than a year, waiting for the moment when the subject could be seriously and attentively discussed, it is only since January 4, 1902, that anything could be definitely said or done, since then, and then only, was a definite proposal of sale made by the canal company. Immediately thereupon, however, the Government of Colombia, requiring the service of its then minister in other important fields, designated its minister of war, Señor Concha, as minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary to come at once from Bogota to Washington, charged with its ripest views and amplest instructions, to confer with the executive authorities of the United States, and, after exchange of information and opinions, to reach a satisfactory convention.

Minister Concha has devoted himself since his arrival a few weeks ago absorbingly to this task, and is prepared to reach a conclusion with the executive officers of the Government.

He is fully empowered to negotiate and sign a treaty, subject only to the ratification of the Colombian Congress, as in like cases with all nations.

But Colombia is in the dark as to the precise desires and needs of the United States upon the subject, and Minister Concha can not, of course, anticipate in his first statement all the reasonable requirements of this Government. He wishes, however, to manifest in the most hearty manner the desire of his Government to facilitate the purposes of the United States, and this disposition is manifested by the comprehensive convention which he has this day submitted to you, but not as an ultimatum.

The establishment of a canal convention involves, as you are so well aware, besides the utilization of a canal zone for the construction, operation, maintenance, control, and protection of a canal, railroad and auxiliary works, as well as a grant renewable perpetually and a consent to the sale by the New Panama Canal Company (all of which Colombia concedes in the convention submitted), but also numerous other grave questions relating to judicial procedure, punishment of crimes, the capture of criminals, sanitary and police regulations of Panama and Colon, proper regard to the vested interests upon the Isthmus, exemption of the United States from all forms of taxes, port charges or other dues, etc. Quite aside from pecuniary matters, these are subjects which only can be examined and negotiated directly with you in person and are impossible of negotiation with the Houses of Congress.

Permit me to call attention to the facts that a canal convention in respect of the Isthmus of Panama necessarily involves considerations which do not relate to a section where there is but a wilderness uninhabited by man and producing no income to the nation. The convention respecting the Panama route covers a zone which has been the pathway of commerce across the continent for four hundred years, with important cities at its termini, with villages along the route, with a settled population, with considerable property, and with important vested interests which are to be taken into consideration.

All of this represents an increment of value in civilizing influences, in means of protection, in expenditures of national funds for improvement and development, as well as in certitude of engineering plans, of all which the United States now may derive the benefit.

It would be neither in order nor fitting for the canal company or myself to express any views, one way or the other, upon any of the provisions of the proposed treaty, and our reserve in that regard will be noted. However, I beg to refer, by special request of the minister, to Article XXV of his proposed treaty, and which article relates to the pecuniary terms. Colombia is prepared to discuss, negotiate, and decide upon the precise sum or sums which may be reasonable for the United States to pay and for Colombia to ask, but as the subject is in the hands of Congress and it seems impracticable at the moment to secure a definite expression of the views of the United States upon the subject, Colombia manifests its good faith and reasonableness by proposing that the annuity shall be only such sum as mutually may be agreed upon between the nations, or, failing in such agreement, such fair and reasonable amount as may be determined by a high commission, presided over by the president of the International Peace Tribunal of The Hague, the remaining members being nominated in equal number by the two nations.

Such annuity would only be fixed once in a hundred years. The national requirements of Colombia make a payment of $7,000,000 desirable, and you will note the provisions on that head; but I also ask you to note that Colombia waives the annuity for the first fourteen years. This method insures to the United States the concessionary rights which it requires and which can not be affected or interrupted by any difference or delay respecting the ascertainment of the annuity. The United States is only required to pay such sum as it may agree upon or as may be determined to be fair and reasonable. Colombia does not ask more than what may be determined to be fair and reasonable, and surely the United States does not wish to do less than that.

I have the honor to be, Mr. Secretary, your obedient servant,

WM. NELSON CROMWELL,
General Counsel New Panama Canal Company.

LEGACION DE COLOMBIA,
Washington, D. C., April 18, 1902.

SIR: Confirming the conclusions reached as the result of the conference held between yourself and Mr. Cromwell, and adopting, as far as practicable, your valuable suggestions, I beg leave to hand you the concessionary convention or treaty (in Spanish and in English) embodying the amendments agreed upon in the conference referred to.

My previous communication of March 31, 1902, proposing the concessionary convention or treaty in behalf of my Government, and the expository communications of myself and Mr. Cromwell under the same date, apply equally to the inclosures.

Awaiting the pleasure of your excellency, I have the honor to renew the assurances of my high consideration.

J. V. CONCHA.

Hon. JOHN HAY,
Secretary of State of the United States,
Department of State.

Memorandum of points to be embodied in a convention between the Republic of Colombia and the United States of America for the construction of an interoceanic canal by the Panama route and the management of the railroad over said Isthmus in furtherance of Article XXXV of the treaty of 1845-1848 existing between said nations. Presented by the undersigned envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the Republic of Colombia.

ARTICLE I.

The Government of Colombia authorizes the New Panama Canal Company to sell and transfer to the United States its rights, privileges, properties, and concessions, as well as the Panama Railroad, and all the shares or part of the shares of that company, with the exception of the public lands situated outside of the zone hereinafter specified, now corresponding to the concessions to both said enterprises, which public lands shall revert to the Republic of Colombia.

But it is understood that Colombia reserves all its rights to the special shares in the capital of the New Panama Canal Company, to which reference is made in Article IV of the contract of December 10, 1890, which shares shall be paid their full nominal value at least.

The railroad company (and the United States as owner of the enterprise) shall be free from the obligations imposed by the railroad concession, excepting as to the payment at maturity by the railroad company of the outstanding bonds issued by said railroad company.

ARTICLE II.

The United States shall have the exclusive right to excavate, construct, maintain, operate, control, and protect a maritime canal from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, to and across the territory of Colombia, such canal to be of sufficient depth and capacity for vessels of the largest tonnage and greatest draft now engaged in commerce, and also the same rights for the construction, maintenance, operation, control, and protection of railway, telegraph and telephone lines, canals, dikes, dams, reservoirs, and such other auxiliary works as may be necessary and convenient for the construction, maintenance, protection, and operation of the canal.

ARTICLE III.

To enable the United States to exercise the rights and privileges granted by the foregoing articles, the Republic of Colombia grants to that Government the use of a zone of territory along the route of the canal to be opened 5 kilometers in width on either side thereof, measured from its center line, excluding the cities of Panama and Colon. So far as necessary for the construction, maintenance, and operation of the canal, the United States shall have the use and occupation of the group of small islands in the bay of Panama named Perico, Naos, and Flamenco, together with 10 fathoms of water in the bay of Limon in extension of the canal; but the same shall not be construed as being within the zone herein defined nor governed by the special provisions applicable to the zone. This concession shall be for the term of one hundred years, renewable at the option of the United States for periods of similar durations and subject to the payment of the amount hereinafter expressed.

This grant shall in no manner invalidate the titles or rights of private landholders in the said zone of territory, nor shall it interfere with the rights of way over the public roads of the Department.

All the stipulations contained in article 35 of the treaty of 1846-1848 between the contracting parties shall continue and apply in full force to the cities of Panama and Colon and to the accessory community lands within the said zone; and the territory thereon shall be neutral territory and the United States shall continue to guarantee the neutrality thereof and the sovereignty of Colombia thereover, in conformity with the above-mentioned article 35 of said treaty.

In furtherance of this provision, there shall be created a joint commission by the Governments of Colombia and the United States that shall establish and enforce sanitary and police regulations.

ARTICLE IV.

The rights and privileges granted to the United States by the terms of this convention shall not affect the sovereignty of the Republic of Colombia over the territory within whose boundaries such rights and privileges are to be exercised.

The United States freely acknowledges and recognizes this sovereignty and disavows any intention to impair it in any way whatever, or to increase its territory at the expense of Colombia or of any of the sister republics in Central or South America, but, on the contrary, it desires to strengthen the power of the republics on this continent, and to promote, develop, and maintain their prosperity and independence.

ARTICLE V.

The Republic of Colombia authorizes the United States to construct and maintain at each entrance and terminus of the proposed canal a port for vessels using the same, with suitable light-houses and other aids to navigation; and the United States is authorized to use and occupy, within the limits of the zone fixed by this convention, such parts of the coast line, and of the lands and islands adjacent thereto, as are necessary for this purpose, including the construction and maintenance of breakwaters, dikes, jetties, embankments, coaling stations, docks, and other appropriate works. And the United States undertakes the construction and maintenance of such works, and will bear all the expense thereof. The ports, when established, shall be declared free, and their demarcations shall be clearly and definitely defined.

To give effect to this article the United States will give special attention and care to the maintenance of works for drainage, sanitary, and healthful purposes along the line of the canal and its dependencies, in order to prevent the invasion of epidemics, or of securing their prompt suppression, should they appear. With this end in view, the United States will organize hospitals along the line of the canal and will suitably supply the towns of Panama and Colon with the necessary aqueducts and drainage works, in order to prevent their becoming centers of infection on account of their proximity to the canal.

The Government of Colombia will secure the possession of the land that may be required in the towns of Panama and Colon to effect the improvements above referred to, and the Government of the United States shall be authorized to impose and collect equitable water rates previously agreed upon with the Government of Colombia during fifty years, for the service rendered; but on the expiration of said term the use of the water shall be free for the inhabitants of Panama and Colon, except to the extent that may be necessary for the maintenance of said aqueducts.

ARTICLE VI.

The Republic of Colombia agrees that it will not cede or lease to any foreign government any of its islands or harbors within or adjacent to the Bay of Panama nor on the Atlantic coast of Colombia between the Atrato River and the western boundary of the Department of Panama for the purpose of establishing fortifications, naval or coaling stations, military posts, docks, or other works that might interfere with the construction, maintenance, operation, protection, safety, and free use of the canal and auxiliary works. In order to enable Colombia to comply with this stipulation, the Government of the United States agrees to give Colombia the material support that may be required, in order to prevent the occupation of said islands and ports, guaranteeing there the sovereignty, independence, and integrity of Colombia.

ARTICLE VII.

The Republic of Colombia includes in the foregoing grant the right, without obstacle, cost, or impediment, to the free navigation and use of the waters of the Chagres River and other streams, lakes, and lagoons, and of all waterways, natural and artificial, within the jurisdiction and under the dominion of the Republic of Colombia in the Department of Panama, that may be necessary or desirable for the construction, maintenance, and operation of the canal and its auxiliary works, including the right to raise and lower the levels of the waters and to deflect them, and to rectify and navigate any and all streams, lakes, and lagoons. All damages caused to private landowners by inundation, or by the deviation of water course, or in other ways, arising out of the construction or operation of the canal, shall in each case be appraised and settled by a joint commission, appointed by the Governments of Colombia and the United States; but the cost of the indemnities so agreed upon shall be borne solely by the United States.

ARTICLE VIII.

The Government of Colombia declares free for all time the ports at either entrance of the canal and the waters thereof in such manner that there shall not be collected by the Government of Colombia custom-house tolls, tonnage, anchorage, light-house, wharf, pilot, or quarantine dues, nor any other charges or taxes of any kind shall be levied or imposed by the Government of Colombia upon any vessel using or passing through the canal or belonging to or employed by the United States, directly or indirectly, in connection with the construction, maintenance, and operation of the main work or its auxiliaries, or upon the cargo, officers, crew, or passengers of any such vessel; it being the intent of this convention that all vessels and their cargoes, crews, and passengers shall be permitted to use and pass through the canal, and the ports leading thereto, subject to no other demands or impositions than such tolls and charges as may be imposed by the United States for the use of the canal and other works; it being understood that such tolls and charges shall be equal for vessels of all nations.

The ports leading to the canal also shall be free to the commerce of the world, and no duties or taxes shall be imposed, except upon merchandise destined to be introduced for the consumption of the rest of the Republic of Colombia or the Department of Panama and upon vessels touching at the ports of Colon and Panama and which do not cross the canal. Though the said ports shall be free and open to all, the Government of Colombia may establish in them such custom-houses and guards as Colombia may deem necessary to collect duties on importations destined to other portions of Colombia and to prevent contraband trade. The United States shall have the right to make use of the ports at the two extremities of the canal as places of anchorage in order to make repairs, for loading, unloading, depositing, or transshipping cargoes, either in transit or destined for the service of the canal.

ARTICLE IX.

There shall not be imposed any taxes, national, municipal, departmental, or of any other class, upon the canal, the vessels that may use it, tugs and other vessels employed in the service of the canal, the railways and auxiliary works, storehouses, workshops, offices, quarters for laborers, factories of all kinds, warehouses, wharves, machinery and other works, property and effects appertaining to the canal or railroad or that may be necessary for the service of the canal or railroad and their dependencies, whether situated within the cities of Panama and Colon or any other place authorized by the provisions of this convention.

Nor shall there be imposed contributions or charges of a personal character of whatever species upon officers, employees, laborers, and other individuals in the service of the canal and its dependencies.

ARTICLE X.

It is agreed that telegraph and telephone lines, when established for canal purposes, may also, under suitable regulations, be used for public and private business in connection with the systems of Colombia and the other American republics and with the lines of cable companies authorized to enter the ports and territory of these republics; but the official dispatches of the Government of Colombia and the authorities of the Department of Panama shall not pay for such service higher tolls than those required from the officials in the service of the United States.

ARTICLE XI.

The Government of Colombia shall permit the immigration and free access to the lands and workshops of the canal enterprises of all employees and workmen, of whatever nationality, under contract to work upon the said canal and its dependencies, with their respective families; and all such persons shall be free and exempt from the military service of the Republic of Colombia.

ARTICLE XII.

The United States may import at any time into the said zone free of custom duties, imposts, taxes, or other charges, and without any restriction, any and all vessels, dredges, engines, cars, machinery, tools, explosives, materials, supplies, and other articles necessary and convenient in the construction, maintenance, and operation of the canal and auxiliary works; also, all provisions, medicines, clothings, supplies, and other things necessary and convenient for the officers, employees, workmen, and laborers in the service and employ of the United States within the said zone and for their families. If any such articles are disposed of for use without the zone and within the territory of the Republic, they shall be subject to the same import or other duties as like articles under the laws of Colombia, or the ordinances of the Department of Panama.

ARTICLE XIII.

The United States shall have authority within the said zone to protect and make secure the canal, as well as railways and other auxiliary works, and to preserve order and discipline among the laborers and other persons who may congregate in that region in consequence of the proposed work.

The Governments of Colombia and the United States shall agree upon the regulations necessary for said purpose, as well as to the capture and delivery of criminals to the respective authorities. Special regulations also shall be agreed upon, in the manner aforesaid, for the establishment of laws and jurisdiction to decide controversies that may arise respecting contracts relative to the construction and management of the canal and its dependencies, as well as to the trial and punishment of crimes that may be committed within the said zone of the canal.

ARTICLE XIV.

The works of the canal, the railways, and their auxiliaries shall be declared of public utility, and in consequence all areas of land and water necessary for the construction, maintenance, and operation of the canal and the other specified works may be expropriated in conformity with the laws of Colombia, except that the indemnity shall be conclusively determined, without appeal, by a joint commission appointed by the Governments of Colombia and the United States.

The indemnities awarded by the commission for such expropriation shall be borne by the United States, but the appraisal of said lands and the assessment of damages shall be based upon their value before the commencement of the work upon the canal.

ARTICLE XV.

The Republic of Colombia grants to the United States the use of all the ports of the Republic open to commerce as places of refuge for any vessels employed in the canal enterprise and for all vessels in distress having the right to pass through the canal and wishing to anchor in said ports. Such vessels shall be exempt from anchorage and tonnage dues on the part of Colombia.

ARTICLE XVI.

The canal, when constructed, and the entrances thereto, shall be neutral in perpetuity, and shall be opened upon equal terms to the vessels of all nations at uniform tonnage and other rates that may be imposed in virtue of the stipulations of this convention and in conformity with the stipulations of the treaty entered into by the Governments of the United States and Great Britain, on November 18, 1901, and known as the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

ARTICLE XVII.

The Government of Colombia shall have the right to transport over the canal its vessels, troops, and munitions of war at all times, without paying charges of any kind. This exemption is to be extended to the auxiliary railway for the transportation of persons in the service of the Republic of Colombia or of the Department of Panama or of the police force charged with the preservation of public order, as well as to their baggage, munitions of war, and supplies.

ARTICLE XVIII.

The United States shall have full power and authority to establish and enforce regulations for the use of the canal, railways, and the entering ports and auxiliary works, and to fix rates of tolls and charges thereof subject to the limitations stated in the Article XVI.

ARTICLE XIX.

The rights and privileges granted to the United States by this convention shall not affect the sovereignty of the Republic of Colombia over the real estate that may be acquired by the United States, by reason of the transfer of the rights of the New Panama Canal Company and the Panama Railroad Company lying outside of the said canal zone.

ARTICLE XX.

If by virtue of any existing treaty between the Republic of Colombia and any third power there may be privileges or concessions relative to an interoceanic means of communication which especially favors such third power and which in any of its terms may be incompatible with the terms of the present convention, the Republic of Colombia agrees to cancel or modify such treaty in due form, for which purpose it shall give to the said third power the requisite notification within the term of four months from the date of the present convention, and in case the existing treaty contains no clause permitting their involuntary annulment, the Republic of Colombia agrees to procure its modification or annulment in such form that there shall not exist any conflicts with the stipulations of the present convention.

ARTICLE XXI.

The rights and privileges granted by the Republic of Colombia to the United States in the preceding articles are understood to be free from all anterior concessions or privileges to other governments, corporations, syndicates, or individuals; and consequently, if there should arise any claims on account of the present concessions and privileges, the claimants shall resort to the Government of Colombia and not to the United States for any indemnity or compromise which may be required.

ARTICLE XXII.

The Government of Colombia renounces the participation to which it might be entitled in the future earnings of the canal under Article XV of the contract with the Universal Panama Canal Company; and it likewise renounces now and hereafter all the rights reserved in the said concession which shall belong to Colombia at the expiration of the term of ninety-nine years of the concession granted to the above-mentioned company.

ARTICLE XXIII.

If it should become necessary at any time to employ armed forces for the safety or protection of the canal or of the ships that make use of the same, or the railways and other works, the Republic of Colombia agrees to provide the forces necessary for such purpose, according to the circumstances of the case, but if the Government of Colombia can not effectively comply with this obligation, then, with the consent of or at the request of Colombia, or of her minister at Washington, or of the local authorities, civil or military, the United States shall employ such force as may be necessary for that sole purpose; and as soon as the necessity shall have ceased will withdraw the forces so employed. Under exceptional circumstances, however, on account of unforeseen or imminent danger to said canal, railways, and other works, or to the lives and property of the persons employed upon the canal, railways, and other works the Government of the United States is authorized to act in the interest of their protection without the necessity of obtaining the consent beforehand of the Government of Colombia; and it shall give immediate advice of the measures adopted for the purpose stated; and as soon as sufficient Colombian forces shall arrive to attend to the indicated purpose, those of the United States shall retire.

ARTICLE XXIV.

The Government of the United States agrees to complete the construction of the preliminary works necessary, together with all the auxiliary works, in the shortest time possible; and within two years from the date of the exchange of ratification of this convention the main works of this canal proper shall be commenced, and it shall be opened to the traffic between the two oceans within twelve years after such period of two years. In case, however, that any difficulties or obstacles should arise in the construction of the canal which are at present impossible to foresee, in consideration of the good faith with which the Government of the United States shall have proceeded and the large amount of money expended so far on the works and the nature of the difficulties which may have arisen, the Government of Colombia will prolong the terms stipulated in this article up to twelve years more for the completion of the work of the canal.

ARTICLE XXV.

As the price or compensation for the right to use the zone granted in this convention by Colombia to the United States for the construction of a canal, together with the proprietary right over the Panama Railroad, and for the annuity of $250,000 gold which Colombia ceases to receive from the said railroad, as well as in compensation for other rights, privileges, and exemptions granted to the United States; and in consideration of the increase in the administrative expenses of the Department of Panama, consequent upon the construction of the said canal, the Government of the United States binds itself to pay Colombia the amount of $7,000,000 in American gold on the exchange of the ratification of this convention, after its approval by the legislative bodies of both countries, and fourteen years after the date aforesaid a fair and reasonable annuity that shall be agreed upon by the contracting Governments three years before the expiration of the above-mentioned term of fourteen years.

In fixing this fair and reasonable annuity there shall be taken into consideration the present price of the usufruct of the railway as well as the compensation that is to be stipulated for the use of the zone and for the additional administrative expenses that the construction of the canal will impose upon Colombia, and also the advanced payment of $7,000,000 and the comparative cost and conditions upon which the United States reasonably could have expected to acquire concessions satisfactory to it in respect of any other canal route.

Three years before the expiration of each term of one hundred years the annuity for the following term shall be fixed in a similar manner.

But in the event that the parties are unable to come to an understanding within the periods above referred to as to such fair and reasonable annuity, then, before the second year prior to the termination of the periods above referred to, the contracting parties shall proceed to constitute a high commission, to be composed of five members, of whom two shall be appointed by Colombia, two by the United States, and the fifth (who shall be the president of such high commission) shall be the president for the time being of the International Peace Tribunal of The Hague; and the determination reached by said commission, by a majority vote, concerning such fair and reasonable annuity that is to be paid to Colombia by the United States in conformity with this article shall be binding upon the contracting parties.

But no delay nor difference of opinion in fixing such amount shall affect nor interrupt the full operation and effect of this convention in all other respects.

ARTICLE XXVI.

If after the lapse of five years from the date of this convention the necessary works for the opening of the canal should not have been commenced by the United States, or if after the expiration of the twelve years stipulated for the completion of the work and the extension of twelve years referred to in Article XXIV the canal should not be opened to commerce, all the concessions granted by this convention shall be forfeited and all the works, principal and accessory, machinery, and properties of the canal shall become the property of the Republic of Colombia, and the same Republic shall recover its actual rights over the Panama Railway, without any obligation to return any of the sums that it may have received in conformity with this convention.

ARTICLE XXVII.

This convention when signed by the contracting parties shall be submitted for legislative approval, and shall be exchanged within a term of eight months from this date.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 21, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt at your hands of a communication dated the 31st of March, 1902, and another of the 18th of April, inclosing a proposal of the Republic of Colombia for a concessionary convention or treaty between the Republic of Colombia and that of the United States of America respecting the completion, maintenance, operation, control, and protection of an interoceanic canal over the Isthmus of Panama.

I am directed by the President to inform you that I shall be ready to sign with you the proposed convention as soon as—

First. The Congress of the United States shall have authorized the President to enter into such an arrangement; and Second. As soon as the law officers of this Government shall have decided upon the question of the title which the New Panama Canal Company is able to give of all the properties and rights claimed by it and pertaining to a canal across the Isthmus and covered by the pending proposal.

Accept, sir, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

JOHN HAY.

Señor Don JOSÉ VICENTE CONCHA.

LEGATION OF COLOMBIA,
Washington, D. C., April 23, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the reception of your excellency's communication of the 21st instant, by which you are pleased to inform me that you are authorized by the President of the United States to sign with the Republic of Colombia the treaty relative to the opening of the Panama Canal, and the other details connected with the said work in accordance with the draft I submitted to the Government of the United States on the 18th instant, and that you will proceed to do so as soon as permission shall have been given by the Congress of this Republic, and as the official lawyers shall have given their opinion regarding the title of the new canal company for the transfer of its rights.

When the occasion to sign the above-mentioned treaty shall arise, I will present, according to usage, the full powers authorizing me to do so.

Accept, Excellency, the sentiments of my high consideration.

JOSE VICENTE CONCHA.

Hon. JOHN HAY,
Secretary of State of the United States, Department of State.

[Translation.]

Mr. Corea to Mr. Hay, May 14, 1902.

In pursuance of the offer made orally and in my personal note of the 12th instant to your excellency, I have the honor to transmit herewith a draft of a treaty embodying the proposal of my Government touching the interocanic canal through Nicaragua. This draft, save a few changes which I had to make in obedience to superior orders, is the same as that which your excellency prepared on February 12, and was pleased to amend on March 11 and 25 and on April 26 last, in deference to observations presented by me.

If your excellency will, as you said to me you would, lay this proposal before the proper committees of Congress, I should be pleased if it were accompanied by the protocol on the same subject, which I had the honor to sign with your excellency on December 1, 1900. These papers will show that Nicaragua has been and is still disposed to enter into direct negotiations with the United States as soon as provision therefor shall have been made by Congress, and at the same time make it clear that since no decision has yet been reached by that body in the matter the present proposal is not to be taken as final, but remains subject to amendments by which the conclusion of a perfected and more suitable agreement between the contracting parties may be facilitated.

Please accept, Mr. Secretary, the assurances of my most distinguished consideration.

APPENDIX A.

CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND NICARAGUA, JUNE 21, 1849 (CONCLUDED BUT NOT SUBMITTED TO THE SENATE IN CONSEQUENCE OF THE SUBSEQUENT CONCLUSION OF THE CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY).

The United States of America and the State of Nicaragua, having in view the grand design of opening and establishing through the territories of the latter State a passage and communication between the Caribbean Sea and the Pacific Ocean to facilitate the commerce between the two oceans and to produce other great results, and designing to establish, regulate, and define the grants, rights, privileges, and immunities that shall appertain to each other with reference to such great object by means of a treaty and special convention, for the accomplishment of these desirable purposes the President of the United States of America has conferred full powers on Elijah Hise, chargé d'affaires of the Government of said States in Central America, and the State of Nicaragua hath likewise granted full powers to Sr. Licdo Don Buenaventura Selva, chargé d'affaires of the Government of the said State of Nicaragua near the United States legation in Central America, who, after having exchanged their said full powers in due and proper form, have agreed and do agree upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

It is solemnly agreed between the two high contracting parties that the State of Nicaragua doth grant to and confer upon the United States of America, or to a company of the citizens thereof, the exclusive right and privilege to make, construct, and build within the territories of the said State of Nicaragua, through or by the use and means of any of the streams, rivers, bays, harbors, lakes, or lands under the jurisdiction or within the limits of the said State, a canal or canals, a road or roads, either railways or turnpikes or any other kind of roads, for the purpose of opening a convenient passage and communication, either by land alone, or water alone, or by both land and water, and by means, if deemed proper, of locks and dams, or by any other mode of overcoming and removing the obstructions to the navigation of the said rivers, lakes, harbors, etc., between the Caribbean Sea and the Pacific Ocean, for the transit and passage of ships, steamers, sailing vessels, boats, and vessels of all kinds, as well as vehicles of every sort used for the transportation and conveyance of persons and property and of goods, wares, and merchandise of every description, and the United States or the company which may be formed by virtue of such charters as shall be made as herein provided shall be permitted for the construction of said works to procure, take, and obtain within the territories of Nicaragua all kinds of materials, such as stone, timber, earths, and whatever else may be necessary and proper for the said purposes, free of any charge so far as the said materials may be procured on the lands belonging to said State.

ARTICLE II.

The State of Nicaragua cedes and grants to the United States, or to a chartered company of the citizens thereof, as the case may be, absolutely, all the land that may be required for the location and construction of said canal or canals, road or roads, and which may be necessary for the erection of buildings and houses of every description for the residence and accommodation of the engineers, superintendents, and laborers, and all others employed in the making and construction of the said works, or in governing, managing, and controlling the same, and also for the erection of all such necessary buildings as may be requisite and proper for the purpose of storing away therein all the tools, machines, materials, and property of every description which may be required for the use in the construction, repairing, preservation, and management of said works, and should any portion of the lands or materials, or of the rivers, bays, ports, or their coasts or lakes, and their shores, which may be necessary and proper to be applied for the location and construction of said works and its appurtenances, belong to individuals, the State of Nicaragua agrees and undertakes to extinguish the titles thereto, and to procure the same upon a just principle of valuation for the aforesaid public works. The aforesaid cession and grant shall include a space of not less than 300 feet on each side of the lines of said works, and extending all along the whole length thereof, so that ample space be secured on the margins of said works for the convenient use thereof. The just value of such of said lands and materials as may be private property at the date of this treaty will be paid for by said company.

ARTICLE III.

It is agreed that if the Government of the United States shall decide not to undertake and construct the said works, then either the President or Congress thereof shall have the power and authority to frame, enact, and issue a charter or act of incorporation containing such liberal provisions, and such grants of rights and privileges, not inconsistent with the rights of the contracting parties herein secured, as may be necessary, convenient, and proper to effect the great objects in view, which charter and act of incorporation shall provide as follows:

First. That the company which may be formed and organized under and by virtue of its provisions shall be composed exclusively of the citizens of one or both of the contracting parties, who may subscribe for and become the owners of the whole of the capital stock required for the said works. If, however, such citizens (thus having the preference) shall fail in due time to subscribe for and become the owners of the whole amount of the said capital stock, the residue thereof not taken by them may be taken, paid in, and owned by the Governments of both or either of the contracting parties, or by the Governments or citizens of any other nation, kingdom, or country.

Second. That said company shall have the sole and exclusive right and privilege of constructing and owning such works as are herein named within the State of Nicaragua, provided the same are commenced and prosecuted within the time limited in this convention.

Third. It shall authorize the said company to build and construct said canal or canals in such directions and of such width and depth as they shall in their discretion determine, and if the plan of roads is in part or in whole adopted, the route, width, kind, and number thereof shall be determined upon by the said company as they may think proper.

Fourth. It shall provide that said company may make contracts, sue, and be sued as a corporation, with a given name and style, have a corporate seal, and engage in all such trade and business as may be proper and convenient in promoting all the operations required for the attainment of the ends in view.

Fifth. It shall contain provisions adequate for the organization of said company; it shall provide for the appointment of the officers, agents, engineers, surveyors, superintendents, and other employees of said company; and that said company may make and adopt all its own by-laws and regulations, so that the same be not in conflict with the provisions of this convention.

Sixth. It shall provide that said company may not only build and construct, but also enlarge, alter, repair, and reconstruct the said works as they may think proper, and that they may manage and govern the same and manage and control the financial affairs of the corporation.

Seventh. It shall provide that the said company shall make annual reports to the executive governments of the United States and the State of Nicaragua, setting forth their receipts and expenditures, and the condition, operations, and affairs of the said company.

Eighth. It shall provide that the management of the affairs of said company shall be vested and lodged in nine managers, five of whom shall be appointed by the company for a period of time and in a manner to be regulated by the said charter, and in like manner two of the said managers shall be appointed by the President of the United States and two by the Executive Chief of the State of Nicaragua, and the said nine managers shall appoint their own president.

Ninth. It shall provide that the Governments of either of the contracting parties may, through their committees, freely examine and investigate the affairs, business operations, and condition, financial and otherwise, of the said company, and for such purpose such committees may examine the books and papers of the company, and examine the officers thereof and other witnesses on oath, and make reports thereon to their respective Governments.

Tenth. It shall provide that said company shall have the sole and exclusive right and privilege of conveying persons and passengers, and of conveying all steamers, ships, and vessels of all kinds, by towage or otherwise, and of transporting in the vessels of others or of their own all property, goods, wares, and merchandise over, through, and upon said navigable waters, canal or canals, road or roads, which shall be improved, made, or constructed by them at such rates, charges, duties, and tolls as the said company may think proper to establish; except, however, that the said charter shall further provide that all the vessels of war and all other public vessels of every description belonging to the Governments of the two contracting parties, as well also as all other vessels which may be engaged in the permanent or temporary employment of the said Governments to transport their troops, munitions of war, their public property of all kinds, and to convey their public agents, consuls, ministers, and all their officers, civil and military, shall be permitted to have the free and unrestricted use of the said canal or canals and navigable waters, and shall if necessary and required be conveyed through the same by the said company free of all costs and charge; said charter shall further provide also that the public mails of the contracting parties shall be conveyed and transported along and over the said works by the said company, in their own vessels or vehicles, free of cost or charge, and the contracting parties agree and stipulate with all solemnity that the aforesaid rights and privileges shall be enjoyed by each other perpetually, and that said charter shall provide accordingly; said charter shall also further provide that the citizens of the two parties shall enjoy and possess the right and privilege with their vessels, goods, merchandise, and property, and persons to pass and be conveyed through, upon, and over the said canals, roads, and navigable waters on terms at least as favorable as the subjects or citizens of any other nation or country.

Eleventh. Said charter shall provide that the said works shall be commenced by said company within ten years after it shall be fully organized under said charter, or otherwise forfeit their privileges; so likewise if they shall after said works are begun declare their intention to abandon them and cease to prosecute the same for four entire successive years intentionally.

ARTICLE IV.

The charter aforesaid may contain such other provisions and grants of rights and privileges not in violation of or in conflict with any of the preceding or subsequent articles of this treaty as may be deemed necessary, convenient, or proper for the objects in view by either the President or Congress of the United States, and the same when framed and issued shall be approved and legalized by the Government of the State of Nicaragua, and no privileges or emoluments shall be granted in said charter to either of the contracting parties which shall not likewise be held and enjoyed to the same extent by the other.

ARTICLE V.

The Government of the United States shall have the right to erect such forts and fortifications at the ends and along the lines of said works, and to arm and occupy the same in such manner and with as many troops as may be deemed necessary by the said Government for the protection and defense thereof, and also for the preservation of the peace and neutrality of the territories of Nicaragua, to whom pertains equal rights as inherent to her sovereignty.

ARTICLE VI.

The public armed vessels, letters of marque, and privateers, and the private merchant and trading vessels belonging either to the governments, or the subjects, or citizens of nations, kingdoms, or countries with which either of the contracting parties may be at war, shall not, during the continuance of such war, be suffered or allowed to come in the ports at the terminations of said canals nor be allowed to pass on or through the same, on any account whatever; neither shall the vessels of neutral nations, whether public or private, be allowed to convey by means of said canal articles contraband of war, to or for the enemies of either of the contracting parties, or to or for other nations or states who may be at war with each other; nor shall the vessels of countries which are engaged in war with each other, owned or employed and armed by them to carry on such war, during the continuance be allowed to pass through the said canals. The public and private vessels of all nations, kingdoms, and countries which are in peace with both the contracting parties and with each other shall be permitted to enter said ports, and to pass or be conveyed through the said canals, but they shall be subject, however, to the payment of such duties, charges, and tolls as may be established by the proprietors of the said works.

ARTICLE VII.

The State of Nicaragua may, of course, exercise her right of erecting and establishing anywhere on the routes or margins, or at the points of termination of said works, custom-houses and warehouses, and to collect duties, according to her own laws, upon the goods, wares, and merchandise imported for sale or consumption into her territories by means of said works, and the State of Nicaragua may adopt and enforce all needful rules and regulations to prevent smuggling or the introduction of contraband goods in her territories; but it is expressly agreed that the State of Nicaragua shall not impose, enforce, or collect any taxes, charges, or duties of any kind or amount on the persons (for passports), or property, or on goods, wares, or merchandise of any class or kind on their travel or transit over, or for passing through her territories by means of said canals, roads, etc., provided the said property, goods, wares, and merchandise shall be not sold or not introduced for sale or consumption into the said State, but be exported to other states or countries.

ARTICLE VIII.

The ports at the points of termination of said works shall be free to both the contracting parties and their citizens, respectively; and their public and private vessels of all kinds shall enter and remain therein and depart therefrom and not be subjected to the payment of any port charges, tonnage duties, or other imposition whatever.

ARTICLE IX.

The persons employed in the location and construction of said works, the owners thereof, and all their agents, and officers, and employees of every sort, shall be under the special protection of the Governments of both the contracting parties, and they shall not be subject to any kind of taxation on their persons or property, nor shall they be required to pay any contributions or to perform any civil or military duty or service whatever for either of the two Governments during their employment about the said works; and all provisions, including wines and liquors, and all merchandise imported into Nicaragua for their clothing and subsistence shall be free and exempt from all duties and taxes, direct or indirect; and all such articles, property, stores, tools, implements, and machines, etc., as may be required for surveys and explorations, and for locating and constructing said works, shall be imported into the State of Nicaragua free from all taxes and duties whatever thereon, and the vessels employed in the importation of the said subsistence, clothing, tools, implements, etc., shall also be free and exempt from all port charges and tonnage duties in all the ports, rivers, lakes, or harbors on the coasts or within the limits of the State of Nicaragua; and entire liberty is to be enjoyed by the said company to make full and complete surveys and explorations of the ports, bays, seas, lakes, rivers, and territories of Nicaragua, in order to the location of said works and for the procurement of lands and materials necessary for the same, in which explorations and surveys Nicaragua, at her own expense, may participate, if she thinks proper.

ARTICLE X.

The State of Nicaragua grants and cedes to the United States or to a company to be chartered as herein provided, as the case may be, all the land within 2 leagues square belonging to the said State, and which may be unappropriated at the date of this treaty, at each point of the terminations of said works at the seas on each side, that is to say, 3 miles square on each side of both ends of said works, to serve for the sites of two free cities which it is anticipated will hereafter be established at said points, the inhabitants of which free cities shall enjoy the following rights and immunities:

First. They shall govern themselves by means of their own municipal government, to be administered by officers, legislative, executive, and judicial, chosen and elected by themselves according to their own regulations.

Second. They shall have the right of trial by jury in their own city courts.

Third. They shall have the most perfect freedom of religious belief and of religious worship, public and private.

Fourth. They shall not be required to pay any tax upon their real estate or other property except such as may be imposed by the municipality and collected for the city treasury, and to be used and applied for the benefit of such cities.

Fifth. They shall not be required to perform any military services, except for the defense of the said cities in which they may reside.

Sixth. The said cities will of course be under the qualified dominion and government of the State of Nicaragua, not to be exercised in any manner, however, in violation of their rights and immunities as herein specified; and said free cities shall be under the protection of the governments of both the contracting parties.

ARTICLE XI.

The State of Nicaragua agrees that the United States shall have, possess, and enjoy forever the following rights and privileges; that is to say, the right and privilege to pass, convey, transport, and send through all or any part of the territories and dominions of the State of Nicaragua, on land or water, from ocean to ocean, by means of her ports, bays, rivers, lakes, and roads, troops, infantry or cavalry, all kinds of arms, artillery, and munitions of war of all kinds, her public property of every description, public officers, civil and military, consuls, ministers, dispatch agents, her public mail and mail agents, and all other employees of the Government of the United States of America; and the same shall all and each be permitted to pass, be sent, and be conveyed through said State, in any manner, as aforesaid, in the public armed vessels of the United States, and in all such other vessels or vehicles, public or private, which may be in the temporary or permanent employment of the Government of the United States for any of the purposes aforesaid, or in any other way, free from all cost and exempt from all taxes, duties, imposts, charges, or exactions of any kind whatever, either on the persons, property, vehicles, or vessels aforesaid; and all the aforesaid privileges and the said free right of way and of transit shall be held, used, and enjoyed by the United States of America (but not by any other nation, state, or government, except Nicaragua) without cost or charge, and freely, whether the same be made through the dominions and territories of Nicaragua as they now exist, or whether the said troops, munitions of war, public officers, agents, employees, mails, public property, vehicles, and vessels, etc., shall be sent, transported, or conveyed by means of improved navigable rivers, canals, or turnpikes, or railroads, or any other public improvements which may be hereafter made in the State of Nicaragua, either by the Governments or citizens of the contracting parties, or by the governments, citizens, or people of any other nation, kingdom, or country; and the citizens of the United States shall have and enjoy all the rights and privileges of travel, passage, transit, and conveyance for themselves and their property and vessels of all kinds through the territories and dominions of the State of Nicaragua as they now exist or through such canals or roads, railways, or turnpikes, or other improvements as may be hereafter made in said State, upon terms and conditions in every particular as favorable as those enjoyed by the citizens of Nicaragua, or by the citizens of any other nation, kingdom, or country.

ARTICLE XII.

In consideration of the premises as set forth in the foregoing eleven articles, the United States of America doth solemnly agree and undertake to protect and defend the State of Nicaragua in the possession and exercise of the sovereignty and dominion of all the country, coasts, ports, lakes, rivers, and territories that may be rightfully under the jurisdiction and within the just and true limits and boundaries of the said State; and when the circumstances and condition of the country may require it the United States shall employ their naval and military force to preserve the peace and maintain the neutrality of the said coasts, ports, lakes, rivers, and territories, and to hold and keep the same under the dominion and sovereignty of the Government of the State of Nicaragua or of the government of such state or political community of which Nicaragua may voluntarily become a member, or with which, of her own accord, she may hereafter be identified: Provided, however, That the said sovereignty and dominion of the State of Nicaragua, so guaranteed as above, shall not be held, maintained, or exercised by said State in any such manner as to conflict or to be inconsistent with the rights and privileges herein secured to the United States and her citizens; and to prevent all misunderstanding, it is expressly stipulated that the United States are not bound, nor do they undertake, to aid, assist, or support Nicaragua in offensive wars or wars of aggression waged and carried on by said State with foreign powers or with the neighboring states, outside of her just limits, and beyond the territories rightfully within her jurisdiction; but the contracting parties agree and undertake that, if necessary, the naval and military forces and the entire means and resources of both the contracting parties shall be employed to put down all wars and bloodshed arising therefrom, and to suppress all violations of the peace and interruptions of the neutrality of the said State of Nicaragua; and for further explanation it is understood that if the State of Nicaragua should become involved in a war with any foreign power or neighboring state within her own borders, to defend the territories rightfully belonging to her, or to recover such territories wrongfully wrested from her, the United States engages to defend Nicaragua in carrying on such war within her own rightful limits: Provided, however, That such war is just, and provided, moreover, that if peace is prevailing in the State of Nicaragua, no wars or hostilities shall be first commenced in said State by either of the contracting parties without previous friendly consultations, and unless with the consent of both their governments, given according to their laws and constitutions, respectively.

ARTICLE XIII.

The contracting parties, in negotiating this treaty, have had in view the contract entered into between the State of Nicaragua, through their commissioner, José Trinidad Muños, and a certain company styled "Compania de transito de Nicaragua," composed of certain persons named Willard Parker, Simeon H. Ackerman, Asher Kursheedt, and David J. Brown, through the said David J. Brown as their agent, which contract was executed and signed by said commissioner and agent on March 14, 1849, and ratified by the legislative power of the State of Nicaragua on March 16, 1849, and approved by the executive power of said State on the 17th of March 1849. Now, in view of this contract, it is further agreed as follows:

First. If the above-named company shall accede to this treaty in all its parts, or if they shall voluntarily abandon their contract, or if they shall forfeit their rights under said contract by failing to perform and execute the terms and conditions thereof in due time, then this treaty shall remain and be valid in all its parts.

Second. But if the said company shall not accede to this treaty in all its parts, and if they shall not abandon or forfeit their said contract, but if they shall execute the same and comply with its terms, and build the said works all in the time required, then, in such case, this treaty in all its parts, wherein the State of Nicaragua grants to the United States, or to a company to be chartered by the President or Congress thereof, the exclusive privilege to be the constructors and owners of said works, shall be void and of no force or effect.

Third. Nevertheless, in such case as is set forth in the second section next preceding, if said company shall accede to the fifth (5th), the sixth (6th), the eighth (8th), and the eleventh (11th) articles of this treaty, and shall consent and agree that the United States of America, and the citizens thereof, shall have and enjoy all the rights and privileges therein granted to them, and as defined also in the tenth (10th) section of the third (3rd) article, then, in such case, the above-named fifth (5th), sixth (6th), eighth (8th), and eleventh (11th) articles of this treaty, as also the twelfth (12th) article thereof, shall be valid and obligatory between the contracting parties.

Fourth. But if in such case existing as is set forth in the second section above the said company shall refuse to accede or agree to the said fifth (5th), sixth (6th), eighth (8th), and eleventh (11th) articles hereof, as specified in the preceding third section, then this treaty shall be altogether void and of no force or effect whatever.

But the contracting parties, anticipating that said company, being satisfied that the great enterprise in view can not succeed unless under the protection and patronage of two Governments, will concur and cooperate with them in the promotion thereof, they are assured that this treaty will meet their cordial approbation, and that it will be fully acceded to by them.

The present special convention between the United States of America and the State of Nicaragua shall be approved and ratified by the President of the United States of America, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by the Director of the State of Nicaragua, with the consent of the Legislative Chambers thereof, and the ratifications shall be exchanged in the city of Washington, Santiago de Managua, or Leon, within the term of two years, counting from this date.

In faith whereof, we, the plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and of the State of Nicaragua, have signed and sealed these presents in the city of Guatemala, on the 21st day of June, in the year of our Lord 1849, in the seventy-third year of the independence of the United States of America and in the twenty-eighth year of the independence of the State of Nicaragua.

APPENDIX B.

CONCESSIONS AND DECREES OF THE REPUBLIC OF COSTA RICA TO THE NICARAGUA CANAL ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK.

* * * * * * *

ARTICLE XIV.

The association shall construct, at its expense, and shall keep in good condition, two large ports, one on the Atlantic and one on the Pacific, at such points or localities as it may select within or without the territory of Costa Rica, to serve as termini of the canal; and each of them shall have a lighthouse of the first order.

ARTICLE XV.

All the area within the territory of Costa Rica, whether at the ports, roadsteads, or rivers of the two oceans, which may be necessary for the establishment of the canal, its paths, and embankments, or which may be occupied and covered by water after raising the dams which are to be constructed in the beds of the rivers, or for all necessary deviations to be made, as well as for reservoirs, dikes, spaces about the locks, stations, light-houses, and canals, storehouses, buildings, and workshops, deposits for materials, and also all those required for the routes, service railways, and canals of the same nature, for the transportation of materials to the line of the work, and for feeders of the canal; in short, all lands and places within the territory of Costa Rica necessary to the construction and operation of the canal, as may be laid down in the final drawings and plans made by the engineers of the association, shall be placed by the State at the disposal of the said association under the conditions set forth in the following articles.

ARTICLE XVI.

Such unappropriated lands as belong to the State shall be given to the association without any compensation whatever, and with regard to those lands belonging to private parties the State undertakes to condemn them should the association demand it.

The compensation which, in agreement with the laws of Costa Rica, may have to be paid in such cases shall be paid by the association, and to it shall be added the amount of the expenses and costs of the respective actuations, in such a way that the national treasury shall suffer no loss.

ARTICLE XVII.

In all relating to the condemnation to be made under the provisions of the preceding articles the association shall enjoy all the immunities and privileges that the laws of the country grant to the State, so that the association may not be obliged to pay more than the State would under similar circumstances.

ARTICLE XVIII.

For the construction, maintenance, and operation of the canal the association shall have the right to take free of charge from the lands belonging to the State whatever material of a spontaneous production of the land that may be found on them, especially timber for construction and fuel, and limestone, clay for bricks, and earth for fillings that are to be made. As regards materials of the said class found on lands belonging to private parties, the association shall have the same rights and privileges granted by the laws to the State.

ARTICLE XIX.

If it should be necessary for the association to occupy temporarily and during the construction of the canal lands in the territory of Costa Rica which are not included in those designated in the Articles XV, XVI, and XVIII, it shall not be obliged to pay any compensation for them if they are unappropriated lands. And the State shall not have the right to sell or dispose of them in any other manner after the association has once determined to occupy them, unless under the reservation of this right, the limit of which shall be the execution of the works of the interoceanic canal. Should the said lands belong to private parties, then the association shall enjoy, so far as the temporary occupation thereof is concerned, all the rights and franchises which the laws grant to the State, with the special privilege of occupying them immediately after the declaration of utility and necessity and after payment of the proper compensation, which shall never exceed that which the State would be obliged to pay in a similar case.

ARTICLE XX.

The Republic of Costa Rica desiring to aid efficiently the association in this enterprise cedes in fee simple to the said association the public lands hereinafter mentioned, in alternate lots, with other similar ones which it reserves for itself, to wit:

First. On the right or southern bank of the San Juan River, from a point 3 English miles below Castillo Viejo to the confluence of the San Carlos, should the canal follow the valley of the San Juan, lots fronting on the canal 3 English miles front by 6 deep.

Second. Between the San Carlos River and the Atlantic, should the canal pass wholly or in part through the territory of Costa Rica, or along the boundary of Costa Rica, lots of 3 English miles frontage on the canal and 4 deep.

Third. Should the route of the Selinas Bay be adopted, lots of 2 English miles frontage on the canal by 2 deep in the Costa Rican territory crossed by the canal or along which it may run, from the Pacific Ocean to a point 2 English miles distant from the mouth of the Sapoa River in the Lake of Nicaragua.

Fourth. Should the canal deviate from the San Juan River more than 4 miles toward the interior of Costa Rica, lots to be measured on both sides of the canal of 2 miles front and 2 deep. Should the deviation be less than 4 miles, then the lots of the northern bank of the canal shall have a front of 2 miles and extend in depth until they touch the San Juan River.

Fifth. From the Rio Frio to the Sapoa on the south coast of the Lake of Nicaragua, at 2 miles distant from the same and following the curve of its bank, lots of 2 English miles front by 2 deep.

Sixth. In the places where the company in accordance with the Government may select from the existing unappropriated public lands twenty-five lots, each 2 English miles in frontage by 4 deep. As a general rule, at the extremities of the interoceanic canal, should the same be within the territory of Costa Rica, the opposite lots will be allotted, one to the Government and one to the company; but, if this be not possible, the first will belong to the Government.

The State shall vest in the association the possession of said lands as soon as the location of the canal is finally determined and its construction begun by the association.

The rights required by private parties in the lands set forth in the preceding clauses are hereby reserved.

The measurement and setting out of all lands ceded by this contract shall be made at the expense of the grantee, with the intervention of the Government.

The final title deeds shall be issued in due proportion as the work advances, and not before.

Between the Atlantic and the point 3 miles below Castilla Viejo all parts of the San Juan and Colorado rivers occupied by the canal shall be considered, for the purposes of the present article, as a part of the said canal.

It is hereby understood that the whole of the lands transferred to the association by Costa Rica, in the different places and in the form as set forth in the foregoing article, shall not exceed in amount one-fourth of the total amount of lands granted to the company by the Government of Nicaragua, according to the contract made by it. Should they exceed such amount the difference shall be deducted by reducing the number of lots mentioned in subdivision fifth of this article.

ARTICLE XXI.

The State reserves the right to occupy, in the several lots of land ceded to the association, such space as may be needed for such roads and public buildings as it may deem convenient. In the same manner it shall have the right to use timber and other building materials which may be found on said land whenever they may be necessary for any work upon which it may determine. Should these lands become the property of private persons by virtue of a transfer made by the company, and the State should need them for the purpose set forth in this article, or for some other purposes, it shall pay their owners for them in conformity with the laws, and the expropriated parties shall have no right or claim against the association.

Should the association have made improvements on the lands referred to, whether for the purposes of utility, ornament, or pleasure, the State shall be bound to compensate it for such damages as it may suffer according to appraisals of experts.

ARTICLE XXII.

Mines of coal, gold, silver, iron, or other metals and stone quarries situated in the lands ceded to the association shall belong to it by right without the necessity of previous denunciation, and it shall have the right to work them whenever it may deem it convenient, subject to the laws of the Republic, but such lands as may be transferred by the association to private parties shall not enjoy this privilege.

ARTICLE XXIII.

The association shall also have the right to utilize for the works of the canal and its appurtenances the timber in the forests situated in the land granted to it by the State from the very moment from which it enters into possession of the same under the present contract, the acquired rights always being reserved.

ARTICLE XXIV.

From the day in which the present concession shall be ratified by Congress no alienation shall be made of any unappropriated lands necessary for the construction of the canal, nor of those ceded to the association on the banks of the same. Nor shall the said lands be leased to the prejudice of the company. However, should the location of the canal not be definitely settled when this contract is ratified, the line of the canal shall for the purposes of this article be presumed to follow the northern boundary line of Costa Rica.

The association shall have the right of doing throughout the whole extent of the canal within the territory of Costa Rica, at the mouths of the canal on the two oceans, and in the whole extent of the lands which under the present contract have been granted to it according to articles 15, 16, and 20 all such works as may be necessary for locating, leveling, excavating, and dredging the canal, and all other works that may be required for the establishment, feeding, operation, preservation, and maintenance of the canal.

The association is especially authorized to make along the line of the canal and on the Costa Rican bank of the San Juan River and its Costa Rican affluents and confluents, as well as on the Costa Rican rivers tributary to the Lake of Nicaragua, the lakes or water courses which may be utilized in their flow to the Pacific or to the Atlantic; to construct dikes and dams, make rectifications, dredgings, embankments, and deviations; to locate buoys, and in general to do all the works that in the opinion of the engineers of the association may be deemed indispensable for the construction, feeding, navigation, and operation of the canal. The embankments, fillings, and dikes which may be made within the territory of Costa Rica, at the mouths of the canal on the ports on the two oceans, by using materials resulting from the excavation of the canal, shall belong in fee simple to the association; but the Government shall have the right to occupy them in whole or in part after compensation made. Should any part of the canal be within the territory of Costa Rica, the association shall not obstruct such port nor widen its beaches unless there is absolute necessity to do so, and in this case the embankments and fillings that it may be necessary to construct in front of said port shall belong to the Republic.

In general the association shall have the right to use all the lakes and rivers of Costa Rica, the waters of which may be necessary in the judgment of the engineers of the association to construct and feed the canal and to maintain its operations, but this right shall have the following restrictions, to wit:

First. The navigation of the Costa Rican rivers, which the association may dam or otherwise use for the benefit of the canal, shall remain at the termination of the respective works in as good condition as it was before they were made.

Second. In the places where the waters of said rivers may overflow in consequence of the erection of dams or other artificial obstructions made by the association, the said association shall be obliged to do whatever may be practicable to prevent the formation of swamps and marshes.

Third. Such damages as may be caused to private parties in consequence of the deviation or elevation of the streams shall be compensated for by the association according to appraisals made by experts in conformity with the laws of the Republic, but the association shall not be obliged to pay more than the State would under similar circumstances.

ARTICLE XXVI.

The association can not import merchandise into the territory of the Republic for the purposes of trafficking with it without paying the custom duties established by law, but it shall have the right to import free from custom duties and of any other imposts whatsoever the articles needed for the works of the enterprise, its surveys, explorations, examination of localities, constructions, use, operation, maintenance, repairs, and improvements of the canal, and also for the telegraphic and railroad service of the same, and for the works and workshops of the company, and the said articles may consist of implements, machinery, apparatus, coal, limestone of all classes, lime, iron, and other metals, whether raw or manufactured, mining powder, dynamite, or any other analogous substance. These articles may be transported between whatever points they may be needed during the work of the construction of the canal, and shall be landed and stored free from all local taxes.

The association shall also have the right to import free from duties or imposts, during the work of constructing the canal, such provisions, clothing for the workmen, and medicines as may be absolutely necessary for its own consumption.

Those articles the commerce of which is not free are excepted from the privileges granted in this article, and shall remain subject, with the exception of gunpowder, dynamite, and other explosives, to such requisites and duties as are established by law.

ARTICLE XXVII.

The vessels that the association may employ as tug boats or for the service of the canal shall be free from all imposts or taxes of any kind whatever, and also the material to be used for their repair and the fuel that they may consume.

The vessels and their appurtenances, from whatever place they may come, for the service of the association shall be exempt from all duties and imposts.

ARTICLE XXVIII.

The Government shall enact such regulations as it may deem necessary to prevent smuggling and for the preservation of public order in the region of the canal lying within the territory of Costa Rica or bordering on it and in the waters where it may exert joint jurisdiction. The company shall be bound to lend its assistance for the enforcement of such regulations. But in the free zone along the margin of the canal, as hereinafter provided, measures for the prevention of smuggling shall be limited to vigilance on the part of the employes or employees whom it may concern, without right to any further measures, either against passengers, vessels, or their cargoes, excepting when an attempt at smuggling may be discovered, it being the intention of the State that there shall be most ample freedom of transit through the canal for persons and property, with the sole limitations established by this contract. Consequently, the association shall have the right to unload and reload ships in transit at such point as may be necessary in order to make repairs or lighten the vessels or shift their cargoes, or on account of any accident that unavoidably may render it necessary, without being subject thereby to search, exactions, or contributions of any kind, provided in each case, and before beginning operations, notice is given to the nearest custom-house authority.

ARTICLE XXIX.

The Government shall afford its protection, in conformity with the laws of the Republic, to the engineers, contractors, employees, and laborers that may be engaged in the preliminary surveys or in the works of construction and operation of the canal.

ARTICLE XXX.

The association shall be exempt from all forced loans and military exactions, whether in time of peace or of war. The foreign agents or employees shall also be exempt from direct taxes, forced loans, and military exactions during the time in which they are in the service of the canal, but they shall pay the direct taxes established by law in case they may become owners of real property or commercial or industrial establishments.

ARTICLE XXXI.

The association may freely introduce into the lands granted to it employees and laborers of every race who may be needed in its works and workshops; and it may also introduce immigrants of all nationalities excepting Asiatics and negroes. Both the immigrants and the employees and laborers shall be subject to the laws of the Republic and to the regulations of the company. The Government assures them aid and protection and the enjoyment of their rights and guaranties in conformity with the constitution and the national laws during the time that they may remain within Costa Rican territory.

ARTICLE XXXII.

The Government of Costa Rica shall assure the association and its agents, under the laws of the Republic, as it does to the other inhabitants, the full enjoyment of the guaranties and rights which the constitution and laws grant to them. Reciprocally, the association and its agents bind themselves strictly to respect the laws and regulations in force in Costa Rica, and especially to comply with the final decisions of the courts, without considering themselves vested with other rights than those granted by law to Costa Rican citizens.

ARTICLE XXXIII.

The Government shall establish all along the line of the canal which may be within the territory of Costa Rica or along its frontier or in the waters appertaining to it in ownership or joint jurisdiction, such police stations and revenue offices as in its judgment may be necessary for the preservation of order in the region of the canal and for the observance of the fiscal laws of the Republic.

The expenses incident to said services, including those of buildings, salaries, wages, and allowances of the employees and transportation of the forces, and which may be in excess of such as are now borne by the Government for the custom-house actually established at the mouth of the San Carlos, or on any other point that may be crossed by the canal, shall be paid to the public treasury by the company on such terms and conditions as may be established hereafter, taking into consideration the requirements and necessities of such services.

The association shall also have the right to establish guards and watchmen for the service of the canal and the enforcement of its regulations.

ARTICLE XXXIV.

All contracts in regard to the works of the canal that the association may enter into in foreign countries shall be valid and effective, and shall have full force and effect in Costa Rica, provided they do not violate the laws of the Republic.

ARTICLE XXXV.

The association shall be exempt during the period of this concession both in time of peace and in time of war from all kinds of taxes upon the real estate that it may acquire by virtue of this contract and from all kinds of direct taxes, local charges, or any other imposts relating to the property and use of the canal, or of its buildings and the construction and dependencies thereof, all along its extent, including those situated in the ports and maritime establishments on the two oceans.

This franchise is not transferable to the purchasers of the real estate which the association may alienate under this grant.

ARTICLE XXXVI.

The Republic of Costa Rica shall not establish any tonnage, anchorage, pilot, or light-house dues or any other charges of any kind whatsoever, upon vessels of any class whatever or upon the merchandise, baggage, and passengers which may pass through the canal from one ocean to the other; all such dues are reserved for the benefit of the association as provided for in Article XXXIX.

ARTICLE XXXVII.

For the purpose of securing the most ample liberty of transit of persons and property a free zone shall be established on each side of the canal, and the width thereof shall be 90 meters and 288 millimeters, measured from the water's edge in the canal.

All traffic declared illegal by the laws of the Republic shall, however, be prohibited within the said zone and the revenue authorities whose duty it is to watch for and prevent smuggling shall act in conformity with the stipulations of Article XXVIII.

It is expressly agreed that every vessel that may pass through the part of the canal which may be within the territory of Costa Rica or along its borders or in waters over which it exerts cojurisdiction shall carry on board an officer appointed by the Government whenever the authorities may deem it convenient, and that officer shall act in conformity with the law should he discover that it is being violated.

The two ports to be constructed for the entrance and exit of the canal on both oceans, which may be wholly or in part within the territory or in waters of Costa Rica, shall be declared free ports and shall be recognized as such from the opening of the canal to the end of this concession.

The Government, in agreement with the company, shall establish, by means of a special decree, the limits of this franchise, which shall never extend beyond the waters of the ports comprised between the mouth of the canal and the entrance of said ports.

All merchandise that shall be loaded or discharged at any point of the canal within the territory of Costa Rica, and intended for internal commerce, shall pay the import and export duties fixed by the revenue laws of the State.

ARTICLE XXXVIII.

For the proper administration of the canal and its dependencies, and in order to facilitate its construction and operation, the association shall establish the proper regulations, which shall be binding upon every person who may be found in its waters or in its dependencies; the sole reservation being that the rights and sovereignty of the State be respected.

It is understood that the association, in the exercise of the powers conferred by this article, shall not make other regulations than those necessary for the administration and particular management of the canal; and that, before carrying them into effect, they shall be submitted for the approval of the Government. The State shall lend the aid of its authority to enforce these regulations.

ARTICLE XXXIX.

By way of compensation for the expenses incurred in the surveys, construction, maintenance, and operation of the canal, or any part thereof, during the period of said privilege, the said association shall have the right to establish and collect for the passage of all kinds of ships, vessels, travelers, and merchandise through the canal and in the waters and ports pertaining to it, such dues of navigation, tonnage, pilotage, towage, storage, lay days, anchorage, light, roadsteads, wharfage, hospital dues, and any other similar charges in conformity with the tariffs to be established by it in accordance with article 45 of this contract.

These tariffs may be modified by the association at any time, on condition that all modifications that may be introduced in it shall be previously communicated to the Government, which, in case of finding them within the limits established by said article 45, shall cause them to be complied with as if they were regulations enacted by itself.

The payment of all the tariff dues shall be exacted without any exception or preference and under identical conditions from all vessels, whatever be the place they come from or their nationality, with the exception stipulated in the following article.

ARTICLE XL.

In compensation for the privileges and concessions that Costa Rica grants by this contract, it is hereby stipulated that the Republic shall enjoy the special privilege that Costa Rican vessels, navigating under the flag of Costa Rica, shall be entitled to navigate the canal at a reduction of 50 per cent of the general tariff while engaged in the coasting trade or in the reciprocal trade with the other Republics of Central America.

To enjoy this privilege, the said vessels shall be necessarily of the register of the Republic, and belong to citizens of the same.

A reduction of 50 per cent of the general tariff is also granted to all vessels that begin their voyage for a foreign country at any of the ports belonging to the Republic with a cargo wholly consisting of products of the country.

Costa Rican vessels of war and revenue cutters shall pay no dues in passing through the canal. No dues shall be paid by the vessels of the national register navigating either Costa Rican waters connected with the canal or the canal itself, without passing out of the locks, but said vessels are not in any way to obstruct the free navigation of the canal.

Costa Rica, on its part, shall not object to the enjoyment by Nicaraguan ships of the advantage granted in this article to those of Costa Rica, provided that Nicaragua, on its part, consents that the ships of Costa Rica shall enjoy in Nicaraguan waters the said privilege.

All the concessions to which this article refers shall be extended to the other republics of Central America, or any of them, whenever Costa Rica and Nicaragua shall find themselves free from international obligations which may prevent it, or whenever one or more of said republics shall form a single nation with Costa Rica.

ARTICLE XLI.

In case it may be possible to utilize the waters of the canal and its dependencies for the irrigation of plantations, gardens, and streets, or for the supply of towns that may be without it, or as motive power for private enterprises, the company shall have the power to supply it, collecting dues in proportion to the amount furnished, according to the tariff that it may establish in agreement with the Government.

ARTICLE XLII.

The association shall undertake at its expense the final surveys of the ground and the location of the line of the canal by a commission of competent engineers. The Government of Costa Rica shall have the right of visiting and inspecting the final surveys which are in progress, and those already completed by an engineer appointed by said Government, and whose salary shall be paid by the association, the amount thereof to be fixed hereafter by special agreement between the Government and the company.

A period of two years and a half, to be counted from the date of the ratification of this contract, is granted the association for the final surveys of the canal, and within the said time the association shall have to make the said final surveys, organize the company which is to carry on the work, and begin the work of construction.

The work of construction shall be understood to have commenced if within three years after its inception $2,000,000 have been expended on it.

The period herein provided for shall admit of extension by the Republic at the request of the association, and upon grounds of justice, in the judgment of the Government.

ARTICLE XLIII.

A term of ten years is also granted to the association for the construction, completion, and opening to traffic the canal for maritime navigation. However, should events of main force arise, duly justified and sufficient to impede the regular progress of the works during the period of the said ten years, an extension shall be granted equal in duration to the time that may have been lost by such delays.

If at the expiration of the ten years aforesaid the works should not be completed so as to have the maritime communication between the two oceans opened, in consideration of the great capital the company may have invested in the enterprise, and the good will and ability it may have shown and the difficulties encountered, the Republic binds itself to grant a new extension.

ARTICLE XLIV.

As a guaranty of the fulfillment of the obligations which the final company which is to construct the canal incurs in accordance with article 42, it shall deposit to the order of the Government of Costa Rica, in a bank or in a mercantile house in this city, or with an agent which the Government may designate, immediately after the certificates are issued, 1,000 shares of its capital stock of the normal value of $100 each. The said 1,000 shares of capital stock shall be considered in advance to the Government of the payment of the police and revenue expenses to be made under article 33, and the association shall be credited with the actual value of said shares at the time such payments are made.

ARTICLE XLV.

In consideration of the valuable privileges, franchises, and concessions granted by virtue of this contract to the association, the Republic shall receive in shares, certificates, or other values representing the capital stock of the final company, an amount equal to 1½ per cent of the total amount of issue of said capital stock, in shares or certificates of $100 each. This sum shall in no event be less than $1,500,000. Said shares shall be considered as fully paid up and two-thirds thereof shall not be transferable. All these shares shall participate in the benefits, interest, distributions, dividends, amortizations, rights, privileges, and all other advantages granted to paid-up shares, without any difference whatever. These shares, together with the other privileges herein granted by the association to the Government, shall be in full compensation to the Republic for all public unappropriated lands that may be flooded and for all the privileges and concession conferred by this contract, and shall cover completely all claims of this description on the part of the State against the association or the final company. The shares to which this article refers shall be delivered to the agent appointed by the Government for this purpose as soon as the company may be ready to issue certificates of its capital.

ARTICLE XLVI.

From the earnings of the enterprise the company shall take, in the first place, the necessary amount to cover all the expenses for maintenance, operation, and administration; all the sums necessary to secure the interest, which shall not exceed 6 per cent, and the amortization of the obligations and of the shares, and what remains shall form the net profits, of which at least 80 per cent shall be divided among the shareholders, it being understood that after the lapse of ten years after the completion of the canal the company shall in no case divide among its shareholders in payment of dividends, directly or indirectly, by issue of shares or otherwise, more than 15 per cent annually or in this proportion, from dues collected from the aforesaid canal; and where it shall appear that these dues yield a greater profit, they shall be reduced to the fixed limit of 15 per cent per annum.

ARTICLE XLVII.

The present concession shall be forfeited:

First. Through the failure on the part of the company to comply with any one of the conditions contained in Articles VII, XLII, and XLIII.

Second. If the service of the canal, after it is completed, is interrupted for six months, unless in case of unforeseen accidents or main force.

When the concessions shall have been declared forfeited from whichever of these causes, the public lands granted by virtue of the present contract shall revert to the Republic in whatever condition they may be, and without compensation, such lands as may have been alienated by the company with the formalities prescribed by law shall be excepted, provided that such alienations shall not have taken place within the six months preceding the date on which the company may have become legally liable to the penalty herein established.

ARTICLE XLVIII.

At the expiration of the ninety-nine years stipulated in this concession, or in the event of the forfeiture expressed in the preceding article, the Republic shall enter into the possession in perpetuity of that part of the canal, its warehouses, stations, and other establishments used for the management thereof that may be found within the national territory. Such works as may be found in waters in which the Republic has joint sovereignty shall belong to her in joint ownership. And in regard to such parts of the canal or of the waters thereof in which Costa Rica has not the eminent domain, but simply the right of use and free navigation, the Republic, at the expiration of the ninety-nine years, or in the cases of forfeiture above named, shall retain in perpetuity the said rights of use and free navigation. The Republic shall not be obliged to pay to the company any compensation for the same.

There shall be excepted from this condition the vessels belonging to the company, its stores of coal and other materials, its mechanical workshops, its floating capital and reserve fund, and at the expiration of the said ninety-nine years also the lands ceded to it by the State under the present contract, excepting those in which the works indicated in the first part of this article may be found established, which will become the property of the State, with their immediate dependencies as necessary for the service of the canal and an integral part of the same.

But the company shall have the right, at the expiration of the aforesaid term of ninety-nine years, to the full enjoyment and a free use and control of the canal and such parts thereof as may be within the territory of Costa Rica, with all the privileges and advantages granted by this concession in the capacity of lessee for a second period of ninety-nine years, upon payment to the Government of Costa Rica of 6½ per cent of the annual net profits of the enterprise, besides the dividends due to it for its share in the capital stock.

The company shall have the right to fix at its discretion the dues referred to in article 39 of this concession, so that the shareholders, after the payment of 31½ per cent is deducted, shall still receive dividends of 10 per cent per annum on the whole capital.

At the expiration of this second period of ninety-nine years the Government shall enter into perpetual possession of the canal and the other property referred to in the first part of this article; and this delivery shall also embrace everything excluded in the said first part, except the lands ceded to the association by this contract and the reserve and sinking fund.

The failure to comply with any of the conditions of the lease shall terminate it, and the State shall enter into the possession of the part of the canal which corresponds to it, owing to it being situated in Costa Rican territory or in the places in which Costa Rica is joint owner, and also of the other works which belong to the canal, in accordance with the provisions of the preceding paragraph.

ARTICLE XLIX.

Any misunderstanding that may arise between the Republic and the company in regard to the interpretation of the present stipulations shall be submitted to a court of arbitrators, composed of four members, two of whom shall be appointed by the State and two by the company.

These arbitrators shall be designated by each party within the period of four months from the day on which one of them shall give notice to the other in writing of the want of agreement on the point at issue. Should one of the parties allow this period to lapse it shall be considered as assenting to the opinion or claim of the other.

The majority of the votes of the arbitrators shall finally decide without recourse. In case of a tie vote the arbitrators shall appoint, by mutual consent, a fifth person, who shall decide, and in case of their default the respective parties will appoint him. If they can not agree to such appointment they shall draw by lot the names of the diplomatic representatives accredited to Costa Rica, and the first one drawn out shall exercise the functions of the fifth arbitrator. He shall concur on one of the two opinions, and what may be so decided shall be final and without recourse of any kind. If the fifth arbitrator should fail, the second person drawn shall exercise these functions, and so on successively until the decision is reached.

Prior to the initiation of the works of opening the canal the Government, in concurrence with the company, shall formulate a set of rules to be observed by the arbitrators in all matters relating to procedure.

All questions between the association and private parties residing in Costa Rica shall be determined by the ordinary courts of Costa Rica in conformity with the legislation of the Republic. In matters pertaining to parties not residing in Costa Rica the rules of private international law shall be observed.

ARTICLE L.

This contract, after being approved by the honorable general President of the Republic, shall be submitted to the supreme legislative power for the purpose that if they deem it convenient they should impart to it the necessary ratification, and in case such approval is not obtained the Nicaragua Canal Association will be released from all the obligations to which it is bound by it. Such ratification or nonratification shall be made within one hundred and twenty days from this date.

In witness whereof the undersigned have set their hands to four copies of the present contract, two for each party, in San José de Costa Rica, 31st July, 1888.

PEDRO PEREZ ZELEDÓN.

APPENDIX C.

[New Panama Canal Company—Concessions—Contracts with the United States of Colombia, dated March 20, 1878; December 10, 1890; April 4, 1893.]

WYSE CONCESSION, MARCH 20, 1878.

[Translation from the Diario Official of Bogota, Wednesday, May 22, 1878.]

CONTRACT FOR THE CONSTRUCTON OF AN INTEROCEANIC CANAL ACROSS COLOMBIAN TERRITORY.

Eustorgio Salgar, secretary of the interior and of foreign relations of the United States of Colombia, duly authorized, of the one part, and of the other part Lucien N. B. Wyse, chief of the Isthmus Scientific Surveying Expedition in 1876, 1877, and 1878, member and delegate of the board of directors of the International Interoceanic Canal Association, presided by General Etienne Türr, in conformity with powers bestowed at Paris, from the 27th to the 29th of October, 1877, have celebrated the following contract:

ARTICLE 1. The Government of the United States of Colombia grants to to Mr. Lucien N. B. Wyse, who accepts it in the name of the civil International Interoceanic Canal Association, represented by their board of directors, the exclusive privilege for the construction across its territory, and for the operating of a canal between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. Said canal may be constructed without restrictive stipulations of any kind.

This concession is made under the following conditions:

First. The duration of the privilege shall be for ninety-nine years from the day on which the canal shall be wholly or partially opened to public service, or when the grantees or their representatives commence to collect the dues on transit and navigation.

Second. From the date of approbation by the Colombian Congress for the opening of the interoceanic canal the Government of the Republic can not construct, nor concede to any company or individual, under any consideration whatever, the right to construct another canal across Colombian territory which shall communicate the two oceans. Should the grantees wish to construct a railroad as an auxiliary to the canal, the Government, with the exception of existing rights, can not grant to any other company or individual the right to build another interoceanic railroad, nor do so itself during the time allowed for the construction and use of the canal.

Third. The necessary studies of the ground and the route for the line of the canal shall be made at the expense of the grantees by an international commission of individuals and competent engineers, in which two Colombian engineers shall take part. The commission shall determine the general route of the canal and report to the Colombian Government directly, or to its diplomatic agents in the United States or Europe, upon the results obtained, at the latest in 1881, unless unavoidable circumstances clearly proven should prevent their so doing. The report shall comprise in duplicate the scientific labors performed and an estimate of the projected work.

Fourth. The grantees shall then have a period of two years to organize a universal joint stock company, which shall take charge of the enterprise and of the construction of the canal. This term shall commence from the date mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

Fifth. The canal shall be finished and placed at the public service within the subsequent twelve years after the formation of the company which will undertake its construction, but the executive power is authorized to grant a further maximum term of six years in the case of encountering superhuman obstacles beyond the power of the company, and, if after one-third of the canal is built, the company should acknowledge the impossibility of concluding the work in the said twelve years.

Sixth. The canal shall have the length, depth, and all other conditions requisite in order that sailing vessels and steamships measuring up to 140 meters long, 16 meters in width, and 8 meters in draft shall, with lowered topmast, be able to pass the canal.

Seventh. All public lands which may be required for the route of the canal, the ports, stations, wharves, moorings, warehouses, and in general for the construction and service of the canal as well as for the railway, should it be convenient to build it, shall be ceded gratis to the grantees.

Eighth. These unoccupied public lands shall revert to the Government of the Republic with the railroad and canal at the termination of this privilege; there is also granted for the use of the canal a belt of land 200 meters wide on each side of its banks throughout all the distance which it may run, but the owners of lands on its banks shall have free access to the canal and its ports as well as to the right of use of any roads which the grantees may open there; and this without paying any dues to the company.

Ninth. If the lands through which the canal shall pass, or upon which the railroad may be built, should, in whole or in part, be private property, the grantees shall have the right to demand their expropriation by the Government according to all the legal formalities in such cases. The indemnity which shall be made to the landowners, and which shall be based on their actual value, shall be at the expense of the company. The grantees shall enjoy in this case, and in those of temporary occupation of private property, all the rights and privileges which the existing legislation confers.

Tenth. The grantees may establish and operate at their cost the telegraph lines which they may consider useful as auxiliaries in the building and management of the canal.

Eleventh. It is, however, stipulated and agreed that if, before the payment of the security determined upon in article 2, the Colombian Government should receive any formal proposal, sufficiently guaranteed, in the opinion of the said Government, to construct the canal in less time and under more advantageous conditions for the United States of Colombia, said proposal shall be communicated to the grantees or their representatives, that they may be substituted therein, in which case they shall be preferred; but if they do not accept such substitution, the Colombian Government, in the new contract which they may celebrate, shall exact, besides the guaranty mentioned in article 2, the sum of $300,000 in coin, which shall be given as indemnity to the grantees.

ART. 2. Within the term of twelve months from the date at which the international commission shall have presented the definite results of their studies the grantees shall deposit in the bank or banks of London, to be designated by the national executive power, the sum of 750,000 francs, to the exclusion of all paper money, as security for the execution of the work. The receipt of said banks shall be a voucher for the fulfillment of said deposit. It is understood that if the grantees should lose that deposit by virtue of the stipulations contained in clauses 2 and 3 of article 22 of the present contract, the sum referred to, with interest accrued, shall become in toto the property of the Colombian Government. After the conclusion of the canal, said sum, without interest, which latter will in this case belong to grantees, shall remain for benefit of the treasury, for the outlays which it may have incurred or may incur in the construction of buildings for the service of the public officers.

ART. 3. If the line of the canal to be constructed from sea to sea should pass to the west and to the north of the imaginary straight line which joins Cape Tiburon with Garachiné Point, the grantees must enter into some amicable arrangement with the Panama Railroad Company, or pay an indemnity, which shall be established in accordance with the provisions of law 46, of August 16, 1867, "approving the contract celebrated on July 5, 1867, reformatory of the contract of April 15, 1850, for the construction of an iron railroad from one ocean to the other through the Isthmus of Panama."

In case the international commission should choose the Atrato or some other stream already navigable as one of the entrances to the canal, the ingress and egress by such stream, and the navigation of its waters, so long as it is not intended to cross the canal, shall be open to commerce and free from all imposts.

ART. 4. Besides the lands granted in paragraphs 7 and 8 of article 1, there shall be awarded to the grantees, as an aid for the accomplishment of the work, and not otherwise, 500,000 hectares of public lands, with the mines they may comprise, in the localities which the company may select. This award shall be made directly by the national executive power. The public lands situated on the seacoast, on the borders of the canal or of the rivers, shall be divided in alternate lots between the Government and the company, forming areas of from one to two thousand hectares. The measurements for the allotment or locating shall be made at the expense of the grantees and with the intervention of Government commissioners. The public lands thus granted, with the mines they may hold, shall be awarded to the grantees as fast as the work of construction of the canal progresses, and in accordance with rules to be laid down by the executive power.

Within a belt of 2 myriameters on each side of the canal, and during five years after the termination of the work, the Government shall not have the right to grant other lands beyond the said lots until the company shall have called for the whole number of lots granted by this article.

ART. 5. The Government of the Republic hereby declares the ports at each end of the canal, and the waters of the latter from sea to sea, to be neutral for all time; and consequently, in case of war among other nations, the transit through the canal shall not be interrupted by such event, and the merchant vessels and individuals of all nations of the world may enter into said ports and travel on the canal without being molested or detained. In general, any vessel may pass freely without any discrimination, exclusion, or preference of nationalities or persons on payment of the dues and the observance of the rules established by the company for the use of the canal and its dependencies. Exception is to be made of foreign troops, which shall not have the right to pass without permission from Congress, and of the vessels of nations which, being at war with the United States of Colombia, may not have attained the right to pass through the canal at all times by public treaties wherein is guaranteed the sovereignty of Colombia over the Isthmus of Panama and over the territory whereon the canal is to be cut, besides immunity and neutrality of the said canal, its ports, bays, and dependencies and the adjacent seas.

ART. 6. The United States of Colombia reserves to themselves the right to pass their vessels, troops, ammunitions of war at all times and without paying any dues whatever. The passage of the canal is strictly closed to war vessels of nations at war, and which may not have acquired, by public treaty with the Colombian Government, the right to pass by the canal at all times.

ART. 7. The grantees will enjoy the right during the whole time of the privilege to use the ports at the termini of the canal, as well as intermediate points, for the anchorage and repair of ships, and the loading, depositing, transshipping, or landing of merchandise. The ports of the canal shall be open and free to the commerce of all nations, and no import duties shall be exacted, except on merchandise destined to be introduced for the consumption of the rest of the Republic. The said ports shall, therefore, be open to importations from the commencement of the work, and the custom-houses and the revenue service which the Government may deem convenient for the collection of duties on merchandise destined for other portions of the Republic shall be established, in order to prevent introduction of smuggled goods.

ART. 8. The executive power shall dictate, for the protection of the financial interests of the Republic, the regulations conducive to the prevention of smuggling, and shall have the power to station, at the cost of the nation, the number of men which they may deem necessary for that service.

Out of the indispensable officials for that service ten shall be paid by the company, and their salaries shall not exceed those enjoyed by employees of the same rank in the Barranquilla custom-house.

The company shall carry gratis through the canal, or on the auxiliary railway, the men destined for the service of the nation, for the service of the State through whose territory the canal may pass, or for the service of the police, with the object of guarding against foreign enemies or for the preservation of public order, and shall also transport gratis the baggage of such men, their war materials, armament, and clothing which they may need for the service assigned to them.

The subsistence of the public force which may be deemed necessary for the safety of the interoceanic transit shall likewise be at the expense of the company.

ART. 9. The grantee shall have the right to introduce, free of import or other duties of whatever class, all the instruments, machinery, tools, fixtures, provisions, clothing for laborers, which they may need during all the time allowed to them for the construction and use of the canal. The ships carrying cargoes for the use of the enterprise shall enjoy free entry into whatever point shall afford them easy access to the line of the canal.

ART. 10. No taxes, either national, municipal, of the State, or of any other class, shall be levied upon the canal, the ships that navigate it, the tugs and vessels at the service of the grantees, their warehouses, workshops, and offices, factories of whatever class, storehouses, wharves, machinery, or other works or property of whatever character belonging to them, and which they may need for the service of the canal and its dependencies during the time conceded for its construction and operation. The grantees shall also have the right to take from unoccupied lands the materials of any kind which they may require without paying any compensation for the same.

ART. 11. The passengers, money, precious metals, merchandise, and articles and effects of all kinds which may be transported over the canal shall also be exempt from all duties, national, municipal, transit, and others. The same exemption is extended to all articles and merchandise for interior or exterior commerce which may remain in deposit, according to the conditions which may be stipulated, with the company in the storehouses and stations belonging to them.

ART. 12. Ships desiring to cross the canal shall present at the port of the terminus of the canal at which they may arrive their respective registers and other sailing papers prescribed by the laws and public treaties, so that the vessels may navigate without interruption. Vessels not having said papers, or which should refuse to present them, may be detained and proceeded against according to law.

ART. 13. The Government allows the immigration and free access to the lands and shops of the grantees of all the employees and workingmen, of whatever nationality, who may be contracted for the work, or who may come to engage themselves to work on the canal, on condition that such employees or laborers shall submit to the existing laws and to the regulations established by the company. The Government promises them support and protection and the enjoyment of their rights and guaranties, in conformity with the national constitution and laws, during the time they may sojourn on Colombian territory.

The national peons and laborers employed on the work of the canal shall be exempt from all requisition of military service, national as well as of the State.

ART. 14. In order to indemnify the grantees of the construction, maintenance, and working expenses incurred by them they shall have, during the whole period of the privilege, the exclusive right to establish and collect for the passage of the canal and its ports the dues for light-houses, anchorage, transit, navigation, repairs, pilotage, towage, hauling, storage, and of station, according to the tariff which they may issue, and which they may modify at any time under the following express conditions:

First. They shall collect these dues, without any exceptional favor, from all vessels in like circumstances.

Second. The tariffs shall be published four months before their enforcement in the Diario Oficial of the Government, as well as in the capitals and the principal commercial ports of the countries interested.

Third. The principal navigation dues to be collected shall not exceed the sum of 10 francs for each cubic meter resulting from the multiplication of the principal dimensions of the submerged part of the ship in transit (length, breadth, and draft).

Fourth. The principal dimensions of the ship in transit—that is to say, the maximum exterior length and breadth at the water line, as well as the greatest draft—shall be the metrical dimensions inserted in the official clearance papers, excepting any modifications supervening during the voyage. The ships' captains and the company's agents may demand a new measurement, which operations shall be carried out at the expense of the petitioner; and,

Fifth. The same measurement—that is to say, the number of cubic meters contained in the parallelopipedon circumscribing the submerged part of the ship—shall serve as a basis for the determination of the other accessory dues.

ART. 15. By way of compensation for the rights and exemptions which are allowed to the grantees in this contract the Government of the Republic shall be entitled to a share amounting to 5 per cent on all collections made by the company, by virtue of the dues which may be imposed in conforming with article 14, during the first twenty-five years after the opening of the canal to the public service. From the twenty-sixth up to the fiftieth year, inclusive, it shall be entitled to a share of 6 per cent: from the fifty-first to the seventy-fifth, to 7 per cent, and from the seventy-sixth to the termination of the privilege, to 8 per cent. It is understood that these shares shall be reckoned, as has been said, on the gross income from all sources, without any deduction whatever for expenses, interest on shares or on loans, or debts against the company.

The Government of the Republic shall have the right to appoint a commissioner or agent, who shall intervene in the collections and examine the accounts, and the distribution or payment of the shares coming to the Government shall be made in due half-yearly installments. The product of the 5, 6 7, and 8 per cent shall be distributed as follows:

Four-fifths of it shall go to the Government of the Republic, and the remaining one-fifth to the government of the State through whose territory the canal may pass.

The company guarantees to the Government of Colombia that the share of the latter shall in no case be less than the sum of $250,000 a year, which is the same as that received as its share in the earnings of the Panama Railroad, so that if, in any year, the 5 per cent share should not reach said sum it shall be completed out of the common funds of the company.

ART. 16. The grantees are authorized to require payment in advance of any charges which they may establish; nine-tenths of these charges shall be made payable in gold, and only the remaining one-tenth part shall be payable in silver of 25 grammes, of a fineness of 900.

ART. 17. The ships which shall infringe upon the rules established by the company shall be subject to the payment of a fine which said company shall fix in its regulations, of which due notice shall be given to the public at the time of the issue of the tariff. Should they refuse to pay said fine, nor furnish sufficient security, they may be detained and prosecuted according to the laws. The same proceedings may be observed for the damages they may have caused.

ART. 18. If the opening of the canal shall be deemed financially possible, the grantees are authorized to form, under the immediate protection of the Colombian Government, a universal joint stock company, which shall undertake the execution of the work, taking charge of all financial transactions which may be needed. As this enterprise is essentially international, and for public utility, it is understood that it shall always be kept free from political influences.

The company shall take the name of "The Universal Interoceanic Canal Association;" its residence shall be fixed in Bogota, New York, London, or Paris, as the grantees may choose; branch offices may be established wherever necessary. Its contracts, shares, bonds, and titles of its property shall never be subjected by the Government of Colombia to any charges for registry, emission, stamps, or any similar imposts upon the sale or transfer of these shares or bonds, as well as on the profits produced by these values.

ART. 19. The company is authorized to reserve as much as 10 per cent of the shares emitted to form a fund of shares to the benefit of the founders and promoters of the enterprise. Of the products of the concern the company take, in the first place, what is necessary to cover all expenses of repairs, operations, and administration, and the share which belongs to the Government, as well as the sums necessary for the payment of the interest and the amortization of the bonds, and, if possible, the fixed interest or dividend of the shares; that which remains will be consided as net profit, out of which 80 per cent at least will be divided among the shareholders.

ART. 20. The Colombian Government may appoint a special delegate in the board of directors of the company whenever it may consider it useful to do so. This delegate shall enjoy the same advantages as are granted to the other directors by the by-laws of the company.

The grantees pledge themselves to appoint in the capital of the Union, near the National Government, a duly authorized agent for the purpose of clearing up all doubts and presenting any claims to which this contract may give rise. Reciprocally, and in the same sense, the Government shall appoint an agent, who shall reside in the principal establishment of the company situated on the line of the canal; and, according to the national constitution, the difficulties which may arise between the contracting parties shall be submitted to the decision of the Federal supreme court.

ART. 21. The grantees, or those who in the future may succeed them in their rights, may transfer these rights to other capitalists or financial companies; but it is absolutely prohibited to cede or mortgage them under any consideration whatever to any nation or foreign government.

ART. 22. The grantees, or their representatives, shall lose the right hereby acquired in the following cases:

First. If they do not deposit, on the terms agreed upon, the sum which by way of security must insure the execution of the work.

Second. If in the first year of the twelve that are allowed for the construction of the canal the works are not already commenced, in this case the company shall lose the sum deposited by way of security, together with the interest that may have accrued, all of which will remain for the benefit of the Republic.

Third. If at the end of the second period fixed in paragraph 5 of article 1 the canal is not transitable, in this case also the company shall lose the sum deposited as security; which, with the interests accrued, shall remain for the benefit of the Republic.

Fourth. If they violate the prescriptions of article 21; and,

Fifth. If the service of the canal should be interrupted for a longer period than six months without its being occasioned by the acts of God, etc.

In cases 2, 3, 4, and 5, the Federal supreme court shall have the right to decide whether the privilege has become annulled or not.

ART. 23. In all cases of decisions of nullity, the public lands mentioned in clauses 7 and 8 of article 1, and such lands as are not settled or inhabited from among those granted by article 4, shall revert to the possession of the Republic in the condition they may be found in, and without any indemnity whatever, as well as the buildings, materials, works, and improvements which the grantees may possess along the canal and its accessories. The grantees shall only retain their capital, vessels, provisions, and in general all movable property.

ART. 24. Five years previous to the expiration of the ninety-nine years of the privilege, the executive power shall appoint a commissioner to examine the condition of the canal and annexes, and, with the knowledge of the company or its agents on the Isthmus, to make an official report, describing in every detail the condition of the same and pointing out what repairs may be necessary. This report will serve to establish in what condition the canal and its dependencies shall be delivered to the National Government on the day of expiration of the privilege now granted.

ART. 25. The enterprise of the canal is reputed to be of public utility.

ART. 26. This contract, which will serve as a substitute for the provisions of law 33 of May 26, 1876, and the clauses of the contract celebrated on the 28th of May of the same year, shall be submitted for the approval of the President of the union and the definite acceptance by the Congress of the nation.

In witness whereof they sign the present in Bogota, on the 20th March, 1878:

EUSTORGIO SALGAR.
LUCIEN N. B. WYSE.

BOGOTA, March 23, 1878.

Approved.
The President of the union:

AQUILEO PARRO.

The secretary of the interior and of foreign relations:

EUSTORGIO SALGAR.

By decree of Congress, May 17, 1878, approved May 18, 1878, the foregoing contract, with certain modifications in the original draft, was duly approved. In the foregoing translation of the contract the modifications introduced by this decree have been incorporated, for convenience, with the contract as originally signed, so that the translation represents the actual form of the contract as modified and finally approved by Congress.

NOTE FROM LUCIEN N. B. WYSE, WHEREIN HE DECLARES HE ACCEPTS ALL THE MODIFICATIONS MADE BY LAW 28 TO THE CONTRACT FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

To the Honorable Secretary of the Interior and Foreign Relations:

I have the honor to inform you that I accept each and all of the modifications introduced by Congress to the contract which I celebrated with Señor Eustorgio Salgar, your worthy predecessor in the department of the interior and foreign relations, for the construction of the interoceanic canal, which contract was approved by the executive power under date of March 24 last.

The modifications to which I have alluded are those recorded in law No. 28 of the 18th instant.

I hasten to lay this declaration before the Government of Colombia, so that it may be taken in consideration, in order that said law may be effective in all its parts.

Bogota, May 18, 1878.

LUCIEN N. B. WYSE,
Chief of the International Scientific Commission for the Survey of the Isthmus, Member and Delegate from the Board of Directors of the Interoceanic Canal Association.

Additional contract modifying that of March 23, 1878, approved by law 23 of the same year.

LAW 107 OF 1890. (DECEMBER 26)—EXTENSION OF TEN YEARS FOR THE OPENING OF THE INTEROCEANIC CANAL ACROSS COLOMBIAN TERRITORY.

THE CONGRESS OF COLOMBIA DECREES:

ONLY ARTICLE. The contract modifying that of March 23, 1878, for the opening of an interoceanic canal across Colombian territory, concluded between his excellency the minister of foreign affairs and Mr. Lucien N. B. Wyse, special representative of the receiver of the Compagnie Universelle du Canal de Panama, is approved in all its parts, which contract is literally as follows:

Antonio Roldan, minister of foreign affairs, duly authorized by his excellency the President of the Republic, hereinafter called the "Government," of the one part, and Lucien N. B. Wyse, naval commander, engineer, original concessionary of the interoceanic canal, and special delegate of the receiver of the Compagnie Universelle du Canal de Panama, under powers of attorney executed at Paris May 16, 1890, hereinafter called the "concessionary," of the other part, have agreed to modify the contract of March 23, 1878, for the opening of an interoceanic canal across Colombian territory, approved by law 23 of the same year, in accordance with the following stipulations:

ARTICLE FIRST. The Government grants to the receiver of the Compagnie Universelle du Canal de Panama an extension of ten years within which the canal is to be finished and put in public operation; the said extension is consented to, subject to the following conditions:

First. The concessionary agrees to transfer all the plant of the company in liquidation to a new company, which shall undertake the completion of the work of the interoceanic canal.

Second. The new company shall be formally organized with a capital sufficient for this purpose, and shall resume the work of excavation in a serious and permanent manner not later than February 23, 1893.

Third. The concessionary, or his successors, shall furnish monthly to the National Government at Panama the sum of ten thousand (10,000) piastres, in Colombian coin of 0.835, for the maintenance of two hundred and fifty (250) men of the military garrison of the Department of Panama, whom the Government undertakes to assign for the preservation of order and for the security of the line of the canal during the work of excavation and upon its termination for the protection of interoceanic transit.

In case the company should have need of a greater number of men of the public forces, the Government will assign them to said service, taking them from the military garrison of the Department, but the additional expense occasioned by this increase, reckoned upon the basis already established, shall also be borne by the company.

The company binds itself to furnish places set apart for the occupancy of the troops upon points on the line at which the Government has none of its own. The last part of article 8 of the original contract for the privilege is modified in these respects.

Fourth. The navigation of the lakes which may form part of the canal shall be free to small vessels, in accordance with the regulations which the company may prescribe for this purpose. The latter shall not be responsible for the inherent risks of this navigation. The internal regulation of the lakes shall be settled by the Goverment at the proper time, taking into account the general interests of the enterprise.

Fifth. The company binds itself to reestablish public transit at the mouth of the Rio Grande by means of bridges or boats, as it shall consider most practicable, and if, in consequence of the number of vessels, passage should become hereafter too difficult, the company shall reestablish it between Emperador and Arraijan to the satisfaction of the Government.

ARTICLE SECOND. Beside the public lands granted gratis by the contract of 1878, the expropriation of lands, buildings, and plantations which shall prove necessary to the canal and its dependencies shall be made by the Government on account of the company, in conformity with the 9th condition of article first of the aforesaid contract, approved by law 23 of 1878.

Such expropriations shall be made with all speed which the legislation of the country upon the subject permits. The expropriated real estate shall be immediately delivered over to the concessionary or his successors.

ARTICLE THIRD. The Government also undertakes to take the necessary steps for restoring to the new company the complete enjoyment of the lands belonging to the company in liquidation unlawfully occupied by private persons, and to procure a judicial decree that all persons who, without previous consent, shall have built or planted upon the lands bought by the company in liquidation for the purpose of works of excavation, installation, and unloading shall have no right to any indemnity.

ARTICLE FOURTH. As compensation for the services which the Government agrees to render, in accordance with the two preceding articles, the concessionary, or his successors, shall pay to the Government ten million (10,000,000) francs in gold, and shall issue to it, gratis, in addition, five million (5,000,000) francs in ten thousand (10,000) dividend-bearing shares of the new company of five hundred (500) francs each, full paid, having the right to no other dividends than those which are declared on ordinary shares; the said ten thousand (10,000) shares shall remain attached to their respective stubs until the other shares shall be full paid; but, upon notice to the company, the Government shall have the power, when it shall see fit, to assign or pledge them.

The ten million (10,000,000) francs to which this article refers shall be paid by the concessionary, or by his successors, in five (5) equal annual installments; the first being paid three (3) months after the new company for the completion of the canal shall be fully organized, in conformity with the second condition of article first. From this sum shall be deducted two million five hundred thousand (2,500,000) francs, as well as the interest accrued up to the date of the present contract, which the Government owes to the company in liquidation for the loan of 1883, the deduction being made, in the first place, for the purpose of fixing the amount of the five (5) installments just mentioned. By this payment the said loan shall be finally discharged.

ARTICLE FIFTH. A special member, whom the Government has the right to appoint in the company's board of directors, in conformity with article 20 of the contract in force, shall enjoy in the new company to be organized for the completion of the canal the same advantages and compensation granted to the other directors by the charter of the company, but neither the said appointee nor the official agent of the Government residing in the Isthmus shall make any publication relative to the company without the express authorization of the Government.

ARTICLE SIXTH. If the new company for the completion of the canal shall not be organized, and if the work of excavation on the canal shall not be resumed within the period fixed by the second condition of article first, the contract in force shall lapse and the Republic shall enter into the possession and enjoyment, without the necessity of a previous judicial decree and without indemnity, of the works of the canal and its annexes, which revert to it in accordance with article third of the contract of 1878.

Sec. 1st. It is understood that the contract shall also lapse; and the provisions of this article shall become applicable if, the company for the completion of the canal not being organized before February 23, 1893, the legal representative of the Compagnie Universelle du Canal Interocéaniquo, or his successors, abandon the maintenance of the works, plant, and buildings now existing upon the Isthmus and belonging to the company.

Sec. 2nd. The maintenance of the property enumerated in the preceding paragraph shall be considered abandoned when the legal representative of the Compagnie Universelle du Canal Interocéanique, in liquidation, or his successors, shall discharge the force of employees which he now has on the Isthmus, or shall cease to make the necessary expenditure for preventing the loss or deterioration of the said property.

Sec. 3rd. It is moreover understood that the buildings, plant, works, and improvements which are to become the property of the Republic under the circumstances provided in this article, and in conformity with article 23 of the contract of 1878, shall be inalienable, and are to be in good condition, subject to deterioration arising from use, from unavoidable causes, or from accident.

ARTICLE SEVENTH. As soon as the company for the completion of the canal shall be legally organized, and shall have resumed the work in conformity with the provisions of the second condition of article first of this contract, the Government shall assign to it in the Department of Panama the two hundred and fifty thousand (250,000) hectares of public lands to which it has been already declared by decisions of the executive power to be entitled, and shall issue to it the respective patents, provided that the legal formalities in the premises be accomplished on the part of the company.

ARTICLE EIGHTH. The security of seven hundred and fifty thousand (750,000) francs deposited by the canal company in accordance with article second of the contract in force shall be maintained as a guaranty for the fulfillment of the obligations arising from the said contract, and of those assumed by the concessionary under the provisions of the present contract.

ARTICLE NINTH. All rights and obligations created by the contract of March 23, 1878, for the opening of an interoceanic canal across Colombian territory, approved by law 23 of the same year, shall continue in full force and vigor without other restrictions and modifications than those contained in the present contract.

ARTICLE TENTH. In order that the present contract may have full force and effect, it shall be submitted to the approval of His Excellency the President of the Republic, and to that of Congress.

Done in duplicate at Bogota, the 10th day of December, 1890.

APPENDIX D.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE REPUBLIC OF NICARAGUA PROVIDING FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF AN INTEROCEANIC CANAL ACROSS THE TERRITORY OF NICARAGUA.

The United States of America and the Republic of Nicaragua recognizing the importance of an interoceanic communication across the Isthmus at Nicaragua which shall bring into close communication the ports of North and South America, and shall facilitate commerce between Europe and the ports of the Pacific, between the eastern ports of Asia and the Atlantic seaboard, and the ports of the United States on the Pacific and Atlantic, have agreed for this purpose to build a canal, and to that end to conclude a treaty, and have accordingly named as their respective plenipotentiaries the President of the United States, Frederick T. Frelinghuysen, Secretary of State of the United States of America, and the President of Nicaragua, General Joaquin Zavala, ex-president of the Republic of Nicaragua, who, after communicating to each other their full powers, found in due and proper form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I. The canal shall be built by the United States of America and owned by them and the Republic of Nicaragua, and managed as hereinafter provided.

ART. II. There shall be perpetual alliance between the United States of America and the Republic of Nicaragua, and the former agree to protect the integrity of the territory of the latter.

ART III. A practicable ship canal for vessels of the largest size now commonly used in commerce shall be commenced by the United States and be prosecuted to as speedy conclusion as circumstances may permit, subject to the limitation provided in Article XX of this convention. This canal shall follow what may be decided to be the most available route from ocean to ocean; and the United States in building the canal shall enjoy the fullest liberty in its construction, and in its location, and that of its dependencies, accessories, and works, as well as in the selection of entrance ports.

Should it be found necessary or desirable to leave the bed of the San Juan River at any point and to construct a lateral canal the Government of Nicaragua reserves the right to require the establishment of a lock communication for vessels of 6 feet draft and 160 feet length, between the lower part of the river and that part used for the canal; but the Government of Nicaragua will advise the United States of its wishes in this regard so soon as work shall be begun in the river, and it is expressly stipulated that Nicaragua alone shall be responsible for the maintenance and operation of this communication, and for the navigable condition of the lower river.

ART. IV. For the purpose of carrying out this agreement the Republic of Nicaragua agrees to give the United States free use of Lake Nicaragua, to furnish, free of cost, all the spaces necessary to the construction, maintenance, use, and enjoyment of the canal, and for any probable future enlargement thereof, whether these spaces be upon the dry land, in the lakes and upon their islands, in the rivers and upon their islands, or at the ports and roadsteads of the two oceans, together with their surroundings and declivities, and all the spaces required for the deposit of materials from excavations and cuttings, from the overflow arising from dams in the rivers, for all deviations of streams from their channels, as well as for reservoirs, dikes, piers, docks, spaces about locks, for lights, beacons, storehouses, machine shops, buildings, and for whatever other thing necessary, and, in short, all lands, waters, and places within the Republic of Nicaragua required for the construction, maintenance, use, and business of the canal, including a railway, from one terminus of the canal to the other, substantially parallel to and near the bank of the canal and along the southern shore of Lake Nicaragua, together with a telegraph line, should the United States decide to construct either said railway or telegraph line, or both, which shall be regarded for all purposes of this treaty as part of the canal so long as they are maintained.

ART. V. The work shall be declared one of public utility, and for the purposes of building and operating the canal, railway, and telegraph line, the Republic of Nicaragua undertakes to expropriate lands belonging to individuals. Any private property and real estate actually held by individuals or corporations which shall be taken or used by the United States for the construction of the canal or its accessories, or for their maintenance, shall be so taken upon condemnation and appraisement of the value of such property, and the Government of the United States will pay to the owners thereof the value fixed by a commission of assessors comprising three members, one of whom shall be appointed by the President of the United States, one by the President of Nicaragua, and the third to be chosen by these two jointly.

The United States or the board of managers hereafter provided for, as the case may be, shall have the right to take from the public lands of Nicaragua any materials whatever needed for the construction, preservation, maintenance, and use of the canal, and of its ports, dependencies, accessories, and equipments. When materials are taken from private lands the United States or the said board of managers shall enjoy in their use all the rights the Republic of Nicaragua enjoys by law and usage.

As to the contract of the Government of Nicaragua with Mr. F. A. Pellas, relating to steam navigation, that Government engages that the said contract shall not be considered applicable to the necessary operations of either party to this convention in constructing or operating the canal, or any part of it, during the time the contract has yet to run, this exemption to include necessary canal work and transportation on Lake Nicaragua and the rivers of the Republic; further, the said Government of Nicaragua agrees that should the Government of the United States, during the period the said contract has yet to run, find it advisable to purchase the franchise, property, and rights now held by said Pellas by virtue of said contract, the said franchise, property, and rights shall be expropriated by the same form and under the same conditions as are fixed in this article for the expropriation of other private property.

Should the United States in the construction of the said works find it necessary to occupy any lands belonging to the Republic, they shall have the right to do so free of charge during such temporary occupation, and the land so occupied, if sold or otherwise alienated, shall be conveyed with the reservation of this temporary right of occupation by the United States.

ART. VI. The United States shall have the right throughout the extent of the canal, and of its accessories, dependencies, and adjuncts, as well as at its mouths on both oceans, and in the lake and rivers which the canal route may traverse, and that may be used in any manner in connection with the canal construction, to enter upon work of any kind whatsoever deemed necessary by the engineers for the construction of a safe, effective, durable, and speedy route for the transit of vessels from ocean to ocean, without let or hindrance of any kind from the Government or people of the Republic of Nicaragua; and also for the construction of the said railway and telegraph line.

ART. VII. A strip of territory 2½ English miles in width, the middle of this strip to coincide with the center line of the canal, and also a strip 2½ miles wide around the southern end of the lake where the lake is used as a water course for the canal, as well as a strip 2½ miles wide along the river where the river is used as a part of the canal, shall be set aside for the work and owned by the two contracting parties, and where the railway and telegraph line aforesaid may of necessity pass beyond the bounds of such strip of land a plot one-half of a mile in width, whose center line shall coincide with the railway outside of the belt reserved for the canal, shall also be so set aside and owned. And all the land in this article referred to shall be subject to the agreement hereinbefore made as to lands, when owned by the State or by private individuals, necessarily used in the prosecution of the work; but the said lands in this article described shall not include towns, villages, or cities now in existence. In such case only that part shall be considered as embraced in this article as is absolutely essential to the economical prosecution or administration of the work. Over these strips in time of peace Nicaragua shall exercise civil jurisdiction, and its inhabitants shall not in any way be considered as impaired in their rights as citizens of the Republic.

ART. VIII. No custom-house tolls or other taxes or impositions of any sort or kind shall be levied by the Government of Nicaragua upon any vessels passing the canal, their cargoes, stores, passengers, crews, or baggage, or for unloading, loading, docking, or repairing vessels, it being the intent of this agreement that vessels, their cargoes, passengers, and crews, shall pass the canal free of any charge other than that imposed upon them by the two Governments in their capacities as owners of the work. Nicaragua may, however, provide a police system along the line of the canal to keep the peace and to prevent smuggling into her territory, the reasonable cost of which, as approved from time to time by the board of managers, shall be a charge upon the revenues of the canal.

The board of managers shall have the right to discharge and reload ships in transit, at such points as may be convenient, in order to make repairs, or to lighten the vessel, or to shift cargo, by reason of any cause rendering any of these acts necessary, or may transship cargo without being subject to search, exactions, duties, or taxes of any kind; but before beginning such operations notice thereof must be given to the nearest customs authority.

ART. IX. The Government of the Republic of Nicaragua, in conformity with the laws, shall lend its protection to the engineers, contractors, agents, employees, and laborers employed in the construction, maintenance, and management of the canal and its accessories, and they shall be wholly exempt from military requisitions and forced loans; but if any such persons shall acquire real estate outside the strips provided for in Article VIII hereof they shall be subject to the taxes fixed by law.

The Government of Nicaragua guarantees to the canal and its accessories, and to its agents of all classes, security under the laws of the country against domestic acts of hostility, in the same degree as in the case of other inhabitants, employing all its powers for their protection.

ART. X. All contracts for the construction, maintenance, and management of the canal and its accessories may be enforced according to the laws of Nicaragua and the provisions of this convention.

ART. XI. The canal and its accessories and dependencies of every kind shall be exempt, in peace and in war, from every form of taxation upon real or personal property acquired in virtue of this convention, and from every form of direct or indirect taxation, contributions, local taxes, or other dues in respect to the ownership and use of the canal and its accessories, or of the buildings, or constructions, or equipments, or appliances appertaining thereto, or to the ports and maritime establishments thereof anywhere in the Republic, and upon the lands set aside for the purposes of the canal and its accessories.

The Republic of Nicaragua binds itself not to establish tonnage dues, anchorage, light, wharf, or pilot dues, or charges of any class whatsoever upon vessels of whatever kind, or upon merchandise, or crews, or passengers, or gold or silver, or diamonds, or anything traversing the canal, all such dues being for the benefit of the two Governments in their capacity as joint owners and managers of the canal and its accessories; but merchandise, loaded or unloaded in any part of the canal or its accessories, coming from or destined to Nicaragua and intended for sale, shall pay dues for exportation or importation, fixed by the revenue laws of Nicaragua.

ART. XII. All articles necessary for the construction and repair of the canal and its accessories may be imported without duty or tax of any kind being laid thereon by the Government of Nicaragua, including such iron, steel, locomotives, cars, telegraph wires and instruments, tugs, dredges, and vessels or other things as may at any time be used in the construction, improvement, prosecution, or maintenance of the work, or in the maintenance or improvement of the same after its completion; and during the construction of the canal and its accessories, all supplies, whether personal or otherwise, except tobacco, spirits, or wines, used by those engaged in the work, shall be free of any customs or other tax, but no such supplies shall be permitted to be sold to those not actually engaged in the work, or to be smuggled into or sold in the interior.

All vessels in the service of the canal and its accessories, with their equipments and outfits, arriving at any port of Nicaragua from any point whatever, shall be free of all duties and port charges.

ART. XIII. For and in consideration of the preceding articles the United States of America agree to furnish the money and to build the said canal and its accessories, including, if found advisable, the said railway and telegraph line, together with all docks, locks, machine shops, repair shops, annexes, machinery, feeders, etc., it being the intent of this agreement that the United States of America shall build and complete the canal, with everything appertaining thereto, for the safe and speedy passage of the vessels hereinbefore described, and for through communication between ocean and ocean, and such loading and repairing as may be necessary, at their sole cost and without expense to the Government of Nicaragua.

ART. XIV. The United States shall have exclusive control of the construction of the canal and railway and telegraph line if the same be built, and shall be invested with all the rights and powers necessary thereto. The management, care, and protection of the canal and its accessories, including the said railway and telegraph line if built, under the general supervision of the two Governments, shall be intrusted to a board of managers, which shall consist of six members, three of whom shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, should the Senate be in session; or, should the Senate not be in session, the three members shall be appointed by the President subject to confirmation by the Senate at its next session, and three by the Republic of Nicaragua.

Any vacancy which may occur among the members of the board appointed by the President of the United States shall be filled by the said President, in the manner provided in the United States for filling vacant Government offices, and any vacancy which may occur among the members of the board appointed by the President of Nicaragua shall be filled by the said President in the manner provided in Nicaragua for filling vacant Government offices. This board shall be designated as soon as the canal is ready for traffic, and shall determine all questions by a majority vote. The chairman of the board shall be one of the members appointed by the President of the United States and designated as chairman by him, and in case of a tie the chairman shall have an additional vote.

This board shall be intrusted with the general executive management of the canal and its accessories, including said railway and telegraph line when built, and of all matters relating to the maintenance or improvement thereof; shall fix the tolls and provide rules and regulations for the management thereof; their action shall be, however, at all times, subject to a joint direction by the Presidents of the two Republics, which they shall be bound to implicitly obey. The said board of managers shall have the right and power to levy and collect for steamers, ships, and vessels of every class entering the canal or the ports at the canal entrances, and for passengers, merchandise, and cargo of all kinds, transit, navigation, tonnage, light, and port dues, as well as for towage, storage, anchorage, wharfage, and hospital dues and all other like fees.

The Government of Nicaragua guarantees the enforcement of the regulation so adopted by the board of managers as if issued by the Government of Nicaragua.

The tolls hereinbefore provided shall be equal as to vessels of the parties hereto and of all nations, except that vessels entirely owned and commanded by citizens of either one of the parties to this convention and engaged in its coasting trade may be favored.

Nicaraguan vessels, using a portion only of the canal, shall pay proportionate tolls, and shall pay no tolls where the canal shall use any part of any existing navigable waterway.

ART. XV. The books and affairs of the said board of managers shall be subject to such inspection or examination as the President of either Republic shall at any time direct. The board of managers shall, on the 1st days of January, April, July, and October in each and every year, make to the President of each Republic a full and complete report of their transactions during the preceding quarter, and the President of either Republic may at any time call upon them for such other or further information as he may deem expedient.

The board of managers shall appoint and remove all officers engaged upon the canal and its accessories, including the railway and telegraph line, and may make regulations for the appointment and removal of all subordinate employees.

ART. XVI. All the proceeds of the canal and its accessories, including said railway and telegraph line, shall be applied:

First. To the maintenance and improvement, if found necessary, of the works, including the salaries of the board of managers and all officers and others employed.

Second. The balance shall be paid to the two Governments in the following proportions, viz, to Nicaragua, one-third, and to the United States, two-thirds.

Liquidation of the accounts of the board of managers and payment of the balances herein prescribed shall be effected quarterly, on the 1st days of January, April, July, and October in each and every year.

ART. XVII. The Government of Nicaragua grants to the United States during the construction of the canal and its accessories, and to the board of managers thereafter, the right to use any of the ports of the Republic open to commerce as places of refuge for the vessels in the service of the canal and its accessories, or for any other vessels whatever having the right to pass the canal and wishing to anchor in said ports, and these vessels shall be free of all dues or charges of any kind on the part of the Republic of Nicaragua.

ART. XVIII. The United States frankly disavow any intention to in any way seek to impair the independent sovereignty of Nicaragua, or to aggrandize themselves at the expense of that State or of any of her sister Republics in Central America; but, on the contrary, desire to strengthen the power of free republics on this continent, and to promote and develop their prosperity and independence. Pursuant to this wish they have united with Nicaragua in the construction of this work, which will be of advantage not only to the two nations most intimately concerned, but to all those with whom they are on terms of friendship.

ART. XIX. If, in virtue of any existing treaty between the Republic of Nicaragua and a third power, privileges or rights are stipulated in favor of such third power in respect of an interoceanic transitway which may not be compatible with the terms of the present convention, the Republic of Nicaragua engages to terminate such treaty in due form by giving to the said third power the stipulated notification within two months from the date of the exchange of the ratifications hereof; and if such treaty between Nicaragua and any third power contains no termination clause, the Republic of Nicaragua engages to procure its abrogation or modification so as not to conflict with the present compact, and the United States will use their good offices if need be to the end of effecting such abrogation or modification.

ART. XX. The United States of America engage to begin effective work on the canal within two years from the exchange of ratifications of this treaty, and to complete the canal within ten years after beginning it, in default of which this treaty shall become inoperative: Provided, however, That should there arise insuperable obstacles to retard the work during this term it shall be prolonged in proportion to the time lost by reason of such obstacles. And further, if at the expiration of the said ten years the canal shall not be open to commerce between the two oceans, then, in consideration of the large capital invested in the work and of the good faith and ability shown, as well as of the difficulties encountered, the Republic of Nicaragua binds itself to extend this period so far as it is just and necessary.

ART. XXI. Any difficulties between the parties hereto shall be submitted to the arbitration of a friendly power, if one can be agreed upon; or, failing such agreement, each party shall request a friendly nation to name an arbitrator, and the arbitrators thus named shall select a third. The decision of the arbitrating power, or a majority of the board of arbitrators, as the case may be, shall be final and conclusive.

ART. XXII. The United States will aid by their good offices, if desired, in securing the union of the five Central American Republics under one representative government, and the reorganization of the said Republics in one nationality being accomplished, the Central American Republics shall have the same rights and bear the same obligations as Nicaragua has and bears by virtue of this treaty.

ART. XXIII. It appearing that the financial condition of Nicaragua is prosperous, that the Republic is without incumbrance of debt, and that the Government finds it necessary to finish as soon as possible certain railways within the Republic, to extend its telegraph line, and to improve the navigation of the river San Juan, which enterprises will be of aid to the canal and favorable to its speedy construction and successful operation, the Government of the United States agrees to loan to the Government of Nicaragua the sum of $4,000,000 to be applied to the above-enumerated projects. Of this amount $1,000,000 shall be paid in the city of Washington within ninety days after the exchange of the ratifications of this convention, and the remaining $3,000,000 in installments of $500,000 each every six months thereafter until the whole amount shall have been paid; but a failure to pay any of these sums from accident or nonaction of Congress at the exact dates herein specified, such payments being made thereafter in good faith, shall not be held as affecting in any way the other engagements of this convention.

The Government of Nicaragua agrees that the Government of the United States shall be credited with and receive the share of Nicaragua in the net revenues of the canal to be applied to the payment of this loan until it shall have been entirely extinguished with the interest thereon at 3 per cent per annum from the dates when the several sums shall be received by Nicaragua, and the Republic of Nicaragua may vote yearly through its Congress an additional sum from the general revenues of the Republic to be applied to the payment of this loan and to aid in its speedy extinguishment.

And further, the Government of Nicaragua, assuming the repayment of said loan, binds itself to consider it, until extinguished, together with the interest thereon as hereinbefore provided, as a lien upon all rights of Nicaragua in the canal, its accessories and appliances, this lien to continue until the repayment of the sum so advanced with the interest, but the repayment is not to be exacted until ten years after the said canal shall have been completed and opened to commerce.

ART. XXIV. Neither of the parties to this convention shall sell, assign, or otherwise alienate or suffer itself to be deprived of its, or any part of its, interest, right, or property in or to the said canal, railway or telegraph line, should the same be built, or their or any other adjuncts or accessories or any of the works or establishments pertaining thereto without the consent of the other manifested by legislative enactment.

ART. XXV. This treaty is concluded subject to ratification by the proper constitutional authority of each party hereto and to the legislation by the appropriate legislative bodies of each which is necessary to carry it into effect. It shall be ratified as soon as possible, but within two years from its date, and the ratifications thereof shall be exchanged in the city of Washington within six months from the approval by the said legislative bodies of Nicaragua and of the United States of the present treaty.

In testimony whereof the undersigned plenipotentiaries have hereunto affixed their hands and seals.

Done in duplicate, in the English and Spanish languages, in Washington, this 1st day of December, in the year of our Lord, 1884.

APPENDIX E.

Chap. 1302.—An act to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to acquire, for and on behalf of the United States, at a cost not exceeding $40,000,000, the rights, privileges, franchises, concessions, grants of land, right of way, unfinished work, plants, and other property, real, personal, and mixed, of every name and nature, owned by the New Panama Canal Company, of France, on the Isthmus of Panama, and all its maps, plans, drawings, records on the Isthmus of Panama and in Paris, including all the capital stock, not less, however, than 68,863 shares of the Panama Railroad Company, owned by or held for the use of said canal company, provided a satisfactory title to all of said property can be obtained.

SEC. 2. That the President is hereby authorized to acquire from the Republic of Colombia, for and on behalf of the United States, upon such terms as he may deem reasonable, perpetual control of a strip of land, the territory of the Republic of Colombia, not less than 6 miles in width, extending from the Caribbean Sea to the Pacific Ocean, and the right to use and dispose of the waters thereon, and to excavate, construct, and to perpetually maintain, operate, and protect thereon a canal, of such depth and capacity as will afford convenient passage of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use, from the Caribbean Sea to the Pacific Ocean, which control shall include the right to perpetually maintain and operate the Panama Railroad, if the ownership thereof, or a controlling interest therein, shall have been acquired by the United States, and also jurisdiction over said strip and the ports at the ends thereof to make such police and sanitary rules and regulations as shall be necessary to preserve order and preserve the public health thereon, and to establish such judicial tribunals as may be agreed upon thereon as may be necessary to enforce such rules and regulations.

The President may acquire such additional territory and rights from Colombia as, in his judgment, will facilitate the general purpose hereof.

SEC. 3. That when the President shall have arranged to secure a satisfactory title to the property of the New Panama Canal Company, as provided in section 1 hereof, and shall have obtained by treaty control of the necessary territory from the Republic of Colombia, as provided in section 2 hereof, he is authorized to pay for the property of the New Panama Canal Company $40,000,000 and to the Republic of Colombia such sum as shall have been agreed upon, and a sum sufficient for both said purposes is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid on warrant or warrants drawn by the President.

The President shall then, through the Isthmian Canal Commission hereinafter authorized, cause to be excavated, constructed, and completed, utilizing to that end as far as practicable the work heretofore done by the New Panama Canal Company, of France, and its predecessor company, a ship canal from the Caribbean Sea to the Pacific Ocean. Such canal shall be of sufficient capacity and depth as shall afford convenient passage for vessels of the largest tonnage and greatest draft now in use, and such as may be reasonably anticipated, and shall be supplied with all necessary locks and other appliances to meet the necessities of the vessels passing through the same from ocean to ocean; and he shall also cause to be constructed such safe and commodious harbors at the termini of said canal, and make such provisions for defense as may be necessary for the safety and protection of said canal and harbors. That the President is authorized for the purposes aforesaid to employ such persons as he may deem necessary, and to fix their compensation.

SEC. 4. That should the President be unable to obtain for the United States a satisfactory title to the property of the New Panama Canal Company and the control of the necessary territory of the Republic of Colombia and the rights mentioned in sections 1 and 2 of this act within a reasonable time and upon reasonable terms, then the President, having first obtained for the United States perpetual control by treaty of the necessary territory from Costa Rica and Nicaragua, upon terms which he may consider reasonable, for the construction, perpetual maintenance, operation, and protection of a canal connecting the Caribbean Sea with the Pacific Ocean by what is commonly known as the Nicaragua route, shall, through the said Isthmian Canal Commission, cause to be excavated and constructed a ship canal and waterway from a point on the shore of the Caribbean Sea near Greytown, by way of Lake Nicaragua, to a point near Brito, on the Pacific Ocean.

Said canal shall be of sufficient capacity and depth to afford convenient passage for vessels of the largest tonnage and greatest draft now in use, and such as may be reasonably anticipated, and shall be supplied with all necessary locks and other appliances to meet the necessities of vessels passing through the same from ocean to ocean; and he shall also construct such safe and commodious harbors at the termini of said canal as shall be necessary for the safe and convenient use thereof, and shall make such provisions for defense as may be necessary for the safety and protection of said harbors and canal; and such sum or sums of money as may be agreed upon by such treaty as compensation to be paid to Nicaragua and Costa Rica for the concessions and rights hereunder provided to be acquired by the United States are hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid on warrant or warrants drawn by the President.

The President shall cause the said Isthmian Canal Commission to make such surveys as may be necessary for said canal and harbors to be made, and in making such surveys and in the construction of said canal may employ such persons as he may deem necessary, and may fix their compensation.

In the excavation and construction of said canal the San Juan River and Lake Nicaragua, or such parts of each as may be made available, shall be used.

SEC. 5. That the sum of $10,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, toward the project herein contemplated by either route so selected.

And the President is hereby authorized to cause to be entered into such contract or contracts as may be deemed necessary for the proper excavation, construction, completion, and defense of said canal, harbors, and defenses, by the route finally determined upon under the provisions of this act. Appropriations therefor shall from time to time be hereafter made, not to exceed in the aggregate the additional sum of $135,000,000 should the Panama route be adopted, or $180,000,000 should the Nicaragua route be adopted.

SEC. 6. That in any agreement with the Republic of Colombia, or with the States of Nicaragua and Costa Rica, the President is authorized to guarantee to said Republic or to said States the use of said canal and harbors, upon such terms as may be agreed upon, for all vessels owned by said States or by citizens thereof.

SEC. 7. That to enable the President to construct the canal and works appurtenant thereto as provided in this act, there is hereby created the Isthmian Canal Commission, the same to be composed of seven members, who shall be nominated and appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall serve until the completion of said canal unless sooner removed by the President, and one of whom shall be named as the chairman of said Commission. Of the seven members of said Commission at least four of them shall be persons learned and skilled in the science of engineering, and of the four at least one shall be an officer of the United States Army, and at least one other shall be an officer of the United States Navy, the said officers respectively being either upon the active or the retired list of the Army or of the Navy.

Said commissioners shall each receive such compensation as the President shall prescribe until the same shall have been otherwise fixed by the Congress. In addition to the members of said Isthmian Canal Commission, the President is hereby authorized through said Commission to employ in said service any of the engineers of the United States Army at his discretion, and likewise to employ any engineers in civil life, at his discretion, and any other persons necessary for the proper and expeditious prosecution of said work. The compensation of all such engineers and other persons employed under this act shall be fixed by said Commission, subject to the approval of the President. The official salary of any officer appointed or employed under this act shall be deducted from the amount of salary or compensation provided by or which shall be fixed under the terms of this act.

Said Commission shall in all matters be subject to the direction and control of the President, and shall make to the President annually and at such other periods as may be required, either by law or by the order of the President, full and complete reports of all their actings and doings and of all moneys received and expended in the construction of said work and in the performance of their duties in connection therewith, which said reports shall be by the President transmitted to Congress; and the said Commission shall furthermore give to Congress, or either House of Congress, such information as may at any time be required either by act of Congress or by the order of either House of Congress. The President shall cause to be provided and assigned for the use of the Commission such offices as may, with the suitable equipment of the same, be necessary and proper, in his discretion, for the proper discharge of the duties thereof.

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to borrow on the credit of the United States from time to time, as the proceeds may be required to defray expenditures authorized by this act (such proceeds when received to be used only for the purpose of meeting such expenditures), the sum of $130,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and to prepare and issue therefor coupon or registered bonds of the United States in such form as he may prescribe, and in denominations of $20 or some multiple of that sum, redeemable in gold coin at the pleasure of the United States after ten years from the date of their issue, and payable thirty years from such date, and bearing interest payable quarterly in gold coin at the rate of 2 per cent per annum; and the bonds herein authorized shall be exempt from all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority: Provided, That said bonds may be disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury at not less than par, under such regulations as he may prescribe, giving to all citizens of the United States an equal opportunity to subscribe therefor, but no commissions shall be allowed or paid thereon; and a sum not exceeding one-tenth of 1 per cent of the amount of the bonds herein authorized is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the expense of preparing, advertising, and issuing the same.

Approved June 28, 1902.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 25, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read and approved.

CARRIAGES, ETC., USED BY THE STATE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report. I am instructed by the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department to report back the resolution (H. Res. 150) with a substitute therefor, which I send to the Clerk's desk, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to this House, at his earliest convenience, a statement showing the number of horses, carriages, and automobiles maintained at Government expense for the officials of his Department, together with a statement showing the cost of said horses, carriages, automobiles, and harness, the date of purchase, from what fund the payment was made, and the amount of wages paid to men acting as coachmen, footmen, and chauffeurs, whether carried on the rolls as such or in some other classification; also, the list of officials entitled to the use of said carriages and the date when such service was inaugurated.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I yield for a question.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Does that include automobiles?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Automobiles are included.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I yield for a question.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee to offer an amendment to the resolution so as to make it apply to coachmen, footmen, and chauffeurs during the past calendar year. I would like to say that the resolution as originally drawn by me contained that clause, but as written out by my stenographer those words were omitted, and the omission of those words will leave a serious loophole for failure to get at the necessary information.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. In reply I will state to the gentleman that I have no authority to accept that amendment; and I will state that this is precisely in the language of the resolutions of inquiry passed heretofore with reference to the other Departments and have received the commendation of the House.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would like to inquire whether it is in order for me to offer an amendment to the substitute.

The SPEAKER. Well, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. And I decline to yield for an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield for an amendment.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I demand the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then I would like the yeas and nays on that question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would ask the Clerk to again report the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll. Pending that, without objection, the resolution will be again reported.

The resolution was again reported.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. TAWNEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire to know whether it would be in order for me to ask unanimous consent to present this amendment, and cut the matter short. If it is, I desire to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. PAYNE. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. For what purpose does the gentleman from Minnesota rise?

Mr. TAWNEY. Are we to have a vote upon the resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs——

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. TAWNEY. Or the resolution which the gentleman offered as a substitute?

The SPEAKER. The vote is on ordering the previous question on the resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs——

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. The Committee on Expenditures in the State Department.

The SPEAKER (continuing). In lieu of the resolution referred to the committee. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 126, nays 100, answered "present" 9, not voting 147, as follows:

Mr. CASSINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, when my name was called I voted "no." I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I desire to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CASSINGHAM, and he answered "present," as above recorded.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LIMIT OF NAVIGATION OF THE OSAGE RIVER IN MISSOURI.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7620) defining the limit of navigation of the Osage River in the State of Missouri.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Osage River in the State of Missouri above the point where the south line of sections 15 and 16 in township 40 north, of range 22 west, of the fifth principal meridian, and in the county of Benton, State of Missouri, crosses said river, is hereby declared not to be a navigable stream, and shall be so treated by the Secretary of War and by all other authorities.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman how this comes before the House?

Mr. HAMLIN. This bill, Mr. Speaker, only fixes the head of navigation of the Osage River. The river runs through the county of Benton, and is at that point very small. It has not been navigable for years, if it ever was, and the county seat of that county is on the banks of this river. A large part of the people live on the opposite side of the river. Under the present condition of things the county can not build bridges over the river, and they seek to fix the limit below the town, so that bridges can be built for their accommodation. There is a favorable report from the Secretary of War, and I certainly can not see that there can be any objection to the bill.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to ask the gentleman the distance at which these proposed bridges are to be located from the upper lock in the river?

Mr. HAMLIN. I can not give the distance, but it is a long distance from the mouth of the river, where it enters into the Missouri.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. There is only one lock, let me say to the gentleman, in the Osage River, and that is something like 150 miles below the head of navigation, as asked for in this bill.

Mr. BURTON. Why is this method selected of declaring the river not to be navigable instead of bringing in a bill asking authority for the construction of bridges across the river at that place?

Mr. HAMLIN. As a matter of fact, the river is not navigable that high up. No large boat has passed up the river, neither can one pass, except perhaps once in ten years, when there is an overflow in the river. It is not navigable at all, and can not be made so. There is no disposition to make it so. If the river is declared not navigable at this place, the county can go on and build bridges across it for the benefit of the people.

Mr. BURTON. Railway bridges or highway bridges?

Mr. HAMLIN. Highway bridges for wagons and teams. The river is not navigable at this place, and, as a matter of fact, never has been.

Mr. DENNY. I would like to ask the gentleman if the river at this place is above Osceola?

Mr. HAMLIN. It is just below.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAMLIN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE OVER THE MONONGAHELA RIVER.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5761) to authorize the Charleroi and Monessen Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River. This bill is a revival of the bill passed heretofore, and I ask unanimous consent that the part stricken out may be omitted and the part that is proposed to be legislated upon be read alone.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment in the shape of a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the act of Congress approved March 3, 1901, entitled "An act to authorize the Charleroi and Monessen Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River," which act has expired by limitation, be, and is hereby, revived and reenacted.

SEC. 2. That section 7 of the said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. That this act shall be null and void unless the construction of such bridge shall be commenced within one year and completed within three years from March 3, 1904."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I think there is no objection to this bill, as it will preclude all further bridges on the Monongahela River. After this the river will run through a channel covered substantially by bridges. [Laughter.]

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, no, Mr. Speaker; I want to say to my friend from Iowa that I have two or three more. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DALZELL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DISTRICT DAY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the House I believe this is District day.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman proceeds, I wish to ask him if he is not willing to accept next Monday in place of to-day for the consideration of matters respecting the District, as I am very anxious to go on with the army appropriation bill, and want to finish it to-day, if possible.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I would say that we have quite a number of important measures which relate strictly to legislation in the District, but I am desirous of doing anything that will help forward the business of the House, and if I can get unanimous consent to use next Monday instead of to-day, I will be glad to concede to-day to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to substitute next Monday in lieu of to-day for District day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10670, the army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10670, the army appropriation bill, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of supplies for the Quartermaster's Department, including regular supplies, incidental expenses, barracks and quarters, transportation of the militia and its supplies, clothing and equipage, leases of land and damages of property, $600,000.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk reported the amendment, as follows:

On page 13, line 13, after the word "Quartermaster's," insert the words "and Ordnance."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. I wish also, Mr. Chairman, to have a verbal correction made, to make the reading of the bill conform to the amendment which has just been passed. The word "Department" should be "Departments."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The sum hereby appropriated for the expenses of the organized militia for such joint encampment, maneuvers, and field instruction shall be disbursed as, and for that purpose shall constitute, one fund; and the Secretary of War shall hereafter forward to Congress at its next session a detailed statement of the expenses of such encampments and maneuvers.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I will send to the desk, and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, line 25, after the word "maneuvers," insert "and said sum shall be so apportioned and expended as to prevent deficiencies therein."

Mr. HULL. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on that amendment? I do not think it ought to be adopted.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I certainly approve the action of the Committee on Military Affairs, and evidently every Member of this House does, in putting in this provision which has just been read. As I understand it, prior to this time this sum was paid out of a general appropriation for the Army.

Mr. HULL. It was last year.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Committee on Military Affairs, in place of allowing it to be paid in that way, specified the amounts that shall be used for this particular purpose. I fear that the purpose desired to be accomplished will be defeated unless that committee goes further and says that the sum shall be so apportioned as to prevent deficiencies. I think if the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs will stop to think for a moment he will agree with me that, following the practice of these Departments, they will go ahead and create deficiencies for this item. I have no doubt it was the intention of the Committee on Military Affairs, when it reported this item and made this appropriation, to confine this particular service to the use of the appropriation which was made, and I simply seek now to confine the Department to it and to prevent them from creating deficiencies.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I have full sympathy with the general idea of preventing deficiencies, and the idea of the Committee on Military Affairs, I think I can say, was to make the Department report in such detail the cost of the militia in connection with the Army at these general maneuvers that the whole country might have the information as to what these different maneuvers cost; but it is impossible for the Department, with the small experience they have had, to make an absolute statement that the amount here would cover what was necessary for next year. For instance, they have never had maneuvers on the Pacific slope. They expect next year to have maneuvers there, and there are very long distances over which troops must be transported. They expect to have maneuvers on the Atlantic slope, and I will state that the seaboard States have a larger number of militia than any other part of the country. Now, to tie them down so absolutely as that, where not one dollar of deficiency could be created, would, in my mind, be an injustice to the National Guard—not to the Regular Army, but to the National Guard—in this case where this idea is being started and from which the whole country expect so much.

I do not believe that there is any dollar expended that is worth as much to the country as the money expended in the instruction given to the citizen soldiery of the country—the National Guard. And while I sympathize with the proposition that Congress ought zealously to guard every appropriation, I do not believe it is wise in the beginning of this work to make the limitation proposed in the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY]; and I hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, the urgent deficiency bill will be the next bill presented to this House for consideration. It is certainly annoying to Members of Congress who have to deal with these great bills—and it ought to be to the Committee on Military Affairs—when they have spent weeks in trying to ascertain what the different Departments of the Government need for a particular service, to have them come in with a great deficiency; in other words, paying no attention to the limit that Congress has undertaken to put upon the amount they can expend for that particular purpose, but going ahead and spending all the money they want to, and then coming in with a deficiency.

Unless we prevent these deficiencies Congress might just as well quit trying to thrash these matters out and simply say to the Departments, "Spend all the money you choose, and if we have not taken care of the matter in the regular appropriation bills we will take care of it on a deficiency bill."

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. PARKER. Is there any considerable sum from the War Department or the branches of the War Department on the deficiency bill?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Oh, yes; from the War Department and every other department of the Government.

Mr. PARKER. The gentleman may be correct as to "every other department;" I am speaking about the War Department.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Oh, certainly; from the War Department we have deficiency after deficiency.

Mr. PARKER. In this bill?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Not on this bill, because in this bill the committee does not undertake to care for deficiencies. That is where the trouble comes.

Mr. PARKER. I mean on the deficiency bill you have just reported.

Mr. HEMENWAY. All the deficiencies come to the Committee on Appropriations. That committee takes care of the deficiencies for all the Departments of the Government.

Mr. PARKER. The gentleman does not understand me. I ask whether in the preparation of the present deficiency bill, which you are just about to bring before the House, you did not find that the War Department had, as a whole, kept within the appropriations?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Oh, no; not a single Department of the Government has kept within its appropriations. Every one of them is coming and asking for deficiencies.

I have no doubt that the Committee on Military Affairs gave this item careful study. They took it up and figured out how much money ought to be appropriated for these different items, and they have reported appropriations accordingly. Now, what I am seeking to do is to compel the Department to so expend this money as to keep within the appropriations and not to come back here at the next session of Congress asking for a deficiency. I have no doubt that when the urgent deficiency bill comes before the House we shall have the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and other distinguished gentlemen on this floor wanting to know why this item and that item and the other item have been reported by way of deficiencies.

We do not want to appropriate for these deficiencies. We believe they ought to be discontinued. We believe that when Congress studies a matter out and says to a Department, "You may have so much money for that particular service," they ought to understand that when they have spent that much money they must stop and come back to Congress for an increase, if the appropriation has not been sufficient. Unless the practice of the Departments is made to conform to this idea, what is the use of our worrying here trying to figure out the amount of money necessary for the different Departments, if they can spend all the money they want and come in for more money by way of deficiencies? All that I seek to do is simply to have Congress say that the Department shall stand by the action of the Committee on Military Affairs and not spend any more money than Congress appropriates for this purpose.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman will allow me to ask whether he does not believe it better to have a small deficiency than a large surplus in the appropriation?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Never.

Mr. HULL. Never?

Mr. HEMENWAY. No; because if there is a surplus, it remains in the Treasury; it is not expended, and the Department keeps within the amount fixed by Congress. If they are allowed to make deficiencies, they go beyond the amount fixed by Congress.

Mr. HULL. Then I will ask the gentleman why it is that in the urgent deficiency bill nearly the entire amount carried there for the different Departments of the Government is to cover deficiencies in appropriations from the gentleman's own committee? The only deficiencies in the appropriations from our committee, covering many millions, amount to about $9,000, while on the bills which the gentleman reported they run up as high as a million dollars.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have not a copy of the bill before me. When we take up the urgent deficiency bill I will call attention to some of these items. I am going to try to reform that all along the line, and when we come to the House with the bill I want the aid of the Committee on Military Affairs and the other committees to prevent deficiencies, and I am trying right here in this item, by putting an amendment, to say that this money shall be so apportioned as to prevent deficiencies. Let us commence right here and get at it, and I seek the aid of gentlemen on every bill that comes before the House to put such legislation on them as shall prevent deficiencies.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I yield to the gentleman, if I have the time.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman why the best procedure would not be for the Committee on Appropriations to refuse to report deficiencies? In that case the Departments will have to live within their means.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That can not very well be done, because in many of these deficiencies there are no estimates. Of course there are items where there would be deficiencies, where there is no way of ascertaining in advance what amount of money is necessary. Congress will recognize those items as they come up, but in items like this, where the amount can be ascertained, there ought to be a provision to prevent deficiencies.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I thoroughly agree with the idea of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that it is not wise in legislation to allow deficiency estimates from the various Departments unless absolutely necessary, but that the amounts should be fixed by the House and that they shall be sufficient upon which the Departments must be conducted for the year. I think that is an entirely wise rule. But this item would be one of the exceptions he has just stated when he said there are circumstances where the Departments can not estimate for the next year, and in such case the deficiency may be properly allowed. Now, the amounts that are read into these items were never estimated by the War Department. They could not be estimated under the circumstances. During the last year there were maneuvers held for about 12,000 men. The militia bill, known as the Dick bill, which was passed last year, provided for the payment of officers and men, for subsistence and supplies, and for transportation out of the general funds appropriated for the Army for those various purposes. Now, the appropriations for such purposes for the present year amounted to nearly $40,000,000. There were never made specific estimates for the purposes included in these items. The Committee on Military Affairs had to segregate these items the best it could.

We took the detailed statement of the expenses of the cost of maneuvers, and from that have agreed as to the amount that we thought that the Department needed. Now, there has been no estimate as to what the maneuvers will be or cost the coming year. Maneuvers for about 12,000 men cost something over $600,000. The War Department states now that it would like to have maneuvers on the Pacific coast and on the Atlantic, but has made no estimates for these purposes, so that I am frank to state to the gentleman from Indiana and to the committee that I believe there will be a deficiency if the present plans of the War Department are carried into effect. It is my belief that the War Department should have liberty to conduct fairly good-sized maneuvers this year. I believe that the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana is just one year too early. I believe that the War Department should have fairly large maneuvers this year, and then there should be a detailed statement of the expenses forwarded to the House, as provided by the last clause of this item, and then next year we could put upon the bill such an amendment as the gentleman from Indiana now proposes to put on this bill. I think that his amendment is one year too previous.

Mr. HEMENWAY. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota that the War Department gave no estimates upon which this item can be properly ascertained, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to go back to page 12, line 14, for the purpose of offering the amendment which I will send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the committee recur to page 12, for the purpose of an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 14, page 12, insert:
"Provided, That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be expended in payment to any retired army officer of the Army who receives payment for services as clerk or other civil employee in any of the Departments of the Government."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HULL. It is subject to the point of order, and I will object.

Mr. HEPBURN. It is certainly not subject to a point of order. It is simply a limitation upon the appropriation that I propose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa objects.

Mr. HULL. I don't object to going back. I simply say it is subject to the point of order, and I will raise the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point can be raised after unanimous consent has been given to recurring to that page.

Mr. HULL. My idea was that unanimous consent had been given.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa. Does the gentleman from Iowa make any point of order?

Mr. HULL. I will raise the point of order, Mr. Chairman, and let the Chair pass on it. I do not desire to argue it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa care to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not care to be heard on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that as it is in the power of Congress to refuse to appropriate at all for this purpose it is within its power under the rules of the House to limit the appropriation in the manner provided by this amendment, and, therefore, overrules the point of order.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For 250 contract surgeons, $450,000: Provided, That hereafter contract surgeons and contract dental surgeons on duty in Alaska, Hawaii, the Philippine Islands, and Porto Rico may transfer or assign their pay accounts, when due and payable, in the methods now provided by regulations for commissioned officers of the Army.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read, as follows:

After the word "Army," in line 24, page 15, the words "Provided, That when a contract surgeon is in charge of a hospital he shall have the same authority as a commissioned medical officer."

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, this is subject to a point of order. The Surgeon-General of the Army finds especially upon a recent decision of the Supreme Court that a contract surgeon in charge of a hospital finds himself without authority to control the men in the hospital, and military punishment can not be inflicted for disobedience of his orders, and he desires where a contract surgeon is put in charge of a hospital he shall have authority to give orders. I simply state that, and leave the amendment to the House.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HULL. The point comes too late; it has been debated.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman can not go on and make——

Mr. PARKER. If the gentleman chooses to make the point of order, it applies to it; but this is simply for the benefit of the service, as the men in the hospitals should be under control.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have very substantial objections to the amendment, and I do not believe that it ought to become part of the law.

Mr. PARKER. It is certainly subject to the point of order if the gentleman chooses to make it.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that when the gentleman from New Jersey offered his amendment and stated that it was subject to the point of order, any member of the committee desiring to raise the point of order should have gotten up then and made the point of order. But in place of that the gentleman from New Jersey continued until he had concluded his remarks, and then the gentleman from Ohio comes in and urges the point of order. I raise the point of order on that that the gentleman from Ohio is out of order in raising the point of order at this time.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I did not know what it was until the gentleman stated what it was. It is very strange if you can violate the rules of the House by strangling opportunity to make a point of order. Has this question ever been stated to the House? I make the further point of order that there is no question before the House. It has not been read by the Clerk of the House, and I do not know now what the question is except what I gathered from the gentleman's statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment was reported from the Clerk's desk and was debated by the gentleman from New Jersey with no point of order against it having been made, and the Chair is of opinion that the point of order of the gentleman from Ohio comes too late.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment is a proper one, and while we are on this paragraph I think that some information should be given the House by the chairman of the Military Committee as to how long the system of employing contract surgeons in the Army is to be kept up. I, for one, think the policy a bad one to have contract surgeons year after year. Two hundred and fifty are provided for in the bill. Now, it is true that it has been necessary to have them, I will say, in the past few years to some extent, but I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that I do not think the policy a good one. I know, and I believe that the Members of this House know, that it is not to be expected that the best of medical talent can be secured for the Army under the contract system. A young man fresh from a medical college can only secure a contract for two years, as I understand, so he enters the service temporarily, and for this reason it is not to be expected that he will have the same interest in the service and in the welfare of the men under his care as a commissioned officer would. So, Mr. Chairman, I, for one, am opposed to the system.

I know of my own knowledge at least one or two cases where bright, promising young physicians sought commissions as assistant surgeons in the Army. They did not secure the commissions, but they did secure service as contract surgeons; but as soon as their time was out they left the service, and it is only to be expected that they should leave the service. The inducements are not sufficient to obtain men of the highest class and to retain them in the service. So I hope that the military committee will, at some time in the near future, bring forward such a bill or proposition that will eliminate what I think is one of the most objectionable features in the organization of the Army. The contract-service proposition is one that I do not think is calculated to promote the welfare of the soldiers whose interests are to be served.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that I did not attempt to make a point of order against the proposition without having some reason for it. I attempted to make the point of order just as quick as it was possible under the machinery as it was running. I waited, as a matter of course, until the gentleman had relinquished his place on the floor. I had no right to jump up and interrupt him and make the point of order. It would have been wholly improper for me to do so. I was in earnest in my opposition to this proposition. I do not believe that an employee of the Government, hired simply by the month in cases of emergency, should be clothed with the powers and authority of a commissioned officer. I do not believe it is necessary, and it is enough to say that in all the long history of the connection of contract surgeons with the army organization no proposition of this kind was ever heard of before, so far as I have ever been advised.

The contract surgeon does not bear a commission in the form of a commissioned officer. He is employed for a given length of time, and the Government can put an end to his employment at any time. He is put, perhaps, in charge occasionally of a hospital, and if his reasonable requests and directions to the men on duty in that hospital are disregarded by them, these men are subject to discipline by a proper application or complaint made to the commissioned officer. There is no necessity for taking an ununiformed officer or a nonuniformed employee of the Government and putting him into authority so that a soldier will be convicted under the Articles of War and liable to be shot for disobedience of orders. That is the whole of this. It amounts to nothing more. The contract surgeon or employee of the Government with such authority as that—while the soldier may not know the official character of the man at all is liable to be shot for disobedience of orders. We have got along thus far without such a provision. I do not know whether it has been recommended by anybody or not; but I believe it is an innovation here that is wholly unnecessary. That is the reason why I tried to prevent legislation on this appropriation bill of the radical character of this proposed legislation.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the committee has no particular feeling about this amendment. The gentleman from Ohio is mistaken as far as the previous action of the Government is concerned. Until very recently a contract surgeon placed in charge of a hospital could give orders for the administration of affairs in that hospital. It has only recently been decided that he could not give an order even to a nurse. The Surgeon-General of the Army, who is as jealous of the privileges of his office, probably, as the gentleman from Ohio could possibly be, insists that in the matter of good administration it is necessary to have this amendment, and if the gentleman will turn to the hearings, on page 95, he will find that the Surgeon-General says this:

> The last decisions of the Judge-Advocate-General are to the effect that a contract surgeon has no right to give an order even to the nurses in a hospital, or to enlisted men.

Now, I submit that if a contract surgeon is placed in charge of a hospital, by authority of law, where they need his services, and then if the Judge-Advocate-General's Department holds that he can not give an order to a nurse in that hospital, it is absurd to place him there. He may be a thousand miles from any other regular army hospital; he may be, and sometimes in Alaska is, more than a thousand miles from any commissioned officer of the Medical Corps of the Army; and to say that we can employ him and pay him as we do, and pay him his mileage—that we can put him in charge of a hospital and then say that he can not even make a nurse administer to the comfort of the sick is an absurdity. In my judgment, this amendment should prevail. It would not be necessary under the administration of a year ago; but under the decision in these cases it is absolutely necessary, if you are going to utilize the men you pay to look after the sick of the Army.

This amendment is exactly what the Surgeon-General of the Army asked Congress to give. Does the gentleman from Ohio or this committee believe that the Surgeon-General, at the head of the Medical Corps, would favor a measure that was not for the best interest of the sick the Medical Corps must administer to? It seems to me that it ought to be adopted from a mere statement of the case. These men pass an examination to show that they are competent, and when they are placed in charge of a hospital they ought to have the authority to administer the hospital for the interest of the suffering people that are under their charge.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For Porto Rico Provisional Regiment of Infantry, composed of two battalions of four companies each: Pay of enlisted men, $95,148.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. If I rightly understand the law, the officers in charge of the Porto Rico Provisional Regiment of Infantry are to be mustered out of the service?

Mr. HULL. The line officers; yes.

Mr. COWHERD. I realize, of course, that any provision changing existing law would be subject to a point of order, but I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he does not think it would be entirely proper to retain these officers who have brought that regiment up to a high state of efficiency, officers who have served in Cuba and the Philippines and in China, and understand the language of the people, rather than to muster them out?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, that is a question upon which there is a very wide difference of opinion. For many reasons, yes, I should say it would be wise to retain them, but for others, no. The law provided that on the 30th of June, 1904, the line officers should be mustered out. The enlisted force is retained. The officers were appointed as temporary officers when they accepted the commissions. They have been a very efficient body of officers. The only question that the gentleman can determine, or that any other member of the committee can determine, is whether it is necessary to include these men now in the regular commissioned force of the Regular Army. The regiment itself, or the two battalions, form part of the Regular Army. The field officers, the colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and two majors have always been detailed from the line of the Army. The captains and lieutenants were commissioned the same as in the provisional regiment that served for two years in the Philippine Islands. I confess that if there is some way to retain them as an independent body of men belonging only to this regiment I can see a great deal of justice in it; but to place them on the commissioned force of the Regular Army with the rank they are holding under these temporary appointments would, to my mind, be a very great injustice to the officers of the Regular Army who have served many years longer than some of these officers.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I fully agree with the gentleman that they ought not to go on the rolls of the Regular Army, but it does seem to me that this Porto Rican regiment is somewhat peculiar in its character, because of the fact that it is composed of native troops, and that therefore the men who are in command of it ought to be men who are familiar with the language and the habits and customs of the country, and that the regiment will maintain a much higher state of efficiency with officers of that kind. I understand that it is now officered by men who have brought it to such a state of efficiency that in the late competitive target practice in the Department of the East, of the thirty-two men who qualified, 60 per cent of them were from this provisional regiment. That is something unusual when it is remembered that Americans are considered ordinarily the best shots in the world. Of the twelve medals given, four were gathered in by men from this regiment, and one man qualified on the international team.

Now, it seems to me that if some provision of law could be inserted into this bill which would keep there the officers who have brought this regiment to that state of efficiency and would not call for continual change of detail of officers from the Regular Army, who are not familiar with the people or their language or habits, it would be much better for the regiment and much better for the service. I have here the draft of a measure that was sent to me, and I am going to ask the Clerk to read it. I suppose there will be a point of order made against it. I submit it to the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri offer this as an amendment?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act fixing the status of the Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry of the United States Army.

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the 30th day of June, 1904, the present Porto Rico Provisional Regiment of Infantry shall be designated as the Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry and shall constitute an infantry regiment of the United States Army, organized as are the other infantry regiments. The enlisted strength thereof shall be composed as nearly as practicable of natives of Porto Rico.

SEC. 2. The field officers shall be appointed by the President from the Army. The President is authorized in his discretion to commission the captains, first and second lieutenants, and assistant surgeons of the present Porto Rico Provisional Regiment of Infantry in their respective grades, with their rank in that regiment, as officers of the Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry, and they shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of their respective grades in the Regular Army.

SEC. 3. To fill all vacancies which may exist in the grades of captain and first lieutenant in the two battalions constituting the present Porto Rico Provisional Regiment of Infantry, after they have merged into the Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry, promotions shall be made according to seniority of the first and second lieutenants commissioned from the present Porto Rico Provisional Regiment of Infantry. Remaining vacancies shall be filled by the President by appointment of persons from the Army or who were in the military service of the United States during the war with Spain.

SEC. 4. After the regiment shall have been fully organized, promotions shall be made as follows: Of the field officers according to seniority in the regiment. Vacancies in the grade of major to be filled by the President by selection from the captains of the Army until the 30th day of June, 1915, after which date promotions to grade of field officer shall be made according to seniority of the captains in the regiment. To fill all vacancies occurring in the grades of captain and first lieutenant promotions shall be made according to seniority of first and second lieutenants in the regiment, subject to such examination to determine their fitness for promotion as may be prescribed by the President.

SEC. 5. Appointments to fill vacancies occurring in the grade of second lieutenant shall be made by the President.

SEC. 6. All appointments provided for by this act shall be made by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

SEC. 7. All laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HULL. It is new legislation. It changes existing law in every particular. The existing law is that all volunteer officers now in the Porto Rican provisional regiment shall be mustered out June 30, 1904, and their places filled by detail from the line of the Army. Not only that, but the law creates only two battalions, while this proposed amendment creates a full regiment. It is a change of the law in every respect.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri is in conflict with Rule XXI, which provides against changing existing law in any appropriation bill, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, before that paragraph is left, I rise for the purpose of moving an amendment to the bill to strike out all of lines 8, 9, 10, and 11, on page 16 of the bill. In support of that motion I wish to direct the attention of the House to the fact that a year ago the Secretary of War recommended——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. At what particular time can a point of order now be made? The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] has stated that he proposes an amendment. The amendment has not been read, and I don't know what it is. He proceeds now under the ruling of the Chair to debate a question that has not been stated, when the rules declare that the Chairman shall state the question to the House.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Why, Mr. Chairman, I thought that proposition had been stated and the Chair had ruled upon it and that we were now on another matter.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am talking about the matter to which the gentleman is addressing himself. I want to know what the amendment is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk reported the amendment, as follows:

On page 16, strike out lines 8, 9, 10, and 11.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] desire to raise a point of order?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now in order to do so.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am permitted, I suppose, to resume my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Ohio to raise a point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I make the point of order that this is new legislation—a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman from Ohio upon that point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have nothing to say about it. I simply want to have it understood that I do not wish to make any more mistakes. I do not want to make a point of order against an amendment that I have not heard and that has not been stated by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Ohio that the amendment to which the gentleman did make a point of order has been reported from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. GROSVENOR. So I have heard; but gentlemen sitting around me say that they never heard it; and I am sure I did not. And my statement that I have not heard it was certainly sufficient to have justified the Chair in ruling that the amendment should be reported again.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Did the gentleman from Ohio make a point of order to my amendment, or was he referring to the previous amendment, the one offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD]?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Ohio to insist on his point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN]?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No, I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being withdrawn, the gentleman from Texas will proceed.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I was trying to direct the attention of the House to the fact that a year ago the Department of War recommended the abolition of the Porto Rican regiment as altogether unnecessary. The size of the Army had been fixed by Congress and was well understood by all; and it was in contemplation by all that at the end of the last fiscal year the Porto Rican Regiment would cease to exist. That regiment, as the House knows, if made up of natives, or presumably natives, of that island, and officered by volunteers—the only body of volunteers that are in the service of the Government in a military capacity, I believe.

The report of the Secretary of War at that time was conclusive, it seemed to me, in its argument that it was not necessary any longer to maintain that regiment, which was a public expense. When the recommendation for the creation of that regiment was made there were more disturbances in the Philippine Islands than there have been since, and there was more necessity for an enlarged Army.

Since that time the army in the Philippines has been reduced, and thousands of troops have been brought back to the United States, and they can be used in Porto Rico if needed. The only reason that the regiment was carried over last year was that very potent reason applying to a vast amount of legislation in this House; and that is the consideration for personal equation. There are a number of young gentlemen down there—worthy men, efficient officers—who have their friends scattered throughout this country and this House, who saw to it that provision was made to continue them upon the pay roll for another year.

When the Secretary of War was before the committee the other day I inquired of him with reference to this recommendation; and here in the hearings, on page 11, is his reply to my question. I will ask the Clerk to read what I have marked in the report of the hearings.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SLAYDEN. A year or so ago there was a recommendation from the Department looking to the discontinuance of the Porto Rican regiment. Does the Department adhere to its opinion in regard to that—that the details of the Army can now attend to the duties that have hitherto been performed by this Porto Rican regiment and that there is not any longer a necessity for maintaining that?

Secretary ROOT. As a military question I should answer that yes. In the consideration of that subject a political question arose, and I found that many members of both Houses considered that for the effect upon Porto Rico it was desirable to continue that Porto Rican regiment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does not the law continue the regiment?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I know we do not discontinue it, but it was recommended that we discontinue it.

Secretary ROOT. The law as it stands now discontinues the officers and details regular officers in place of volunteers.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is it necessary to undergo that expense; is not the Army large enough and would there be any harm to the public service to send troops of the regular establishment to Porto Rico to do the police duties that have been done down there by that regiment? There is no state of disturbance down there that I have heard of. There is less call for them in the Philippines.

Secretary ROOT. Well, we have the Army down to its minimum; I do not think it is any too large. Even including these two battalions of Porto Ricans I do not think it is any too large.

Mr. CAPRON. Is it not worth all it costs for an object lesson for those people, and to exert the influence which is exerted in having that service there?

Secretary ROOT. Undoubtedly it is a useful thing to have a considerable body of Porto Ricans who are serving under the United States flag and acquiring discipline and subordination and the sentiment of loyalty that comes from military service. While I do not think there is any special necessity for it from a military point of view, I think that consideration is a very strong one.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Could not that consideration be met by permitting enlistments of those people into the regular establishment?

Secretary ROOT. That is permitted now. In the settlement of the question last year a provision was made providing for mustering out the officers and detailing regular officers to take charge, and there was put in a provision permitting the Porto Ricans to enlist.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then it is merely a small addition to the size of the Regular Army?

Secretary ROOT. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to also direct attention to the fact that the Secretary said that the necessity for this regiment is not a military but a political one. I do not believe that we ought to authorize this expense—certainly not upon this bill—for any mere political reasons. The Army is large enough. The Secretary of War frankly admits that this is an effort to increase slightly the size of the Army. I hope, therefore, that the House will adopt my motion and expunge that paragraph of the bill.

Mr. HULL. I sincerely hope that the House will not adopt this amendment. If it is desirable to abolish the two battalions of Porto Rican troops as a separate organization, it ought to be done in some other way than by simply striking out the appropriation in the bill. I do not think the gentleman from Texas meant to convey to the House the idea that Secretary Root's use of the word "political" was meant in any partisan sense whatever.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Assuredly not.

Mr. HULL. I think what the Secretary meant by that was that its effect upon the people of Porto Rico was beneficial, and that the loyalty and discipline which might come from serving under the flag was worth all it cost the Government. It is true that these Porto Ricans can enlist in the Regular Army. They can independent of this, or in addition to this. But if they enlist as other citizens of the country it is to be assigned to companies and regiments as the companies and regiments might need recruits. This is a solid body of Porto Ricans, who are under the influence of American officers, who are taught the American language, who are taught to love the American flag, and they are civilizing agents all over that island, to help in building up Americanism and good citizenship among those newly acquired people of that beautiful little island of the sea.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. HAY. Is it not a fact that these Porto Rican troops are part of the Regular Army and that they have enlisted for a term of years?

Mr. HULL. They have.

Mr. HAY (continuing). And that the failure to make this appropriation would be breaking the contract of the Government with them?

Mr. HULL. There is no doubt about that, and I hope the amendment will not prevail. I wanted to emphasize the fact when you reduced the cost of the regiment to the minimum number of men by making this provision it will return to the Government many times its cost in building up and developing good government.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa that I entirely sympathize with every effort made to help the Porto Ricans, but I do not believe they need the civilizing influence of the bayonet. I prefer to educate them along more purely American lines—to give them the position to which I believe they are entitled. I would, if we are to continue them under our flag, prefer to see them given the rank of a Territory, and ultimately, having the courage of the situation, to bring them into the American Union as a State after they have manifested their fitness for it, as I believe they would in a reasonable time. In my judgment that would have a more elevating, a more spiritual, and a more patriotic influence on the Porto Rican people than if we merely permitted a hundred or two of them to enlist in the Army.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

Regular supplies: Regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, including their care and protection, consisting of stoves and heating apparatus required for heating offices, hospitals, barracks and quarters, and recruiting stations; also ranges and stoves, and appliances for cooking and serving food, and repair and maintenance of such heating and cooking appliances; of fuel and lights for enlisted men, including recruits, guards, hospitals, storehouses, and offices, and for sale to officers, and including also fuel and engine supplies required in the operation of modern batteries at established posts; for post bakeries; for ice machines and their maintenance where required for the health and comfort of the troops, and for cold storage; for the necessary furniture, text-books, paper, and equipment for the post schools and libraries; for the tableware and mess furniture for kitchens and mess halls, each and all for the enlisted men, including recruits; of forage in kind for the horses, mules, and oxen of the Quartermaster's Department at the several posts and stations and with the armies in the field, and for the horses of the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; of straw for soldiers' bedding, and of stationery, including blank books for the Quartermaster's Department, certificates for discharged soldiers, blank forms for the Pay and Quartermaster's departments, and for printing department orders and reports, $4,800,000: Provided, That no part of the appropriations for the Quartermaster's Department shall be expended on printing unless the same shall be done by contract after due notice and competition, except in such cases as the emergency will not admit of the giving notice of competition and in cases where it is impracticable to have the necessary printing done by contract the same may be done, with the approval of the Secretary of War, by the hire of the necessary labor for the purpose: Provided further, That hereafter, except in cases of emergency or where it is impracticable to secure competition, the purchase of all supplies for the use of the various departments and posts of the Army and of the branches of the army service shall only be made after advertisement, and shall be purchased where the same can be purchased the cheapest, quality and cost of transportation and the interests of the Government considered; but every open-market emergency purchase made in the manner common among business men which exceeds in amount $200 shall be reported for approval to the Secretary of War under such regulations as he may prescribe.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, in line 12, page 20, the language of the last bill was "for the health and comfort of the troops in the insular possessions." That included the insular possessions. Now, I want to reserve the point of order on this. Where ice machines were required I notice you have struck out of this bill the words "insular possessions."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, that was because of the fact, under the old law, the Medical Department had charge of the ice machines in this country and the Quartermaster's Department in the other places. The Quartermaster's Department did the building and the construction. Now it is all placed under the head of the Quartermaster's Department, so that now, in the tropical parts of this country, in the southern States, or wherever they need to manufacture ice, the Quartermaster-General's Department has control of the entire plant manufacturing the ice. Therefore it was not necessary to limit them to the Philippine Islands as was done last year, because as a matter of administration the whole matter had been turned over to the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. HEMENWAY. In your provision in the bill of last year money could have been expended for the purchase of ice machines at any post in the United States.

Mr. HULL. Because the Medical Department had charge then.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Where do you strike out the provision for the medical department?

Mr. HULL. We strike it all out.

Mr. HEMENWAY. This does not authorize them to purchase anything that they had not authority to do before?

Mr. HULL. In one Department or other of the Government; no, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on his point of order?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not make the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Iowa a question about the language contained in line 12, page 21, to wit, "where it is impracticable to secure competition."

Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Iowa where in the United States is it impracticable for the United States Government to get goods furnished the Army by competitive bids?

Mr. HULL. Oh, there are some things they buy in such a very small amount that it would cost more to advertise than it would to buy them.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. "Impracticable to secure competition"—would that cover that kind of case?

Mr. HULL. It may be an emergency where you had to buy at once. It is a very small thing, some of the purchases being as low as $5.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is the usual language used?

Mr. HULL. It is the usual language.

Mr. PRINCE. The same as used last year?

Mr. HULL. The same as used for many years.

The Clerk read as follows:

Horses for cavalry, artillery, and engineers: For the purchase of horses for the cavalry, artillery, and engineers, and for the Indian scouts, and for such infantry and members of the Hospital Corps in field campaigns as may be required to be mounted, and the expenses incident thereto, $400,000: Provided, That the number of horses purchased under this appropriation, added to the number now on hand, shall be limited to the actual needs of the mounted service, and, unless otherwise ordered by the Secretary of War, no part of this appropriation shall be paid out for horses not purchased by contract, after competition duly invited by the Quartermaster's Department, and an inspection under the direction and authority of the Secretary of War.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee why "engineers" are added?

Mr. HULL. I will say, Mr. Chairman, under the reorganization bill we created a battalion of engineers, and the horses have been purchased for them under this clause. It is a question of construction whether they can furnish the horses for the Engineer Corps unless the law authorizes it, and at the request of the Department the committee put in that in order to clear the matter up.

The Clerk read as follows:

Barracks and quarters, Philippine Islands: Continuing the work of providing for the proper shelter and protection of officers and enlisted men of the army of the United States lawfully on duty in the Philippine Islands, including the acquisition of title to building sites when necessary, and including also shelter for the animals and supplies, and all other buildings necessary for post administration purposes, $385,500.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to interrogate the Chairman of the Military Committee in regard to this section of the bill. In the first place, I want to ask him how many soldiers are now quartered in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. HULL. They have there the constabulary (they are not provided for at all in this bill and are half soldier and half police); they have scouts, I suppose about 5,000 men, if they are filled to their full enlisted authorized strength, and I think they have probably eight to ten thousand American soldiers.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Now I want to ask him further, What progress has been made in the construction of these barracks and buildings since the last Congress?

Mr. HULL. The last Congress, on the urgent deficiency bill, appropriated $550,000 for a post at Manila. The regular army bill carried, as I remember, $1,500,000 additional. It was expected at that time this amount given would be sufficient to complete the system of posts for the care, shelter, and protection of our troops in the Philippine Islands. They find that it is necessary to ask this amount additional, and the information the committee has is that this amount will practically complete the necessary appropriation for the erection of barracks and quarters in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. That hardly answers the question, which is, What buildings have already been erected and where have those buildings been erected?

Mr. HULL. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I can answer that question in detail. There have been erected buildings at Manila, buildings at Iloilo, buildings at Cebu, buildings at different posts in the island of Luzon, and buildings at the different posts in Mindanao, and all the places where we have regular established posts. It would probably reach a large number of posts altogether, at probably a hundred places where we have permanent buildings.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I think the gentleman is mistaken in one thing. The last $500,000 was appropriated for the very purpose the $365,000 is appropriated for by this Congress, not for the post at Manila alone.

Mr. HULL. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am simply giving the information we have as to what they need. If the gentleman does not like the appropriation, he can move to strike it out.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Well, I do not want to be put in the attitude of striking out a proper appropriation. What I am trying to get at is the chairman's information in regard to the necessity of the appropriation and how the large sum of $500,000 has been spent.

Mr. PALMER. Two million dollars.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I am reminded it is more than $2,000,000. What was the testimony before the committee on that subject?

Mr. HULL. I will read from the hearings:

The CHAIRMAN (reading). Barracks and quarters, Philippine Islands. We appropriated last year the $500,000; yes, more than that.

General HUMPHREY. We had last year $1,500,000, and this year we have on the regular appropriation $500,000 and deficiency act $250,000; also under sundry civil act $1,000,000 for the military post near Manila.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. That came in under a separate bill?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. And is not embraced in this at all?

Mr. HULL (reading):

Mr. ESCH. For the fiscal year 1903 we appropriated one million and a half, and in the deficiency there was another $250,000, making in all one and three-quarters million dollars?

General HUMPHREY. Yes, sir; also $500,000 in the Army act, March 2, 1903.

The CHAIRMAN. This estimate is with the idea of completing that work there or simply carrying it on?

General HUMPHREY. Carrying it on to completion and for necessary repairs the $365,000 is asked for.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Now, can the chairman of the committee give the information to the committee as to when this work will likely be completed?

Mr. HULL. Oh, certainly not. It will never be entirely completed. We have had in the United States a hundred and more years of government, and we have never completed any line of our public work.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think there will always be a necessity for troops in the Philippine Islands and for these expenditures to go on?

Mr. HULL. I think that the time will never come when the United States will not have troops in the Philippine Islands any more than the time has ever come when we have not had troops in the State of New York and in the State of Illinois.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. One other question, Mr. Chairman. I notice on page 24 there is an appropriation for barracks and quarters, among other things, of $4,750,000. Then here is this particular section, where we appropriate for the proper shelter of enlisted men of the Army of the United States. What would be the difference between providing barracks and quarters for troops and for the proper shelter and protection of enlisted men of the Army?

Mr. HULL. There is this difference. Under the head of "Barracks and quarters" we appropriate for officers as well as enlisted men, but there is a more restrictive clause in appropriating money to be disposed of in this country than there is over there. In this country we first get the sites, we select them, enact a law locating the posts, and carry it on in a different way; while there we have to trust largely to the military establishment to determine many questions.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Can the gentleman from Iowa give me any information as to the number of building sites purchased, or any evidence as to the cost of the building sites, or the cost of any of the buildings?

Mr. HULL. No; the committee did not go into the number at all.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, that the laborer is worthy of his hire no one stands ready to dispute. The laborer is entitled to such compensation that he may have over and above his living, enough to accumulate at least a small competency for old age. The coal miner is entitled to such wages as will enable him to educate his children as well as the mine owner educates his. This is only justice to the laborer, and the best interest of the Republic demands it. Education is one of the cardinal doctrines of the Republic. This contention applies to all classes of laborers, and should apply to those in the Government employ as well as to those in individual employment. I do not believe in a little spasmodic economy that requires Government employees to work another half hour and leaves all the great extravagances go untouched.

It has been notorious for many years that post-route mail carriers are very poorly paid, and has been frequently charged that the rural-route carriers are also underpaid. I received a marked copy of the Detroit Tribune that contains an article that states facts and figures with reference to the State of Michigan, and I presume the same condition exists in all the States. The article sums up the situation so well that I send it to the Clerk's desk and ask that the same may be read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

FIERCE FIGHT FOR A LIVING—THE RURAL MAIL CARRIERS MAKE $7 A YEAR PROFIT—A MOST STRIKING COLLECTION OF DISHEARTENING EXPERIENCES—INFORMATION COLLECTED FROM 570 RURAL ROUTES IN MICHIGAN.

Rural free mail delivery has reached a point in its development where the United States Government may pause and take an inventory. The Post-Office Department and the Members of Congress, on whose good judgment the institution has been founded, may ask themselves how long the Government can expect the carriers to furnish capital for the big enterprise; may ask themselves the reason why so many carriers quit the service, and whether it was not the hope of ultimate just recompense that has kept the ranks of the carriers passably filled.

Some food for serious thought has been gathered by the Tribune. Individual complaints have reached the ear of the public and of Congress, but convincing statistics as to the exact status of the great rural-delivery service in any one State have been inaccessible. The Tribune, through its correspondents, has gone to the original sources, and concerning the service in Michigan has gathered facts which, bearing as they must one way or the other, will scarcely be challenged. An average profit of $7 above living expenses and care of horses has been made in the past year by each carrier. The capital furnished by each carrier is $300. At the end of three years the outfit must generally be replaced with a new one. Regardless of the fact that all American citizens aim to increase their savings and the Government expects its employees to provide for their own rainy days and their old age, in this arduous service the average savings of $7 a year must be applied to the purchase of a new equipment at the end of the third year. The excess of $300 over $21 must come from other sources, as, in fact, did the original outlay of $300.

The testimony of 570 rural mail carriers in Michigan points to these conclusions. Assuming that all the carriers get $600 a year, which they do not, the cost of maintaining from two to four horses with almost an equal number of vehicles makes a serious inroad into the salary. Add to this the cost of replacing a lost horse or a demolished wagon. Add further the cost of maintaining a carrier's home. The data submitted are overwhelming. In nearly every instance the carrier can save absolutely nothing. Then the collapse of his equipment and the need for its replacement by a new outfit.

The rural mail-delivery service has been an experiment, both as to cost of maintenance and as to benefits. The benefits are admitted. The cost of maintenance is a knowledge that must come from the mouths of the carriers themselves, who pay the bills. The Tribune, has made a thorough canvass of 570 routes in Michigan, none of the information being advanced by the carriers by way of complaint against the Government, and has drawn conclusions which it offers as being approximately correct for the whole State.

There is revealed the fact that 570 carriers employ 1,431 horses in the service and 1,148 vehicles. The total number of miles traveled in one day is 14,025, an average of 24.6 miles. The carriers work six days in the week. The salaries vary from $500 to $600. It has cost these 570 carriers a total of $16,656 for repairs to vehicles, harness, and horses in one year. This does not include the astonishing bills for horseshoeing that are run up on account of the constant service. Neither does it include the replacing of the horses lost, nor the buying of new wagons, nor the medical attendance. A few of the reports may include horseshoeing bills, but where they do it is evident by the size of the repair bill.

To our 570 carriers there happened 511 accidents last year, every one entailing the expense of repairs. Many of these accidents incurred the entire demolition of the wagon and some the loss of a horse. The service is peculiarly liable to such serious accidents and the carrier takes the chance and bears the expense. Vehicles and harness gave way 490 times, each break entailing an expense of from $1 to $10. Wheels have been smashed by the score in ruts and mires. Boxes have been ruined by upsets. The breakage bill alone makes up almost the entire $16,656, which is borne by the carriers, the average cost per carrier being $28 a year.

Along the muddy or snow-bound roads there have been forty-three upsets, in many of which the carrier was injured. A total of twenty-six horses were lost to the carriers last year, either by being so maimed as to necessitate their being shot, by dropping dead in their tired tracks, or by lingering ill in their stables after being ruined in the service. Horses were injured to the number of seventy-eight, many of the injuries reducing the value of the horses by 50 or 75 per cent. Without exception, the carriers' horses are on the road to the dump, and by the end of the third year are useless or are worth but 15 per cent of their original value. The carrier himself is often in peril of his life. Carriers to the number of eight suffered serious injury, their legs having been broken, or their ribs, or their wrists, the routes being far from being upholstered.

The carriers are almost unanimous in saying that they make no profit. Scores of whom the Tribune makes no record declare that they are away behind in their enterprise. Some of the recorded profits are known to be meant as being the total on which the carrier has to live, but the Tribune submits them as they stand. It is palpable that a carrier can not save $150 after paying his living expenses as well as for his horses and equipment. A total of $4,021 has been saved, counting these instances, thus making an average of $7 per annum for each carrier, an eloquent bank account for Uncle Sam's employees.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee this question: As I understand it, Congress either locates by law our army posts in the United States, or the leading general, with his aids and associates, do so under the limitations of the law. Now, will the gentleman tell us who has located the army posts where these lands are to be bought, where we take title to lands, where we build the army posts and expend millions of money? Will he tell me who is selecting, who is buying, who is supervising that matter?

Mr. HULL. The commanding general of the islands and the board of officers appointed by him to select the site. The quartermaster-general makes the plans when he knows the number of troops to be housed by the post, just as we used to do here. In any fort that is temporary now the Department can select a post.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not pretend to remember all the laws that we have enacted, because we have enacted so many, but I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if the law permits the commanding general of the Philippine Islands to go throughout the islands and purchase these sites, as it seems he has done by the answer made by the gentleman to the questions put by my colleague, Mr. PATTERSON? Do our laws, in short, permit the commanding general of the Philippine Islands to go anywhere and locate an army post?

Mr. HULL. I think there is no doubt of that under this appropriation bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can the gentleman refer me to any statute that permits the general in the Philippine Islands to go anywhere and buy land and erect a post such as we authorized last Congress at Manila?

Mr. HULL. This clause places no restriction on the selection of the property for that purpose, but leaves it to the proper officer to carry it out. I think the gentleman from Tennessee would not want to interfere with the discretion, because he will realize that men who have charge of the department, whose troops are located in that district, know the different surroundings and different localities and are better judges than Congress would be. We could not undertake to locate or limit or restrict the proper discretion of the officers in this matter.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would not interrupt proper and legitimate protection to our troops—they obey orders and must go where ordered. I am, however, anxious, Mr. Chairman, to find out, and I think we ought to know, whether or not the officer in charge of locating these expensive army posts is going along the islands doing so without any authority of law just as he pleases, without any express statute giving him authority to do it. The government of the Philippine Islands is not building the army posts; the people of the United States are doing it. I am disposed to think that the appropriations for the Army and for the Navy have been so large that some of our home undertakings are suffering—for instance, our river and harbor bill and the public-buildings bill—but I hope they are not done away with for all time. These home enterprises are suffering, I think, from these immense expenditures for the Army and the Navy because of our colonies—imperialism, in short. Inasmuch as our home people are paying the money out, we want to know where it goes—whether legally or not and the amounts. My recollection is that we made a specific appropriation to erect an army post at Manila and there was considerable contest about it, because it was an entering wedge to a great and continuous expense. The gentleman from Iowa very frankly states that our buildings in the Philippine Islands for troops are never going to stop; that they will never end. In other words, our own people will and must suffer for our colonists—just as I prophesied time and again—and the end, the gentleman says, will never come.

He further states that we have not stopped in the United States, and he goes on and argues it, lawyer-like, whether he is one or not, and says we have never seen the time in the United States when we did not have soldiers in the State of New York: but, Mr. Chairman, the soldiers in New York are at home. When we have American soldiers they have always fought at home. Our Navy, it is true, has gone on the other side of the world to protect our rights on this side, but our soldiers have always been at home until this modern way of amalgamating a republic with a lot of unfortunate colonists on the other side of the world was inaugurated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PRINCE rose.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then I am doubly glad to yield. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I now yield to the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRINCE. Has the gentleman the right to yield to me now?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, yes. The Chairman is good enough to allow me to go ahead.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will permit the gentleman from Tennessee to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if we are not appropriating in this bill for necessary shelter and protection of the officers, including shelter for the animals and supplies, and all other buildings necessary for post administration purposes?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman is reading from the bill?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Of course, I can not answer the question. The gentleman has the bill before him, and certainly the bill ought to tell him. Read it.

Mr. PRINCE. Yes; on page 26 the gentleman will find the amount is stated at $365,590.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, I will ask the gentleman something that is not in the bill. How much did we appropriate last year for that same purpose?

Mr. PRINCE. I can not state now from memory.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Five hundred thousand dollars, my colleague tells me. Now it seems that it has gone into an amount nearly equal to $2,000,000, as my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] suggests. So you see, my dear sir, this thing is going into millions, and it will be piling up here in a year or so into millions and millions, and we are going all over the Philippine Islands erecting army posts, and I dare say they will erect them where they will cost the least to the Government, of course; but we have nothing here to show that, and the end will never come to our Philippine expenses.

I have not heard any testimony read here as yet which tells us how much these buildings will cost or where they are located. I believe the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] said they are located all over the islands. Well, I have never heard of any law—I do not mean that I am an expert in military law, for I am not, and I do not mean to say that I recollect what we have passed already——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires the committee to understand that the gentleman from Tennessee is proceeding under unanimous consent.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Just a moment, and I am done. I never heard of any law that permitted anybody to go all over the Philippine Islands and expend the people's money for army posts or anything else, but it seems this appropriation contemplates that.

The Clerk read as follows:

Transportation of the Army and its supplies: Transportation of the Army, including baggage of the troops when moving either by land or water, and including also the transportation of recruits and recruiting parties heretofore paid from the appropriation for "Expenses of recruiting;" of supplies to the militia furnished by the War Department; of the necessary agents and employees; of clothing, camp and garrison equipage, and other quartermaster stores, from army depots or places of purchase or delivery to the several posts and army depots, and from those depots to the troops in the field; of horse equipments and subsistence stores from the places of purchase, and from the places of delivery under contract to such places as the circumstances of the service may require them to be sent; of ordnance, ordnance stores, and small arms from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and army depots; freights, wharfage, tolls, and ferriages; the purchase and hire of draft and pack animals and harness, and the purchase and repair of wagons, carts, and drays, and of ships and other vessels and boats required for the transportation of troops and supplies and for garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several posts; hire of teamsters and other employees; extra-duty pay of enlisted men driving teams, repairing means of transportation, and employed as train masters, and in opening roads and building wharves; transportation of funds of the Army; the expenses of sailing public transports on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific oceans (no steamship in the transport service of the United States shall be sold or disposed of without the consent of Congress having been first had or obtained); for procuring water, and introducing the same to buildings at such posts as from their situation require it to be brought from a distance, and for the disposal of sewage and drainage, and for constructing roads and wharves; for the payment of army transportation lawfully due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds (to be adjusted in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court in cases decided under such land-grant acts), but in no case shall more than 50 per cent of full amount of service be paid: Provided, That such compensation shall be computed upon the basis of the tariff or lower special rates for like transportation performed for the public at large, and shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service: Provided further, That in expending the money appropriated by this act, a railroad company which has not received aid in bonds of the United States, and which obtained a grant of public land to aid in the construction of its railroad on condition that such railroad should be a post route and military road, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, naval, and other Government services, and also subject to such regulations as Congress may impose restricting the charge for such Government transportation, having claims against the United States for transportation of troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property over such aided railroads, shall be paid out of the moneys appropriated by the foregoing provision only on the basis of such rate for the transportation of such troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property as the Secretary of War shall deem just and reasonable under the foregoing provision, such rate not to exceed 50 per cent of the compensation for such Government transportation as shall at that time be charged to and paid by private parties to any such company for like and similar transportation; and the amount so fixed to be paid shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service: Provided further, That the number of draft animals purchased from this appropriation, added to those now on hand, shall be limited to such numbers as are actually required for the service, $14,500,000.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the language found in line 7 on page 27 and ending at the word "obtain," in line 9, for the purpose of inquiring of the chairman if that is the existing law?

Mr. HULL. It is. It was enacted last year.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is not changing existing law in any respect?

Mr. HULL. Not at all. The committee simply wants to make it so that Congress retains control of these boats, so that they shall not be hawked about the country unless Congress gives full authority.

Mr. GROSVENOR. How long has that been the law?

Mr. HULL. One year.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Before that time a great many of them were sold?

Mr. HULL. Yes; and at a very low price.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is all. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Construction and repair of hospitals: For construction and repair of hospitals at military posts already established and occupied, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same, and including also all expenditures for construction and repairs required by the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., except quarters for the officers and for the construction and repair of general hospitals and expenses incident thereto, and for additions needed to meet the requirements of increased garrisons, $475,000: Provided, That out of the above appropriation not to exceed $50,000 may be used to construct a hospital at any one post.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the proviso commencing in line 22, page 29. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether under the law he is permitted to expend more than $20,000 for the purpose contemplated by the proviso?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I would refer the gentleman to the note to be found on page 160 of the Book of Estimates, and I hope the committee will give attention to it when I read it:

This estimate is in accordance with the recommendation of the Surgeon-General of the Army, who says: "Of the above amount, $100,000 is to build a modern hospital for 100 beds at Fort Riley, Kans.; $30,000 to build a modern hospital for 24 beds at Fort Totton, N. Y.; $45,000 is to enlarge the hospital at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.; $50,000 is to enlarge the hospital at Fort Snelling, Minn.; and $60,000 is to enlarge the hospital at Fort Sheridan, Ill. These funds are necessary to meet the requirements caused by increased garrisons, and as section 1136 of the Revised Statutes forbids the use of more than $20,000 at any one post, it is requested that Congress be asked to designate the amounts mentioned as needed for each post or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Now, there is no question in my mind but that the point of order raised by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY], if he should insist upon it, is well taken; but it did seem to me that in view of the large posts that are now being erected and the necessity for the hospital accommodations, it would not be good administration to limit the sum to $20,000; and for that reason we put upon this bill a proviso that the amount expended in this way shall not exceed $50,000. That covers practically all the hospitals except the one at Fort Riley, Kans.; and if there they want a hospital to cost as much as $100,000, I think it is only right, this amount being so much beyond the ordinary, that they should come and ask for it in the regular way.

But it seems to me, in view of these posts now being constructed and the number of troops now housed at these large centers of military concentration, $50,000 is not an unreasonable sum for Congress to allow in this appropriation bill. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not insist on his point of order.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I should like to read two extracts from the testimony of the Surgeon-General before the Committee on Military Affairs as bearing on this point of the gentleman from Indiana. I read from the statement of General O'Reilly before the committee:

You gentlemen know what $20,000 would do in 1859 as compared with what it will do now.

He had stated that the law limiting the appropriation to $20,000 at any one post was passed in 1859. He then continued:

The way things are now is an abominable nuisance. We are called upon to construct a hospital at a post. The estimates are made, the plans are made, and they meet the approval of all the authorities, including the Secretary of War. We then advertise for bids. Bids come in—$35,000 or something like that—perfectly reasonable, but which under the law of 1859 can not be accepted. We then make plans again, and again ask for bids. The bids come in for about the same amount. Then we cut out this and cut out that, until we have left a shell of a building that is hardly fit for occupancy, readvertise, and then maybe we will get a bid for, say, $22,000. Then it is necessary to cut down something else, expecting to add it in another year, so we cut off a wing or something of that kind. At the end of all this you have a building which will have to be added to from year to year, and which will cost you more in the end than if you had erected a good building in the first place.

Farther on in his statement he says:

We can put up a part of the building this year. That will cost $30,000, and we can add $20,000 next year and $20,000 more the third year, and maybe some more the fourth year; and then after we have got all that we have a patchwork building which has cost more than if we had had an appropriation of $50,000 or $60,000 in the first place to spend on the building.

It was on this testimony that the committee suggested this provision.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, section 1136 of the Revised Statutes was passed evidently for the purpose of keeping this matter within the control of Congress—prohibiting the erection of buildings which would cost more than the amount named without the direct authority of Congress. I think that is a very good provision, because we do not want to give to army officers the right to build hospitals whenever they choose, and if they are carrying on the practice that the hearings evidently prove they are carrying on, they are violating the law. If they are spending $20,000 on a particular building one year and then $20,000 on the same building the next year, they are violating at least the spirit of the law, which says they shall not spend more than $20,000 in the construction of a building unless under the direct authority of Congress.

I do not think such a practice is right. I do not feel that I should be doing my duty if I failed to make this point of order, because we do not want to leave to the heads of Departments the determination as to where more hospitals shall be built. We want to retain the right ourselves to say by legislation when these buildings shall be constructed.

Now, I believe this section of the statutes is a good one. I remember that where the buildings are to cost more than $20,000, and are authorized by law, they are usually taken up on the sundry civil appropriation bill. But at least there should be authority of law where a larger amount than $20,000 is expended on any of these buildings; and for that reason, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state his point of order?

Mr. HEMENWAY. My point of order is that this provision changes existing law. Section 1136 of the Revised Statutes prohibits the erection of any buildings the cost of which is to exceed $20,000, except by special authority of Congress. The pending provision would allow the erection of buildings at a cost of $50,000 without receiving such special authority.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana is directed to the proviso alone?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULL. I would ask the Chair to consider this one point in connection with it: That if this appropriation is made for hospitals and construction and repairs, and the proviso that no more shall be expended than this, it is entirely a different proposition from changing the law. I submit it to the Chair and hope the Chair will consider that point.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the Chair is in doubt at all on the point of order, I want to argue it.

The CHAIRMAN. Just one moment. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to the fact that, owing to the distance, the Chair was unable to hear all the gentleman said and will be glad if he will restate his position.

Mr. HULL. As the gentleman from Indiana stated his point of order, the proposition he made was that under this authorization by law no more than so much should be expended for any one building. He did not mean hospitals any more than any other building. That is the law, as I understand it. Now, the law has established posts at certain places—at all the places that have been enumerated by the existing statutes as to localities where this money shall be expended. This appropriation gives in gross a large sum of money for the construction and repair of hospitals under the law. The proviso is simply for the purpose of saying that not more than $50,000 shall be expended on any one building, and I think it is an open question if a point of order can lie against it under these conditions. The appropriation itself makes law.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Indiana cite the statute to which he refers?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have just sent it up. It is section 1136.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair finds that section 1136 of the Revised Statutes appears to limit the amount which may be appropriated for such a purpose without previous special authority of Congress to $20,000. The proviso against which the point of order is made authorizes the expenditure of $50,000 for the construction of a hospital. It seems to have that effect, although the language is somewhat indefinite. That seems to be the proper construction of it. The Chair is therefore of the opinion that the point of order is well taken and must be sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Army general hospital, District of Columbia: For the construction in or near the city of Washington, D. C., of an army general hospital, for the treatment of special classes of cases, for purposes of instruction in connection with an army medical school, for training enlisted men of the Hospital Corps in nursing, and to serve as a base hospital in time of war, and for the purchase of land in the District of Columbia for a site for said hospital, $400,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used until it shall have been determined by the Secretary of War that the entire cost of plans, buildings, and grounds will not exceed the sum hereby appropriated.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this section, that there is no existing law authorizing this appropriation, which is legislation upon a general appropriation bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman made a point of order only last Saturday of continuing the work by the Signal Corps in laying a cable in Alaska. If the Chair will hold the same as to this provision as he held on that occasion, why, I presume that it will be subject to the point of order, although I can not believe that the Chair decided that correctly, because it was a continuing work, and that was an appropriation to finish the work. I did not appeal, because I did not think it necessary. I want to say, as to this, that there is a general hospital now located in the city of Washington. It has been established at the barracks formerly known as the "Washington Barracks," now known as the "Engineer School," and the law under which we transferred the engineer barracks to the Engineer School provided for a system of buildings there for the school of engineers that interfered with this general army hospital.

It was also provided by law that they should erect a war college on these grounds. That has been done to a certain extent, and there is another appropriation in here for that. In the course of this new work it has become absolutely necessary to tear down the present general army hospital and to erect another one on some other ground to be purchased by the Government, and in my judgment the point of order is not well taken on this, as it is a part of the general plans for the Army, which is not changed by this bill, and is legitimate to appropriate for in this bill.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the Chair is in doubt, I want to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, the proposition is to tear down the general hospital, which it is said cost $40,000, and which it is said is now ten years old, and therefore not fit for further use, and to buy ground to build another hospital somewhere else. That is the proposition. Now, if that is a continuing work, the point of order is not well taken. It is not proposed to repair the old hospital, nor to add to the old hospital; but the proposition is to tear down the old hospital and to buy new ground somewhere else and build another hospital for the sum of $400,000. If this were a mere continuation of that old work, then it would not say the new hospital in this bill. Now, I do not know but that a new hospital is needed in the city of Washington. Perhaps it is. But I do know, or at least I think I know, that a work on this magnificent scale—the selection of a site and the preparation of plans and the expenditure of $400,000 for the purpose of establishing a new hospital for the purposes named in the bill—ought not to be undertaken without some amount of investigation and some reason be given that will show the necessity for such work.

Now, practically the reasons given by the Surgeon-General in his communication to the committee are that he needs a new building, to cost $400,000, for the purpose of setting up a medical school for the instruction of the student officers in the science of medicine; for the purpose of treating special cases which he mentions, old army officers who are to be retired on account of disability. He wants a $400,000 place where he can examine these men and say whether they are really entitled to be retired. Now, in my opinion, and I may be wrong, I do not believe that the United States Government ought to go into the business of running a medical school or a medical college; I do not believe we ought to spend $400,000 for the purpose of establishing a place where the student officers can learn the use of the Röntgen rays as the Surgeon-General recommends.

I do not believe it is essential to establish such a place as that for a base hospital, around which can be located some tents for temporary hospitals in case there should be a war, as he recommends. Now, those are the reasons. I am not against a hospital if needed, but I do say there ought to be some kind of an investigation and some kind of an inquiry and some kind of a responsibility fixed somewhere, more than is contained in this letter, which is addressed by the Surgeon-General to the committee and on which this appropriation has been recommended.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to add one word to what the gentleman has said in regard to this report of the Surgeon-General. The Surgeon-General says:

> A conservative estimate of the money saved the United States by the successful surgical operations at this hospital since its establishment, September 8, 1898, to December 10, 1903, has been made, and it is shown that 40 officers completely incapacitated have been operated upon and restored to duty, whose retired pay would have been over $75,000 a year, and that 380 enlisted men have been returned to duty after operations for disability, whose pensions, had they been discharged, would have amounted to nearly $49,000 a year. The institution has therefore already paid for itself many times over from its surgical work alone, while its value as an essential part of the instruction of young medical officers and enlisted men of the Hospital Corps can not be estimated.

Mr. PALMER. Well, Mr. Chairman, that saving of $75,000 and the $49,000 was made in this little old $40,000 hospital that you propose to tear down because it is ten years old.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman had read the other part of this he would see that that old hospital would have to come down. It is built of timber, it is in the way, and the ground is to be occupied for other purposes. Even if it were not for other purposes, it is in such condition as to be unsanitary as a hospital.

Mr. PALMER. This is what the Surgeon-General says:

> Plans for the War College and Engineer School contemplate a new building on the present site of the hospital. It has been proposed to move the present building and use it as a post hospital during the construction work, and for this purpose it is neither too large nor too good. It is inadequate in size for a general hospital, however, and being largely built of timber it has shrunk and settled until it is no longer possible to maintain it in a perfect sanitary condition where the necessary aseptic operations are to be performed. The building is about ten years old and cost less than $40,000.

Well, it is ten years old and cost $40,000, and it has been adequate for the needs of the Government up to this time. Now, all I am proposing is that before going into the appropriation of such a large sum as $400,000 and the selection of a site for the erection of a new building there ought to be some kind of inquiry and there ought to be some kind of a law authorizing the expenditure.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the gentleman who has just taken his seat nor the gentleman from Iowa has addressed himself to the point of order, and therefore I want to read further from the report of the Surgeon-General where the gentleman from Pennsylvania left off. He says, speaking of this hospital:

> It is always crowded so that nurses must be lodged outside, and there are no private rooms for officers or special cases. The location is not suitable, even if it were possible to retain the site, and the ground is low and the heat excessive in summer. I repeat most earnestly my previous recommendation that a general hospital of sufficient size and perfect in every respect be built in the District of Columbia for the following purposes.

Then he goes on and gives the reasons for it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to speak upon the reasons for establishing this hospital when the point of order has not yet been passed upon. Therefore I will wait until the Chairman passes upon it.

I will print as a part of my remarks the following:

ARMY GENERAL HOSPITAL IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—REASONS FOR ENLARGING THIS INSTITUTION AND PUTTING IT ON A MORE PERMANENT BASIS.

The need of a large general hospital at the national capital is not new. In time of war one or more will always be required for the service of the troops which are mobilized near Washington, while in time of peace it will be equally necessary for the treatment of special cases and as a part of the system of instruction of young medical officers and members of the Hospital Corps and Nurse Corps, as stated below.

In 1862 there were in the District of Columbia 32 hospitals, treating 20,000 sick and wounded, and the Surgeon-General in his report for that year, which is remarkable for its wise and far-seeing summary of the needs of the Medical Department, says as follows:

"An army meidical school, in which medical cadets and others seeking admission into the corps could receive such special instruction as would better fit them for commissions, and which they can not obtain in the ordinary medical schools, is a great desideratum. Such an institution could be established in connection wth any general hospital with but little, if any, expense to the United States.

"A hospital of a more permanent character than any now in this city is, I think, very necessary and will be required for years after the present rebellion has ceased. I therefore recommend that suitable buildings be purchased or erected for that purpose. If this is done, the medical school and museum will be important accessories to it."

The first of these recommendations for the establishment of an army medical school was realized in 1893 and is now in the twelfth year of a flourishing and useful existence. The second recommendation—the establishment of a permanent general hospital at Washington—was not realized until 1898, when the Secretary of War ordered the conversion of the post hospital at Washington Barracks into a general hospital and the construction of some additional wooden buildings of a temporary character. This is the present general hospital establishment, and originally an improvisation. The time has arrived when a larger and more permanent establishment has become imperative.

Favorable action on the part of Congress is necessary now for three reasons.

1. The present buildings are, as shown below, unsuitable and inadequate, and the temporary ones have become so dilapidated as to be nearly uninhabitable (see e).

2. The space occupied by these buildings is necessary for the completion of the new engineer post as authorized by Congress, and the removal of the general hospital is demanded in obedience to that law in physics which declares that two bodies can not occupy the same space at the same time.

3. In order to reap the full measure of usefulness of this institution it should have room for great expansion in time of war, and should be the great training school for the Hospital Corps. It should also afford a home for the Army Medical School. The combination of these two institutions, as is the case with the English army hospital and school established after the Crimean War at Netley, and the celebrated French hospital and school at Val-de-Grace at Paris, offers advantages which are great and evident, and which are enumerated below (c).

The establishment has fully demonstrated its value to the military service, but as now constituted is entirely inadequate, and the work of reconstruction at Washington Barracks will render its removal imperative in the near future. In order to continue this hospital elsewhere in the District of Columbia and upon a satisfactory basis, land will have to be purchased and suitable buildings erected thereon. To this end the Secretary of War has asked for an appropriation from Congress of $400,000.

This hospital is needed (a) for the treatment of special cases; (b) for training enlisted men of the Hospital Corps; (c) for instruction in connection with the Army Medical School; (d) for expansion and use as a base hospital in time of war; (e) to provide adequate accommodations on a good site.

The usefulness of the hospital in meeting the needs of the service and the necessity for an adequate establishment will be discussed under each of the above heads.

(a) THE TREATMENT OF SPECIAL CASES.

Cases of illness and injury are constantly arising in the military service which require special skill and special appliances for their treatment in order to save the men to the service, to reduce the pension list, and to give men disabled in the service of their country the benefit of the most advanced medical and surgical knowledge. Hospitals at military posts are equipped for the usual run of cases, but it is too expensive to equip all hospitals in the Army with the special apparatus required for the treatment of difficult cases; equally, it is impossible to have at all posts surgeons skilled in all the specialties of medicine and surgery. The advance of medicine and surgery has produced a large number of special and costly appliances, and has necessitated the training of medical men for their use, and in the observation and treatment of special diseases. The proper care of cases requiring special skill and special apparatus can only be given at a hospital especially equipped for the purpose. The conditions relative to the treatment of special cases are similar in the Army to the conditions in civil life. In civil life difficult and important cases occurring in the country and in towns and small cities are sent to medical centers where there are large hospitals fully equipped and with specially trained medical men in attendance.

The number of patients treated at the general hospital in Washington can be taken in part as an index of its usefulness.

In all, 4,945 cases have been treated since the establishment of the hospital. Of these, 1,051 were surgical and 3,894 were medical.

The value of the hospital to the Government from a pecuniary point of view can be estimated by the amount saved in pensions and in retired pay.

A careful estimate has been made of the savings to the Government from surgical operations alone done at the hospital. This shows a yearly saving in pensions which would have been paid enlisted men of $48,803.04 and of yearly retired pay to officers of $75,374.76, a total of $125,302.80, the equivalent of 3 per cent on an investment of $4,173,430. As will be seen, a large number of medical cases have been treated. Many of these were special and difficult cases, which recovered and were restored to duty. No estimate of the saving to the Government from this source could be accurately made, but the amount is large. In commenting upon these savings to the Government, the Surgeon-General has stated in his report for 1903: "The institution has, therefore, already paid for itself many times over from its surgical work alone."

The treatment of officers who would otherwise be on sick leave is also an important function of a general hospital. With no facilities for treatment other than those available at military posts it has been customary in the past to give officers requiring special treatment sick leaves of absence. In such cases the officers are removed from supervision of superior officers and medical officers. Nor are officers on sick leave usually financially able to pay the large fees charged by capable specialists. In consequence the treatment adopted is not always to the benefit of the officer, and the service suffers through long delay in restoring the officer to duty or by producing conditions which may lead to permanent disability. The interests of the service and of sick officers are better subserved if instead of sick leave a fully equipped hospital is available to which officers may be ordered and there treated by competent medical men, who are fully alive to safeguarding the interests both of the officer and the United States.

The objection may be advanced that to bring officers or enlisted men from distant posts to Washington for such special treatment will involve an increased expenditure for mileage. To this it will be replied that this cost is insignificant when compared with the saving of a trained officer or man to the service who would otherwise either die or have to be supported for the rest of his life on the retired list or as a pensioner. The expense of transportation could be more than covered even in the less severe cases where the effect of skilled treatment is to cut short a prolonged absence from duty. To abridge by even one month the sickness of an officer whose pay is $250 a month is equivalent to a saving which would pay four times over the mileage from St. Louis to Washington. Patients from the Rocky Mountain region and the Pacific coast are not sent East for treatment, but go to the general hospital at San Francisco—a large permanent establishment with a bed capacity for 400 patients and facilities for special work.

When the progress of the construction work at Washington Barracks makes necessary the removal of the present hospital buildings and the closure of the hospital, there will be no general hospital for the special treatment of general surgical and medical cases east of San Francisco unless Congress makes this appropriation.

The observation of officers presumably incapacitated for service is an important function of a general hospital. The conditions of the military service are such that officers frequently have but desultory medical attendance. Their medical history is, therefore, imperfect, and their real physical condition when claim of permanent disability is made is often a matter of conjecture. It is important that if disability is not permanent that this fact be ascertained and the officer saved to the Government. Equally, to safeguarding the interests both of the Government and the officer, it is necessary when disability exists that an accurate opinion be arrived at, both as to the nature of the disability and its cause. Observation at a hospital equipped with diagnostic apparatus and with trained medical men in attendance is frequently the only way in which these questions can be authoritatively settled. The general hospital at Washington has frequently been put to this use to the fullest satisfaction of all, and its value to the Government in this way will be constant in the future.

(b) FOR THE TRAINING OF ENLISTED MEN OF THE HOSPITAL CORPS.

Men enlisted into the Hospital Corps come from all vocations in civil life, and most of them are entirely unfamiliar with nursing, Hospital Corps methods, and military duties. For the best care of the sick of the Army it is essential that these men be trained for the duties which they have to perform. It is a recognized fact that training for nurses must be practical so far as possible, and in civil life all training schools for nurses are connected with hospitals. The same necessity obtains in the military service, and it is manifestly for the welfare of the sick of the Army that men whose duties pertain almost entirely to the care of the sick should be trained for this purpose as soon after their entrance into the service as possible and before they assume the responsibilities incident to the care of the sick.

A company of instruction, Hospital Corps, consisting of about 150 men, is now attached to the general hospital at Washington. In this company a systematic course of instruction in nursing, first aid, and hospital-corps drill is given by means of recitations, lectures, drills, and practical work in the wards of the general hospital. Recruits are received into the company, given instruction, and as soon as the instruction is completed they are sent to duty at various military hospitals in the United States and the insular possessions. There is such evident need of this company of instruction and its connection with the general hospital, where the men may be practically trained, that it would be a great detriment to the service if there was no general hospital to which the company could be attached.

From the various number of cases received at a general hospital the practical teaching of enlisted men the duties of nursing can be excellently carried out, and this has been the case at the general hospital at Washington. Since the establishment of this hospital over 2,000 enlisted men have passed through this company.

The company of instruction is quartered at present in wooden pavilions erected for temporary use during the war with Spain. These buildings are cheap wooden structures, are now in very bad repair, and at best will last but a short time. The original cost of these buildings, of which there are two, was about $3,000 each, but they have now been in use for about five years and are in such bad repair that they will last but a short time longer. They represent to the Government practically no value whatever. Also, they now occupy ground upon which the officers' quarters of the new post are to be erected, and their removal in the near future will be necessary. In connection with the proposed new hospital a suitable barrack for the company of instruction should be erected.

(c) USE OF THE GENERAL HOSPITAL IN CONNECTION WITH THE ARMY MEDICAL SCHOOL.

The Army Medical School was established in 1893, and yearly sessions have been held at the school with the exception of an interval during the war with Spain. This school is one of the military service schools authorized by the Secretary of War and placed under the general supervision of the War College by General Orders 155, November 27, 1901. In this school medical men recently appointed to the Medical Department from civil life are trained in the duties of medical officers; the school is carried on in the Army Medical Museum on the corner of Seventh and B streets SW. It is essential to the success of training in this school that officers be instructed in hospital administration as applied to military hospitals, military surgery, hospital corps drill, establishment of field hospitals, and like subjects which pertain particularly to military medical methods. These subjects can only be taught practically by having a general hospital and a company of instruction near the school. Efficient training at the Army Medical School therefore requires that a general hospital with a company of instruction attached be located at some place not far distant from the school.

As the curriculum of the school is now arranged, student officers attend surgical clinics at the general hospital, where they are instructed in military surgery and in the use of instruments and appliances furnished for the use of medical officers. The use of the hospital for clinical instruction in connection with the Army Medical School, as stated by the Surgeon-General in his report for 1903, page 126, "has a value as an essential part of the instruction of young medical officers and enlisted men of the Hospital Corps which can not be estimated." In this connection the Surgeon-General in his report for 1903, page 18, states, "The distinctive features of the course of instruction at the school are, first, the large measure of personal attention paid to the student's individual work by instructors in the laboratories and surgical demonstrators, which, it is believed, is not exceeded, if equaled, in any post-graduate school."

Medical officers on duty at the general hospital and with the company of instruction also act as professors and instructors in the Army Medical School, so making an economical use of the officers stationed at the hospital.

(d) USE OF THE HOSPITAL BY EXPANSION FOR A BASE HOSPITAL IN TIME OF WAR.

In all previous wars in which the United States has engaged troops in considerable number have been assembled in Washington and its vicinity. The number of sick from the troops assembled in and near Washington and sick from other commands who while being shipped to different parts of the United States in passing through Washington are retained in this city has in the past always necessitated the establishment of a large general hospital here.

The establishment de novo of large general hospitals is always accompanied with considerable delay, expense, some confusion, and unavoidable discomfort to the sick. With the nucleus of a general hospital already established and in running order, the expansion of the hospital to any desired size can be done practically without delay and at a minimum expense—the nucleus being provided with all necessary apparatus, both medical and surgical, with operating rooms, and with the administration in working order, nothing is required but the addition of temporary wards to care for the sick in the very best manner.

The establishment of a general hospital in the District of Columbia, not only for the use of the Army in time of peace but for its expansion in time of war, is one which immediately appeals to the military expert, as thereby a contingency is prepared for in advance, fully in accord with the time-honored maxim "In time of peace prepare for war." When, therefore, such an establishment meets so many requirements, namely, special advantages for the care of the sick in time of peace, the training of hospital-corps men for their duties in nursing, the training of medical officers fresh from civil life in administrative and other duties which pertain particularly to the military service, and expansion in time of war, the need of such an institution would seem to be evident.

(e) TO PROVIDE ADEQUATE ACCOMMODATIONS ON A GOOD SITE.

Condition of the present hospital.—The hospital now used is entirely inadequate in size and in accommodations and is imperfect in construction. It was built years ago for a post hospital for the use of the post of Washington Barracks, and has few of the accommodations which a general hospital should have. The total cost of the building was less than $25,000, and having been used for over ten years, is worn, and being largely built of timber, has shrunk and settled until it is no longer possible to maintain it in the perfect sanitary condition absolutely necessary where aseptic surgical operations are to be performed. It has a total bed capacity of sixty. Usually all available space is occupied by patients, leaving no room for the nurses to sleep in the building. There are no private rooms for special cases nor for officers. Although the hospital is largely used for surgical cases, there are no rooms for anesthesia nor for recovery. The upper story has a low ceiling under a mansard roof and is almost unendurably hot in summer.

In view of the important medical and surgical work done at this hospital, a new building, modern in every respect, is required.

To provide a proper site for the hospital it should be erected on high, well-drained ground.

The continuance of the hospital on its present site, even if it were possible, is in no way desirable. At Washington Barracks, where the hospital is now situated, the ground is low, the air circulation poor, the heat excessive in summer, and the location very malarious.

The work of construction at Washington Barracks, now well under way, will render the removal of the general hospital imperative in the near future. Plans for the War College and the Engineer School contemplate a new building on the present site of the hospital. It has been proposed to move the present building and use it as a post hospital during the construction work, and for this purpose it is neither too large nor too good.

LOCATION OF THE HOSPITAL.

For many reasons the hospital should be located in the District of Columbia. Some of these, such as the necessity for such a hospital here in time of war, have already been discussed. Other reasons are as follows:

Its use with the Army Medical School depends upon this school being in the city of Washington, and when used with this school it subserves purposes both of practical teaching and economy of officers. In this city is the Army Medical Museum and the Library of the Surgeon-General's Office, both of which are of indispensable value in teaching military medicine and surgery.

The museum and library building is the home of the school. In it the lectures, demonstrations, and laboratory work are given. At the hospital practical work in hospital administration, clinical demonstrations, hospital corps drill, erection of field hospitals, etc., are carried out. It is necessary, therefore, that the hospital be within reasonable distance from the school. All the professors and instructors in the school are stationed in Washington or in its immediate vicinity and the student-officers have to live in the city.

The professors and instructors, in addition to their work in the school, all have other and important duties, thus making a most economical combination of work. All these conditions make it absolutely necessary to have the Army Medical School in this city, and where the school is the hospital should be.

The value of combining an army medical school and hospital has been fully recognized, and has been adopted by all the great nations of the world. The army medical schools and hospitals of Germany, France, England, and Russia are well known and their value unquestioned.

By having the school and hospital in the District, both are immediately under the eye of the Surgeon-General, so allowing personal and careful supervision with consequent increase in efficiency. Also, with the school and hospital near each other proper co-relation of instruction, both theoretical and practical, can be made.

To provide a hospital for officers and men stationed in the District of Columbia.—The general hospital is the only military hospital in the District for this purpose. The hospital at Fort Myer is too distant and is only sufficiently large for the requirements of that post.

By providing hospital facilities for officers and men stationed here, not only are their requirements adequately met, but clinical material for use in connection with the Army Medical School is increased.

Administrated work is facilitated by having a general hospital with its company of instruction in the District.

Reports and orders can be transmitted from the War Department direct to the hospital, so obviating delay in official communications relative to officers and men under treatment and enabling the central authorities to keep directly in touch with patients held for treatment or observation. Orders relative to the detailing of enlisted men who have been instructed in the company to duty elsewhere can be quickly transmitted and carried out. This facility of communication is valuable in peace, but especially valuable in time of war when questions relating to large numbers of officers and men have to be quickly determined.

The requirements relative to a site can be admirably met in the District, the only possible objection being the somewhat high price of land. The site should be ample in size, well drained, with accessible water, sewer, and gas mains, and should be on a well-paved road not far distant from street-car line.

The size of the site is important, and a careful estimation of all requirements determines the minimum at 45 acres, while 50 acres would be better. Provision must be made to allow full air space about the hospital and ample ground for extension in time of war by means of pavilion wards or tents. Provision must also be made for ample parade ground for hospital-corps drill, and the pitching of tent field hospitals for the instruction of student officers.

The disposal of sewage necessitates that a main sewer be near; otherwise the local disposal of sewage would add greatly to the expense.

Proximity to street-car lines is necessary to facilitate communication with the hospital both in time of peace and war and to enable professors and student officers to get from the school to the hospital.

Another important factor in making it desirable to have the hospital in the District is that local laws are satisfactory and can be enforced to maintain the surroundings of the hospital in right condition.

Suitable land can be secured in the District at not to exceed $4,000 per acre, and it is possible that land for a site can be secured at a somewhat less figure, but preliminary inquiry indicates that a wholly desirable site can hardly be purchased for less. In view of the value of the proposed institution and its continued use in the future it would be false economy to purchase a site other than one which would meet all requirements.

Against all factors showing the need of a general hospital in the District adequate to the requirements of the service, both educational and for the care of the sick in time of peace and war, there is to be considered but one item, the cost of establishing the hospital. From a financial point of view this objection is met by the saving to the Government from the work at the institution when it is shown that the single item of surgical work already done returns to the United States a sum equal to 3 per cent interest on an investment of over $4,000,000. The value of the institution in training young medical officers and enlisted men of the Hospital Corps can not be estimated.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the Chair is in doubt, I would like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I desire simply to state that under a construction of the statute which I sent to the Chair a while ago, if it were a work in progress it would still be subject to the point of order. If it is a work in progress they could not use more than $20,000 for the construction of the building there, but it is not a work in progress. It is a proposition to build at a separate place on a new site to be acquired a new building to cost $400,000, and if it were a regular army post, under the statute that no building shall cost over $20,000, you can not construct without special authority, and you can not give special authority on an appropriation bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, in answer to that I will say that every year for the last twenty-five years special authority has been given on appropriation bills for this character of building—for instance, at West Point, and you do it every year. It has been done repeatedly whenever we have had any buildings of this character to appropriate for.

Mr. HAY. It was done on the Army College buildings last year.

Mr. HULL. It has been repeatedly done on appropriation bills; it was done on the Military Academy bill. Why, Mr. Chairman, that contention would make it impossible for the Committee on Military Affairs to build up the Military Academy, as we have done.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman does not contend that on the army appropriation bill he could provide for a public building at any post?

Mr. HULL. Not at one of these posts; but we have done it for the Engineer School for years. When it was at Willetts Point we appropriated whatever they asked for on the army bill. We gave them $45,000 once or twice. An appropriation for the War College was appropriated last year and passed at $100,000. The gentleman at the head of the Committee on Appropriations, one of the greatest leaders the House has ever had, a man that scrutinized every bill most carefully, who has so commended himself to the membership of the House that they elected him Speaker, would not raise a point of order against it, because I assume that he did not believe that the point of order would lie. Nobody ever accused him of holding back when he believed that a point of order would lie.

The CHAIRMAN. The question "What constitutes a continuation of a public work or the continuation of an appropriation for a public work" is one which has given rise to many decisions, some of them conflicting. It was decided in the Forty-ninth Congress, as the gentleman from Iowa stated the other day, that the construction of a new vessel for the Navy was a continuation of a public work already in progress. That was probably the extreme limit of the decisions in that direction. It was subsequently held that the construction of a new vessel for the Coast Survey was not the continuation of a public work. That was decided in the Fifty-sixth Congress. It has been repeatedly held—several times in the Fifty-sixth Congress—that the establishment of a light-house, even the building of a new vessel for a light-house tender, was not a continuation of a public work. It was held that the construction of a new dry dock for the Navy was not a continuation of a public work; that the location for a site for a naval magazine was not the continuation of a public work.

Upon this point—the purchase of sites—the weight of authority appears to be to the effect that where the appropriation is for land adjoining an existing site and for the purpose of additional buildings it will be treated as a continuation of a public work, but where the appropriation is for a new site it will not be so treated. In the Fifty-sixth Congress, on the sundry civil appropriation bill, an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to acquire, by condemnation, 140 acres of land adjoining the present building site of the Government Hospital for the Insane. The gentleman from Missouri, Mr. DE ARMOND, offered an amendment to the effect that if that could not be obtained at a specified price a new site should be purchased. Against that amendment the gentleman from Illinois, the present Speaker, made the point of order which is urged here, and so good a parliamentarian as the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. DALZELL, then in the chair, sustained it.

Now, in addition to that, section 1136 of the Revised Statutes limits the appropriation which may be made for a structure not authorized by previous special authority of Congress to $20,000. The paragraph here involved provides for an entirely new hospital upon an entirely new site and appropriates $400,000. It seems to the Chair, therefore, that the point of order is well taken and must be sustained.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 25.

Mr. HULL. For what purpose?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I had intended to offer an amendment to the provision relating to the military post exchange, but since that amendment would be subject to a point of order, I do not intend to detain the House with any remarks. I do, however, ask unanimous consent to print, in connection with my remarks, a report on this subject made by the American Public Health Association.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The report, Mr. Chairman, to which I have just referred was unanimously adopted by the American Public Health Association at their recent convention at Washington, D. C. It was prepared by a committee of expert physicians who had given much study to the question of the army canteen, and their conclusions are most interesting reading to all who have the physical and mental well-being of the American soldier at heart. The report reads as follows.

THE CANTEEN.

To the American Public Health Association:

At a meeting of the American Public Health Association held in Buffalo September 16 to 20, 1901, the following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That this body deplores the action of Congress in curtailing the operation of the army canteen or post exchange, and in the interests of general and military sanitation recommends its establishment on its former basis at the earliest possible date."

Another resolution was adopted, as follows:

"The executive committee recommends the appointment of a special committee to prepare and publish at an early date a pamphlet for public circulation, containing the resolution of the Public Health Association in favor of the army canteen, together with a concise statement of the data upon which this action was based and the definite references to the original sources from which such information is obtainable; such pamphlet to be issued in the name of the association, and to be so prepared as to withstand keen and intelligent examination.

"This recommendation is made in view of the fact (1) that an important function of this association is to educate the public in matters of hygiene; (2) that the action above referred to is in disagreement with the ideas of a very large number of good citizens; (3) that this is a possible opportunity of securing their understanding of our action, and, it is to be hoped, their intelligent cooperation in taking successive steps toward the betterment of existing conditions."

Introduction.—In order to appreciate the object of these resolutions it should be stated that the so-called canteen system was introduced as a temperance measure at Vancouver Barracks in 1880, but was not officially recognized until February 1, 1889, as shown by the following extracts from General Orders, No. 10, Headquarters of the Army, Adjutant-General's Office:

"1. Canteens may be established at military posts where there are no post traders for supplying the troops at moderate prices with such articles as may be deemed necessary for their use, entertainment, and comfort; also for affording them the requisite facilities for gymnastic exercises, billiards, and other proper games. The commanding officer may set apart for the purpose of the canteen any suitable rooms that can be spared—such rooms, whenever practicable, to be in the same building with the library or reading rooms.

"2. The sale or use of ardent spirits in canteens is strictly prohibited, but the commanding officer is authorized to permit wines and light beer to be sold therein by the drink, on week days, and in a room used for no other purpose, whenever he is satisfied that the giving to the men the opportunity of obtaining such beverages within the post limits has the effect of preventing them from resorting for strong intoxicants to places without such limits and tends to promote temperance and discipline among them. The practice of what is known as 'treating' should be discouraged under all circumstances.

"3. Gambling or playing any game for money or other thing of value is forbidden."

Subsequent order, dated May 13, 1890, provides that:

"The practice of what is known as 'treating' must not be permitted."

After the abolition of post-traders these canteens became also the cooperative store, and supplied the officers and men with the necessaries and luxuries which the Government does not provide, such as "delicatessen," cigars, tobacco, and general merchandise, articles of clothing, stationery, etc., and as such exercised also a very important economic function.

The establishment of the canteen system, in the light of the evidence which will be presented hereafter, proved to be a most efficient prophylactic measure for the diminution of vice and drunkenness among troops, and its abolition by an act of Congress, approved February 2, 1901, on purely sentimental grounds must be deeply deplored by all interested in the prevention of physical and moral diseases. Since the question of intemperance is intimately connected with the health, morals, discipline, and general efficiency of the Army, it is necessary to consider the subject in all its bearings, and for the purpose of approaching the question from the practical rather than the sentimental standpoint we will present a summary of the evidence:

Personnel of the Army.—The recruits for the Army are enlisted generally from among men of ordinary walks in life, and reflect, therefore, the qualities of the latter, whether they be good or bad. It is not true that the soldier is peculiarly dissipated above all others and requires special legislative measures to safeguard him against his weakness, for, as justly remarked by Dr. Munson in his Theory and Practice of Military Hygiene, page 820:

"He brings with him into the service the result of the moral moulding to which he has been subjected during his childhood and youth in civil life, and does not change his nature or moral standards with the mere donning of the uniform."

One of the members of your committee served in the Army both as an enlisted man and contract surgeon from 1867 to 1889, another member served as an officer of artillery, and we have therefore personal experiences and observation as to the character and habits of the enlisted men, the question of intemperance, its predisposing causes and effects upon the health and morals of the troops. We are disposed to divide the rank and file of the Army into four classes. The first class includes a number of young men who have resisted the temptations of the saloons in civil life, and will continue to resist the temptations after they enter the Army.

The second class comprises many men, especially of German descent, accustomed all their lives to drinking beer instead of alkaloidal beverages, such as coffee and tea, who crave for companionship and the genteel amusements of a club and gymnastic hall; they regard beer as an article of food and a gentle stimulant, and life without these environments creates discontent and never reconciles them to their absence from home. The third class is made up of intelligent mechanics and clerks, who by reason of periodic attacks of intemperance have lost their positions in civil life, but who, possessing sufficient self-respect and manhood, have entered the ranks for the purpose of securing the benefits of army discipline. The fourth class consists of men without aim or purpose in life, and without internal resources for legitimate amusements; they are fond of morbid excitement and the alluring influences of the saloon, and appear to find it difficult to check their cravings for liquor, in spite of the restraining effects of army discipline; indeed, quite a number of these men are true degenerates, not infrequently drawn from the higher walks of life (gentlemen—rankers).

Prevalence of alcoholism in the Army.—It is difficult to give an exact estimate of the extent of the drink habit, except by the amount of beer actually sold in the canteens and the prevalence of alcoholism as shown by the army medical statistics. Statistics prepared by the Adjutant-General of the Army show that during the year 1898, the first year of the Spanish-American war, with its hardships, excitement, and general employment of the Army, the average amount spent for beer by each man in an army of 231,068 officers and men was $2.41 per year, or 48¼ glasses at 5 cents each, or 20 cents per month, equal to 4 glasses per month for each man. The consumption in 1899 in an army of 90,160 officers and men was $6.99, or 139¾ glasses per year, or 56 cents, or 11⅔ glasses per month for each officer and man. This is a very favorable showing when it is considered that the average consumption of liquor in the United States amounts to 17.68 gallons per capita.

The following table, taken from Munson's Hygiene, page 809, based upon official records of the Surgeon-General's Office, shows the prevalence of alcoholism in the military forces of the Army during the twenty-eight years of peace, 1870-1897, inclusive:

Year.	Mean strength.	Number of cases admitted to hospital per 1,000 strength.	Number of cases of delirium tremens per 1,000 strength.

The committee has extended this investigation so as to include the five years ending December 31, 1902, and find, as first pointed out by Munson, that "during the war with Spain in 1898 the admission rate fell to 15.1; the more active operations and novelty supplying much of the desired excitement, while the unusual conditions undoubtedly attracted a superior class of young men to the colors." The same was true in 1899, when the rate for alcoholism in the bulk of our Army engaged in hostilities and hard field service in the Philippines was only about half as high as among those serving in Cuba and an eighth as high as among those in garrison in Porto Rico.

The rates for the United States for the year 1900 were 22.43; for 1901, 26.25; for 1902, 24.02. In Cuba and Porto Rico the rates were, for 1900, 32.01; 1901, 34.42; 1902, 48.26. In the Philippine Islands the rates were 12.16 in 1900; 21.07 in 1901; and 21.10 in 1902.

From this table we learn that the rates for alcoholism in our service have steadily decreased. Since there is reason for believing that the per capita consumption of liquor in the United States has steadily increased, the decrease in the army rates for alcoholism is especially gratifying and can only be explained by greater care exercised in the selection of recruits and in the character and preparation of food, a more rapid elimination of inebriates from the Army, and last, but not least, the beneficial effects from the establishment of canteens.

It will be observed that the decrease is especially marked since the establishment of canteens in 1889, while the slight changes in 1901 and 1902 are not sufficiently marked to base conclusions thereon; nevertheless they indicate, in connection with other evidence, an increase in alcoholism since the abolition of the canteen.

It is interesting to note that the statistics collected by Doctor Munson show that there is approximately only a tenth as much sickness from the use of alcohol among the negro as the white troops. He says, "Few colored soldiers are hard drinkers; and so far as beer and other malt liquors are concerned, there apparently exists a radical distaste for these beverages on the part of the negro." Doctor Munson also adduces statistics which indicate that nationality is a factor of much importance in determining the relative amount of alcoholism. Thus, for seven-year periods, 1890-1896, the rates of admission in our Army per 1,000 of each class were as follows:

German	26.62
American born	28.51
English	51.84
Irish	90.96

These statistics appear to have also an important bearing on the influence of so-called "national beverages" on the drink habit, and their effects upon the system. The German and American-born soldiers generally prefer beer, while the English and Irish are accustomed to stronger drinks, like ale and ardent spirits.

The canteen as a prophylactic measure.—In order to appreciate the beneficent effects of the canteen system, not only in the reduction of the drink habit but also as a powerful moral factor in the life of the soldier, it should be remembered that prior to the inauguration of the canteen or post exchange the so-called sutler's or post-trader's store was allowed by Army Regulations.

The proprietor was a civilian, appointed by the Secretary of War, and at a subsequent period these appointments were made upon the recommendation of the members of the post council. These stores furnished merchandise and luxuries not supplied by the commissary department, and were also an accommodation to the pioneer settlers. Among the most profitable articles of sale were whiskies, brandies, wines, cigars, and bottled beer. These were sold usually across the counter and very few of the sutler stores provided the facilities of club life, such as billiards, reading rooms, or games, and if so, the charges were exorbitant and gambling for money was not infrequent. Most generally they presented all the characteristics of the American bar, drinks being consumed in rapid succession, aided by the pernicious system of "treating."

It is quite true these establishments were subject to military orders, and the sales of liquor could be controlled easily, but whenever and wherever the attempt was made on the part of the commanding officer to regulate the character and amount of drinks to be sold, it was promptly frustrated by the establishment of little shacks or shanties for the sale of vile whisky outside of the post reservation. These were gradually enlarged by the addition of rooms for gambling and the introduction of lewd women of the lowest class, and as a result, in addition to the excesses of alcoholic stimulants, the effects of an immoral life and its far-reaching consequences were stamped upon those unable to resist the temptations, and as a result trials for drunkenness, absence without leave, admissions for alcoholism and venereal diseases increased with startling rapidity.

One of the members of your committee can recall that on more than one occasion, in order to avert complete demoralization of the men, the commanding officer felt constrained to rescind his orders prohibiting the sale of alcoholics, for he realized that the post trader could be compelled to sell a pure article of whisky, and thus diminish the baneful effects of alcoholic stimulants to a minimum.

At posts situated within the heart of an Indian country, and where it was impracticable to establish grogshops within a reasonable distance from the post, whisky was brought into the garrison through the mails in various disguises, or in express packages, and peddled in 2-ounce vials by the soldiers themselves. Others resorted to the purchase of essence of ginger, lemon, vanilla, bay rum, alcohol, and patent or proprietary remedies containing alcohol in various percentages.

Hence even the most favorable environment failed to prohibit. It was not until the establishment of the canteen system that better conditions were offered for the promotion of temperance among our soldiers. It was the creation of the soldiers' club which reduced drinking to a minimum and promoted not only temperance and contentment, but also lessened sickness, immorality, and crime.

Trials by court-martial for drunkenness, etc.—The statistics already presented show conclusively that coincident with the general establishment of the canteen system throughout the Army there occurred a decrease amounting to considerably more than half the drunkenness which formerly tended to the impairment of discipline, the demoralization of individuals, and to the occurrence of assaults, injuries, and deaths.

The following statistics, prepared by Dr. Munson and extended by the committee, show a gradual improvement in the tone and morale of the Army, as evidenced by the number of courts-martial. This improvement is especially marked since the establishment of the canteen.

The average of trials and convictions for drunkenness and conditions arising therefrom for from 1886 to 1891 was 372.5 against an average of 160.6 for the six years after the establishment of the canteen. (Table Munson's Hygiene, p. 819.)

The statistics from 1898 to 1902 should be excluded, as they cover the period of the Spanish-American war, when a large number of volunteers were enrolled. In this connection attention is directed to the "Reports of commanding officers" on file in the War Department and published in House of Representatives Document No. 232, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session. Brig. Gen. Frederick Funston, United States Army, commanding general Department of the Colorado, reports (p. 22) the number of trials by general courts-martial for 1902 to have been 194, and as compared with the preceding year the percentage of average enlisted strength to nearly have doubled. He also gives the per cent of average enlisted strength deserting in his department as follows:

1899–1900	3.20
1900–1901	7.50
1901–1902	11

And writes as follows:

"It is therefore plain that there has been a deplorable increase of offenses in general and of desertion in particular. In my opinion there are two principal causes for this state of affairs: 1. Resentment to unaccustomed limitations and restrictions felt by men returning from field service to the monotony and routine work of garrison life. 2. The abolition of the canteen feature of the post exchange. Since this action was taken saloons of the lowest type have been established just outside the boundaries of the various reservations; their proprietors are, in almost every case, unprincipled scoundrels, who leave nothing undone to debauch the soldiers and obtain their money.

"Being, in all cases, outside the limits of any city, the proprietors of these resorts are subject to no municipal police regulations and sell liquor regardless of hours and whether the buyer is already intoxicated or not. Gambling is universal in these "dives," and they are frequented by dissolute women. The soldier whose desire for a drink would ordinarily be satisfied by a few glasses of beer in the canteen of the post exchange goes to one of these resorts and does well if he escapes before he has spent or gambled away all his money, overstayed his leave, or engaged in an altercation. As a rule, the local authorities regard the existence of these places with indifference or approval, as it causes the soldier to spend his money in the community.

"The efficiency of the Army or the ruin of a good soldier is nothing to them. There can be no reasonable doubt that most of the trials by general courts-martial and summary courts, at least so far as this department is concerned, are directly traceable to this cause. Since I have had command here there has taken place the ruin and degradation of several noncommissioned officers of long service and fine record. In short, the recent legislation of Congress on this question, so far as this department is concerned, has had no effect except to lower the discipline of the Army, ruin scores of good soldiers, and fill the pockets of a lot of saloon keepers, gamblers, and prostitutes."

Desertions.—The following table, compiled from the records of the War Department, shows what the establishment of the canteen has accomplished in the promotion of virtue and loyalty to the flag. This table demonstrates that for the ten years previous to the establishment of the canteen the number of men annually deserting from the service amounted to 125 per 1,000 strength, while for the ten subsequent years the annual number of desertions was reduced to 43.2 per 1,000 strength.

It is to be deplored that this favorable record, which continued for ten years after the canteen system was thoroughly established, should be broken by a rate of 73 per 1,000 the year following the abandonment of this system. These figures are extremely suggestive, because the best index of the contentment and virtue of the troops is to be found in the rate of desertions and trials by courts-martial.

Savings deposits.—Doctor Munson, on page 819 of his Military Hygiene, also refers to the increased savings deposits with army paymasters as one of the beneficent effects of the canteen system in the promotion of order and contentment. At all events, the figures reported by the Paymaster-General in his report for 1899 show that the average number of men annually making such deposits for the seven years, 1885–1891, was 7,273, while for the six years 1892–1896 the annual average so deposited was 8,382, an increase of 13.3 per cent. This indicates not only increased contentment, but a decided improved moral tone, and means that over 1,100 additional depositors were created, thus practically giving bonds to the Government for good behavior.

Venereal diseases.—Another remarkable victory achieved by the canteen system over vice and disease is shown by the decrease in the prevalence of venereal diseases in the United States Army. This reduction was gradual and constant until the abolition of the canteen system, when again a most marked and lamentable increase is noted, the admission rate for syphilis, chancroid, and gonorrhea in 1902 having almost doubled when compared with the rate for the decade 1890–1899.

The predictions of the honorable Secretary of War, Mr. Elihu Root, and Right Rev. Archbishop Ireland have, alas, been fulfilled. Mr. Root, in his testimony before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, December 14, 1900, said:

"In the vile resorts which cluster against the borders of every army post there is not only the liquor seller, with his bad whisky, but there is the prostitute. The man who goes to the gin mill for his recreation falls into the hands of that woman, and he comes back not merely to the guardhouse for drunkenness or for overstaying his time, but to go into the hospital with venereal disease. These misguided people are doing satan's work in endeavoring to take these fellows out from under the restraint and under the influences that surround them when they are in camp and drive them out into the horrible and demoralizing and damning surroundings that cluster around the outside of the camps."

Before the same committee Archbishop Ireland declared:

"One thing is overlooked by many people who discuss the canteen question. It is this matter of prostitution, which is, of course, fatal to the soldier, soul and body. They only look at the mere drinking, but when a soldier goes outside to drink, outside the fort or reservation, he is generally tempted to go farther. That is the danger. * * * You will find soldiers arrested in houses of prostitution; they are arrested, and we ask: 'How did you get there?' The explanation is that they went outside and got drunk in some of these vile saloons, and they were induced to go to these houses from the saloons. The agents of these houses are there, and they are there particularly for the purpose of inveigling the soldiers into these houses. The houses that I refer to are on the borders of the fort, and are houses of prostitution—all of them."

Insanity.—For the sake of completeness, we submit a table showing the rate of mental diseases in our Army for the period from 1880 to 1902, inclusive.

It will be observed that there was a decided tendency to diminution of insanity from 1884 to the beginning of the Spanish-American war, probably the result of better provision for the intellectual needs and recreation of the soldier, and of which the canteen system may have been a factor. It would be unfair, however, to attribute the increase in recent years to the absence of canteens, since service in tropical islands, the lack of knowledge of the native languages, enforced confinement to garrisoned towns, and the constant strain incident to continued preparation against attack by the enemy, all combine to act as predisposing causes to different forms of mental disorders, which are by no means limited to the drinking classes.

Present aspect of the question and the effect of the sale of beer and light wines at military posts in the United States.—The provisions of this act approved February 2, 1901, prohibiting the sale of or dealing in beer, wine, or any intoxicating liquors in post exchanges was promulgated in General Orders, No. 5, dated February 2, 1901, so that now over two years have elapsed during which the effects of this law upon the health and morale of the Army can be studied. In transmitting a copy of this order the Secretary of War enjoined upon all department commanders a prompt and effective compliance with the terms of the act, and requested that he might be informed of the effect of this law on the morality, health, and dicipline of the troops, commanding officers be instructed along the following lines, report thereon to be made to the Adjutant-General not later than September 1, 1901:

"1. To prepare at once a list of the liquor saloons within 1 mile of their reservation limits; to observe and record any additional saloons subsequently established within such limits.

"2. Special mention to be made of saloons temporarily opened in the vicinity of posts or camps where the new regiments are to rendezvous or regiments returning from the Philippine Islands are to be mustered out.

"3. To observe whether drunkenness among the enlisted men of their commands increases or decreases as a consequence of the abolishment of the canteen; whether the percentage of trials by summary or other courts for drunkenness for the coming six months is greater or less than for the past six months.

"4. To make similar observations as to desertion and absences without leave.

"5. To observe generally the effect of the abolition of the sale of beer at the post or camp on the morality and discipline of the command.

"6. To make similar observation as to its effect upon the health of the command.

"7. To report the effect of the law upon the table fare of the soldier in garrison and in the field, and to recommend measures for any improvements therein that may be considered necessary."

Replies have been received at the War Department which indicate the following conditions:

1. Increase of liquor saloons within 1 mile of military posts since the passage of the act.—The reports under this head show that on or about February 2, 1901, the date of the passage of the act abolishing the sale of beer, there were within 1 mile of the military posts 1,555 saloons, at which intoxicating liquors of all kinds were dispensed, and at the date of the last report there were 2,267 such saloons; that is to say, that 98 post canteens, at which beer and light wines alone were sold, had been closed and their places taken by 341 saloons in the United States and 371 saloons in the Philippine Islands, dispensing all kinds of intoxicants, in very many cases with gambling rooms attached, and in at least three instances houses of ill fame. Many of the additional saloons have been opened by discharged soldiers.

2. Increase of drunkenness.—To the inquiry to report whether drunkenness among the enlisted men of their commands has increased as a consequence of the abolition of the canteen, ninety-eight post commanders replied, of which number eighty-one reported that drunkenness had increased, ten that it had decreased, and in seven cases the commanding officers had no means of comparison, owing to changes of garrison or absence of data relating to prior garrisons, new posts established since February 2, 1901, and the failure to report on the specific question, or inability to reach a positive determination from the language of the report. (See table showing increase in alcoholism in the Army.)

3. Increase of trials by summary or other courts for drunkenness and for offenses caused by drunkenness.—To this inquiry ninety-eight post commanders responded, of which number sixty-eight responded that such trials had been more numerous since the passage of the bill, three that they had been less, and in twenty-one instances the effects were in doubt, for reasons given under paragraph 2.

4. Increase of desertions.—To the inquiry whether desertion had increased or lessened, ninety-eight post commanders replied, of which number fifty-four reported that desertion had increased, eight that it had decreased, and in thirty-six reports the result was in doubt for reasons stated under paragraph 2. (For statistics see table showing percentage of desertions in the United States Army.)

5. Increase in absence without leave.—To a similar inquiry as to absence without leave, 98 post commanders replied, of which number 74 reported that absences without leave had increased, 6 that they had decreased, and in 18 the effect was doubtful for reasons stated in paragraph 2. A number of post commanders reported that absences without leave had doubled, and in some cases that they had increased from 250 per cent to 300 per cent.

6. Effects of the abolition of the sale of beer at the posts on the morality and discipline of the command.—To this inquiry 98 post commanders replied; 1 reported that the effect had been good, 56 that it had been bad, and in 42 instances the commanding officers had no means of comparison owing to changes of garrison or absence of data relating to prior garrisons, etc. See table giving statistics of venereal diseases.

Conclusions.—A careful review of the evidence on file in the various bureaus of the War Department justify the following conclusions:

1. The abolition of the post canteen, more especially the prohibition of the sale of light wines and beer, instead of proving a temperance measure as hoped for by its advocates, has had a detrimental effect on the health and morale of the troops. In the opinion of an overwhelming majority of commanding officers drunkenness has actually increased, and the admission rate for alcoholism has been increased from 22.43 per 1,000 in 1900 to 24.02 in 1902. The 98 post canteens at which light wines and beers alone were sold have been replaced within a mile from military posts by 341 additional saloons in the United States and 371 in the Philippine Islands dispensing all kinds of intoxicants, in many cases with gambling rooms and in some cases with houses of ill fame attached.

2. Since drunkenness and vice are intimately associated, it is natural that the evidence should reveal an alarming increase in the prevalance of venereal diseases in the Army. As a matter of fact, the statistics of the Surgeon-General's office show that the admission rate for these diseases in 1902 is almost twice as high as that for the decade of 1890-1899, and is doubtless the result of the cause pointed out by Secretary Root and Archbishop Ireland. In view of the grave and far-reaching consequences of these diseases, which are a menace to the public health and welfare, and so often transmitted to the innocent and to future generations, this result, apparently associated with the abolition of the canteen, is especially deplorable.

3. It is a matter of evidence that desertions, absences without leave, and trials of summary or other courts-martial for drunkenness and for offenses caused by the same have increased, and that savings deposits by the enlisted men have decreased from an average of $49.49 per man in 1900 to an average of $31.54 per man in 1903. The records of the Paymaster-General's Office also show that fines and forfeitures imposed upon and collected from the enlisted men of the Army have increased from an average of $1.88 per man in 1898 to $6.82 per man in 1903, all of which indicates a growing spirit of discontent and a decided tendency to degeneracy, which must seriously affect the discipline and morale of the Army.

Recommendations.—In view of the foregoing facts and in the interest of scientific temperance, the committee recommends:

1. The presentation to the Senate and the House of Representatives in Congress assembled of the following resolutions, adopted by the American Public Health Association in September, 1901:

"Resolved, That this body deplores the action of Congress in curtailing the operation of the army canteen or post exchange, and in the interest of general and military sanitation recommends its establishment on its former basis at the earliest possible date.

"Resolved, That this body, in the interest of temperance and humanity, cordially invites the intelligent cooperation of a very large element of good citizens who have been active in securing legislation against the sale in the military service of alcoholics of any character, in taking successive steps toward the betterment of existing conditions, and thus assist in controlling and largely curtailing an evil which it is powerless at present to prevent."

2. Your committee is aware of the fact that beverages containing alcohol are an accessory food of value only when it becomes necessary to increase temporarily the elasticity of mind and body and a desire and capacity for work, and that the subsequent depressing effect and the baneful influence of their misuse require great care in their employment, especially when rest proper food, and some of the alkaloidal beverages like coffee, tea, cocoa, and stimulants like meat broths and soups may accomplish the same purpose, and their sale as a substitute should be encouraged.

3. In spite of the fact that "beer drinking viewed in the abstract is unproductive of good," your committee believes that its sale in canteens under rational and comprehensive regulations, rather than its total prohibition, will subserve the best interest of scientific temperance, because so long as human nature is weak and the masses are not properly educated the substitution of a lesser evil under military control appears not only justifiable, but will in the future, as it has in the past, prevent excesses which are fatal to the soldier, soul and body. At present every effort toward total abstinence at military posts merely opposes theory to facts and sentiment to statistics, and compels recourse to saloons of the lowest character, whose proprietors care nothing for the efficiency of the Army or the ruin of a good soldier.

4. Every precaution should be observed to conduct post exchanges and the sale of light wine and beer along the lines recommended by Munson in his Theory and Practice of Military Hygiene, pages 820-822, and your committee begs to emphasize the fact that the bar feature should be entirely abolished and that the exchange should in fact be a "soldiers' club," with ample facilities for reading rooms, legitimate amusements, and athletic sports, where the soldier as a self-respecting individual may satisfy in an orderly manner his craving for diversion from the routine duties of a military life without undue prominence of the refreshment feature.

5. The sale of soft drinks, coffee, tea, cocoa, bouillon, soups, and warm lunches should be encouraged as substitutes for alcoholic beverages, and medical and line officers should be directed to educate by precept and example the rank and file of the Army, that for persons in health alcohol in any form presents no advantages not found in other food stuffs or stimulants, and which are, moreover, free from the dangers attending its use. In this connection it should be remembered that good food, well prepared, and properly cooked and served, is one of the most effective prophylactic measures against the "drink habit" in civil as well as military life, and no effort should be spared to bring the culinary department in the Army to the highest state of perfection.

6. Military officers should point out the grave and far-reaching consequences of the effects of venereal diseases, so intimately connected with the drink habit, and make a strong plea in favor of continence. This may be done by telling these young men that while the sexual passion is strong it can be accelerated or delayed, excited or lowered, by the influence of the will. The soldier can be assured that by the cultivation of pure thoughts, removal of temptation, normal mental, and especially by vigorous physical exercise, continence is not only possible, but easy.

7. A strong effort should be made to improve the social conditions of the soldier. There are times and occasions when the friendly advice of a company commander or attending surgeon, a personal interest in the physical and moral welfare of the young soldier, will prove of greater benefit to the service and to humanity than the cold verdict of a summary court-martial. Such personal efforts on the part of the officers, dictated by the spirit of a universal brotherhood of man, appears to us perfectly compatible with proper military discipline. It is also believed that the habit of making savings deposits with the army paymasters may be greatly stimulated by personal efforts.

In conclusion, the committee desires to express its obligations to the officials of the War Department for the opportunity of making a full and impartial investigation of the records, and especially to Dr. Edward L. Munson, United States Army, the author of Military Hygiene, for invaluable assistance in the preparation of this report.

Respectfully submitted.

APPENDIX.

[Extracts from reports of post commanders.]

Commanding officer, Fort Gaswell, N. C.:

* * * "I do not think the morality or discipline of the command has been much affected by the abolition of the canteen. I notice, though, that fewer men are willing to reenlist for organizations at the post, and I believe some discontent has been caused by this law."

Commanding officer, Fort Snelling, Minn.:

* * * "From my own observation and that of the officers of the garrison, the morality and discipline of the post was superior after the abolishment of the canteen as compared with any period prior to that act. * * * The percentage of sick was much less after the abolishment of the canteen. * * * The records show that the number of desertions for the six months prior to the abolishment of the canteen exceeds that of the six subsequent months. * * * On February 1, 1901, there were two saloons within 1 mile of the reservation. Up to the time of my leaving Fort Snelling, September 1, 1901, no additional saloons had been established. * * *

"I find that the company amusement room, with tobacco, cigars, lunch, and soft drinks on sale, is more satisfactory than a common amusement room, as at a large post a common amusement room of sufficient size to accommodate the whole command when off duty can not well be established; besides, the company amusement room develops and fosters the company unit, which constitutes the most important factor in contentment and discipline. I urge the early establishment by the Quartermaster's Department at every large post of a well-equipped gymnasium in connection with a race track and athletic grounds." * * *

Commanding officer, Fort Logan, Colo.:

"I believe that many company commanders are induced to approve of the canteen feature of the post exchange because they obtain an income from it with which they improve the mess of the men and purchase pool tables, gymnastic outfits, bowling alleys, etc. It must be remembered the soldiers of our present Army are much younger than before the Spanish war. They are men who either do not drink or who want very little, and have not contracted the drink habit. It is the duty of the Government to protect these men and not put temptation before them. It is not sufficient to say to a soldier, 'You shall not drink;' but surround him with wholesome and decent means of diversion and amusement, and he will not want to drink."

[Effects in prohibition States, where the sale is regulated by the State.]

Commanding officer, Fort Fremont, S. C.:

"* * * The number of cases of venereal diseases in the command has increased. The evil effects of the law in question upon the health of the command have been more marked. The places at which liquor is sold are frequented by negro women of loose character, with whom the men are thus more closely associated than was formerly the case. * * * The liquor sold in the vicinity of the post is of the poorest quality, and is, from what I can learn, adulterated very often with the most injurious substances. During the summer just past three members of the command have died under exactly the same conditions, each exhibiting the same symptoms and each dying within six hours after having been first taken ill.

"In each case the man had absented himself for the twenty-four hours preceding his illness and had during that time been drinking heavily of the liquors sold around the post. The diagnosis of the surgeon in each case was 'cerebral congestion due to excessive use of alcoholic stimulants.' It is very difficult in this State to secure the conviction of a man charged with selling liquor illegally, and until recently it has not been practicable to obtain sufficient evidence to justify the prosecution of any of these persons so engaged. Recently, however, enough evidence to secure the conviction of one of the proprietors of these places has been obtained, and he will be prosecuted at the next meeting in this county of the criminal court."

Commanding officer, Sullivans Island, S. C.:

"The stoppage of the sale of beer induces patronage of State dispensaries where liquor is sold by bottle only, and consequently large quantities are drunk at one time."

Commanding officer, Fort Riley, Kans.:

"* * * On February 13, 1901, there were eleven joints and eight drug stores within 1 mile of the reservation limits. On August 21, 1901, six joints and eight drug stores. The drug stores in Junction City sell liquor, spirits, and beer, and the joints are simply barrooms. Kansas is a prohibition State."

Commanding officer, Fort Ethan Allen, Vt.:

"Vermont is a prohibition State. * * * While there are no liquor saloons, there are many drug stores. All sell liquor on prescription. Prescriptions are easily obtained."

Commanding officer, Fort Logan H. Roots, Ark.:

"* * * There are men in the ranks of our Army from many walks of life, and many of the most valuable clerks, mechanics, carpenters, etc., are men of good education and trades, who are in the Army because periodic sprees have lost for them many positions in civil life, and they entered the Army to receive the discipline it affords. Take their daily drinks from them, tell them that they shall not drink, and you make drunkards of them."

Commanding officer, Fort Apache, Ariz.:

* * * "In my opinion the breaking up of the canteen system has been the hardest blow we have received in many years. Before its abolition our men were well satisfied with their condition; they had good food; the receipts from the canteen were applied in various ways for their welfare, comfort, and amusement, and they were rarely drunk and seldom absent. Now at many posts it is the reverse.

"Places known as 'hog ranches' are established near the posts; if not, then men called 'bootleggers' are selling whisky to the men by the bottle (many of the men would not think of patronizing the whisky peddlers if they could occasionally get a glass of beer at the post); after one or two drinks of the vile stuff that is sold them they do not or can not know what they do, remaining away from the post for a day or two. Some, fearing punishment on their return to the post, desert. The idea that full-grown men are going to patronize a canteen where nothing is sold except soft drinks is an illusion."

Commanding officer Twenty-seventh Regiment, New York Volunteers, reports from Presidio, San Francisco, Cal., as follows:

"* * * My camp was located just inside the main gate of the reservation. Across the street and in the immediate vicinity were located many saloons, which were most of the time crowded by soldiers. The saloons were there expressly to catch soldiers and were successful. Drunkenness and disorders were very frequent. From my observation, while serving with the volunteers in the Philippines, I consider the abolishment of the sale of beer in the post canteen a positive calamity to troops serving in that locality. Men will drink stimulants if they wish to, and there is always a supply where there is a demand.

"In the Philippines, drinking men are almost sure to resort to the native drink 'vino' if unable to obtain beer. The poorest whisky ever distilled can not compare with 'vino' in its evil effects upon the men. The latter drink seems to destroy the character of a man mentally, morally, and physically. I believe many deaths and much of the insanity which occurred during my stay in the islands were due either directly or indirectly to the use of 'vino.'"

Commanding officer, Presidio of San Francisco, Cal.:

"* * * Volunteers returning from the Philippines have made raids upon near-by saloons, being incited to such deeds under drunkenness; perhaps sometimes sober impulses, aroused by real or imaginary grievances, such as being drugged, robbed, or otherwise maltreated while in the saloons. There were several such occurrences between January 1 and July 1, 1901, which were so serious that it became necessary for the commanding officer to aid the police in restoring order and to save property from destruction. * * *"

Commanding officer, Mayaguez, P. R.:

"The percentage of sick in this last company has been over 10 per cent the last three months. I believe it is due to rum drinking instead of beer. Every effort has been made to discover the cause of the sickness in this company, and no other cause than that some of the men were financially backing a rum shop near the post has so far been discovered."

Commanding officer, Ponce, P. R.:

"The effect of the abolition of the sale of beer is very bad, both morally and for discipline, because the men will have beer and must go into the city to get it. There they are thrown into contact with immoral women and drink rum and other cheap alcoholic beverages. These drinks cause some men to become crazy and boisterously drunk. Before the abolishment of the canteen most of the beer drinkers drank almost exclusively in the exchange and in moderation."

Post surgeon, Fort Schuyler, N. Y.:

"Where two affections, such as excessive drinking and venereal diseases, are so intimately associated, were it possible to control the former, the latter would of itself greatly decrease. While it is true many cases of venereal disease may occur when drinking has not been a factor, still by far the majority of cases reported to me have been subsequent to drunkenness and resulting carelessness."

Commanding officer, Fort Douglas, Utah:

"The social evil in this city is more rampant than I have ever seen before. When we had the canteen the men were contented to stay in the post, but now they want to go to town all the time, and these women get hold of them."

Commanding officer, Benicia Barracks, Cal.:

"A post is the soldier's home during the time he is in the Army, and a well-managed, regulated, and attractive canteen, where beer and light wines are sold, adds to the physical, moral, and intellectual well-being of a soldier, improves his surroundings, contributes to his rational enjoyment, and adds to his pleasures, making him a contented and satisfied soldier. To make a post a mere place where duty is the sole thing and every diversion and recreation denied a man makes duty dull, uninteresting, and stupid. That there should be a canteen at every post, in my opinion, admits of no argument."

Commanding officer, Camp McKinley, Hawaii:

* * * "The effect of the abolition of the sale of beer has been to double the number of trials for drunkenness and also for absence without leave."

Commanding officer, Washington Barracks, D. C.:

* * * "With the canteen in existence the decent, well-behaved, self-respecting, and orderly men of the command—men who pride themselves on their soldierly conduct and good behavior—had the privilege of drinking an occasional glass of beer in an orderly, clean, and perfectly proper establishment for that purpose."

"They enjoyed the privilege, and respected it, and were well satisfied with their condition and surroundings, knowing that they were being treated as self-respecting men, free to indulge a perfectly proper and legitimate appetite in a perfectly proper way, and knowing also that they were being benefited indirectly in their better food provided upon their mess table. * * * The moment the sale of beer was abolished the human nature of every individual man—good, bad, and indifferent—at once resented this interference with his individual right to regulate his appetite, and to try and force him to be a total abstainer from the use of alcoholic drinks.

"The effect was at once to make every man assert himself to indulge intemperately in the use of beer or something stronger; at once to seek outside of the post that which he was denied therein, and to be dissatisfied, restless, and discontented, and to show this spirit on any and every occasion possible. * * * The demand for all-night passes became so overwhelming that positive and stringent regulations had to be adopted to regulate the number. * * * With the abolition of the sale of beer the soldiers' club practically ceased, and their only recourse for diversion and recreation was to go to the saloon dives and brothels of the city of Washington, with their very decided immoral adjuncts.

"The hospital records show that during the period August 2, 1900, to February 2, 1901, there were admitted to sick report 13 venereal cases and 3 cases of alcoholism, while for the period February 2, 1901, to August 2, 1901, there were admitted 31 cases of venereal diseases and 7 of alcoholism. * * * The total abstainers may claim what they please as to the abolition of the sale of beer in the Navy. It is respectfully submitted that the cases are not parallel in any particular. * * * To try and regulate a military garrison by the same rules possible on board a ship at sea would be to confine every man of the command, officers and all, to the limits of the post for weeks and months at a time and is evidently not only impossible, but also very undesirable, yet the only way to enforce total abstinence."

Commanding officer district of Santiago, February 1, 1902:

"The recent act of Congress prohibiting the sale of beer and light wines at all military posts has been the means of breaking up, to a certain extent, the happy club life of the soldier. It is a well-established fact that there has been more drunkenness among the soldiers at army posts since the abolition of the canteen than there was before. No system of discipline nor severity of punishment can prevent soldiers from visiting low saloons and obtaining liquor. The canteen question resolves itself into one of expediency rather than sentiment.

"If it can be proved that temperance in the Army is best promoted by a well-regulated canteen, under the immediate eye of the commanding officer, the practical view of the matter will ultimately prevail, instead of an abstract theory. It has been advanced by some who are severe and unreasonable in their condemnation of the canteen that all soldiers who are inclined to drink intoxicating drinks should be put out of the Army. This is absurd. It is folly to talk of an army of total abstainers; nor is it to be expected that men enlisting as soldiers to serve their country shall be forced to take a temperance pledge any more than that they should be forced to be religious.

"Soldiers are not children, to be governed like children. They are men upon whom the country must depend for a stalwart individuality and the exercise of heroic qualities in the stress of privation, hardship, and danger. If they are to be trusted in battle, they must be trusted in garrison. In the interest of discipline, morality, general welfare, and contentment of the soldier of the Army, I most earnestly recommend that the act of Congress prohibiting the sale of beer at army posts may be repealed by Congress at the next session."

[Extract from a petition from enlisted men to the Senate committee.]

"In submitting this petition we desire to express to your honorable committee and through you to the Senate of the United States, and through the Senate to the people of the United States, our reasons for petitioning for the defeat of this amendment, which in our opinion—and we are confident our opinion is that of 87 per cent of the enlisted strength of the Army—deprives the American soldier of not only his chief source of pleasure and recreation in his life as a soldier, but also the safeguards against temptations which are thrown in his way when he is forced outside of the garrison for recreation and amusement, for its passage means the abolition of the post exchange.

"The post exchange as conducted in the Army to-day is a mutual cooperative institution in which every enlisted man in the garrison is practically a stockholder, as it is run solely for his benefit. Its object is twofold: First, to afford the soldier a place where he can obtain at minimum cost to himself, and where any profit made will redound to his benefit, those recreations which all religious denominations of the country deem of sufficient importance to the working men and women of this country to take under their fostering care, irrespective of denomination, i. e., the establishment of workingmen and working women clubs to employ the unoccupied time of the members, with the addition that beer and soft drinks are sold; the profit from which, as the Government does not make any appropriation for the support of the same, enables the post exchange to be run and furnishes the means for its second object, and that is to provide the soldier with those articles of food which are commonly called luxuries, and which, although the American soldier is acknowledged by every reading man in the United States to be the best clothed and best taken-care-of soldier in the world, are not supplied as a part of his contract with the Government, but tend to make him more contented with his life, more cheerful under hardships, and a better soldier, and thus a better citizen."

The Clerk read as follows:

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

Medical and Hospital Department: For the purchase of medical and hospital supplies, including disinfectants for military posts, camps, hospitals, hospital ships, and transports; for expenses of medical supply depots; for medical care and treatment of officers and enlisted men of the Army on duty, and of prisoners of war and other persons in military custody or confinement at posts and stations for which no other provision is made, under such regulations as shall have been or shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War; for the proper care and treatment of epidemic and contagious diseases in the Army or at military posts or stations, including measures to prevent the spread thereof, and the payment of reasonable damages, not otherwise provided for, for bedding and clothing injured or destroyed in such prevention; for the pay of male and female nurses, not including the Nurse Corps (female), and of cooks and other civilians employed for the proper care of sick officers and soldiers, under such regulations fixing their number, qualifications, assignment, pay, and allowances as shall have been or shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War; for the pay of civilian physicians employed to examine physically applicants for enlistment and enlisted men, and to render other professional services from time to time under proper authority; for the pay of other employees of the Medical Department; for the payment of express companies and local transfers employed directly by the Medical Department for the transportation of medical and hospital supplies, including bidders' samples and water for analysis; for supplies for use in teaching the art of cooking to the Hospital Corps; for the supply of the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark.; for advertising, laundry, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses of the Medical Department, $550,000: Provided, That hereafter the purchase of medicines and medical stores or the engagement of services not personal for the Medical Department of the Army may be made by the Medical Department in open market in the manner common among business men when the aggregate of the amount required does not exceed $200, but every such purchase or employment shall be promptly reported to the Secretary of War: Provided further, That hereafter civilian employees of the Army stationed at military posts may, under regulations to be made by the Secretary of War, purchase necessary medical supplies when prescribed by a medical officer of the Army.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee as to the effect of that proviso.

Mr. HULL. It changes existing law and is subject to the point of order, but upon that I ask the Clerk to read what the Surgeon-General of the Army says, which is the most complete answer that can be given as to that item in the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, November 11, 1903.

SIR: The army appropriation bill for 1884, act of March 3, 1883, provided under the head of "Medical Department" (22 Stat. L., 459)—

"That civilian employees of the Army stationed at military posts may, under regulations to be made by the Secretary of War, purchase necessary medical supplies prescribed by a medical officer of the Army at cost with 10 per cent added."

In 1884 the Acting Judge-Advocate-General expressed the opinion that the foregoing is general and permanent legislation, and the provisions of the act have been incorporated into the Army Regulations (A. R., 1628).

No subsequent legislation on the subject is known to this Office.

It is impracticable to exactly comply with this paragraph, for the prices of drugs constantly vary, and without its being known when and from whom each drug was purchased, the exact price can not be found in the Surgeon-General's Office. In addition most prescriptions contain several drugs in varying proportions, and to calculate the exact amount used and the cost price thereof is a complicated and tedious calculation. By the time the surgeon has been informed of the value of the prescription which he has dispensed, the patient may be dead or discharged. If the bill is collected and turned into the Treasury, the correspondence has cost more trouble and expense than it is worth.

In the Philippines it has been, of course, absolutely impossible to carry out the order, and General Orders, No. 236, Headquarters Division of the Philippines, August 23, 1901, although it annuls an act of Congress, was a convenient and simple method for carrying out the spirit of the law.

It is recommended that in forwarding the draft of the appropriation bill for the Army for the fiscal year 1905 the following clause be added:

"That civilian employees of the Army stationed at military posts may, under regulations to be made by the Secretary of War, purchase necessary medical supplies when prescribed by a medical officer of the Army, provided that civilian employees receiving less than $60 a month may be furnished medicines (but not hospital stores) free of charge when prescribed by a medical officer of the Army."

Enaction by Congress of the above clause will permit issue of regulation for the Army similar to General Orders, No. 236, Division of the Philippines.

Very respectfully,

R. M. O'REILLY,
Surgeon-General, United States Army.

The CHIEF OF STAFF UNITED STATES ARMY.

Mr. HULL. That so fully explains it that if the point of order is insisted upon I have nothing to say.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I did not make any point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on a point of order?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the completion of the necessary buildings, including approaches, heating and lighting plant, for the Army War College, at Washington Barracks, District of Columbia, in accordance with plans of the architects, $300,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used until it shall have been determined by the Secretary of War that the entire cost of finishing the buildings, providing the approaches, heating and lighting plant shall not exceed the appropriation herein made.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the point of order, I would like to ask if this is a new school?

Mr. HULL. This is a building that was commenced at the last Congress. We appropriated last year $400,000. It is on Government grounds. The Government owns the property. It was formerly known as "Washington Barracks." This is to complete the building for which we have already appropriated $400,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Is it authorized by law? Was there any special authority of Congress to construct such a building?

Mr. HULL. The authority of Congress was undoubtedly given in the last appropriation bill. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have read for the information of the House a communication as to what this War College is, because I think we are all a little vague on the matter. I was so vague upon it myself that I wrote the Secretary of War and told him I wanted to know.

The Clerk read as follows:

MEMORANDUM REPORT FOR THE CHIEF OF STAFF.

ARMY WAR COLLEGE,
Washington, January 15, 1904.

Referring to the accompanying extract of a letter from the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, it is to be noted that these gentlemen are in error who think that there is no War College at present. The error is natural in view of the fact that the college has begun its work without pomp and parade and under conditions which attract no attention from the public, but in this respect there will be no difference even after the completion of the War College building, which Congress has authorized. This is a necessary consequence of its inception and development on the lines already marked out with the approval of the Secretary of War. It is not likely that it will ever be much talked of in the public prints, and its existence must and undoubtedly will be justified by the work which it accomplishes.

As this work is designed to be carried out on lines very different from that of the ordinary scholastic institutions, it would be well that a brief outline of its system and methods should be laid before the Military Committee.

The United States has within its Army a splendid and inexpensive system of military education, better than exists elsewhere in the world, and one which is capable of further development without any increase of expense. I do not here refer to the Military Academy at West Point or to the military colleges throughout the country which are aided by the Government and which do such excellent work in the preparation of young men to receive a commission. I refer only to those schools established within the Army and intended for the systematic training and development of officers after receiving their commission.

At the bottom of this system is the officers' post school. The object of this school is to thoroughly train regimental officers in the duties with which every such officer must be familiar. What this school is intended to do and actually does is stated in the following extract from my annual report:

"In our system, as in all others, the first requisite is a corps of efficient regimental officers. For such an officer there must be presupposed zeal and ability for hard work, unremitting attention to the petty details of company and other regimental duty, tact in the management of men, courtesy, a spirit of justice, obedience, and subordination. Some of these things can be taught, but in no other school than that of experience; others, if not innate, can hardly be acquired, and we must do the best we can without them.

"Upon this foundation the training of the regimental officer is built up, with little necessary study of other than those books which must be the daily reference of every officer. He needs a thorough knowledge, both theoretical and practical, of the drill regulations (both close and extended order) and the outpost duties of his arm. With this he will know how to instruct his men in all the duties of a soldier and to handle them in the operations of peace and war.

"He needs a thorough knowledge of the army regulations; with this he will know his rights and obligations and those of other officers and of enlisted men; he will know how to feed, to clothe, to equip, to shelter, to pay, and transport his men; and he will know a good deal of the law which governs him in his relations to the civil authorities. He needs a thorough knowledge of the elements of military law and of the procedure of courts-martial; with this he will know how to guard his own rights and those of the men dependent upon him and how to proceed intelligently and lawfully in the administration of justice.

"All this and something more is now provided in our system of military education in the course outlined for the officers' post schools."

From these officers' post schools officers are selected to take the course of instruction in the more technical schools where special training is given in those duties, with which only a part of the officers of a thoroughly efficient army need be familiar.

Officers of the infantry and cavalry arms go to the infantry and cavalry school (now called the General Service and Staff College) at Fort Leavenworth. Officers of the artillery take the scientific course at the Artillery School at Fort Monroe. A few of the specially selected officers take the special course at the torpedo school or School of Submarine Defense at Willetts Point. For special field instruction with their combined arms officers of cavalry and light artillery go to the School of Application for Cavalry and Field Artillery at Fort Riley, while young officers of engineers take the course of instruction at the Engineer School of Application at Washington Barracks.

These schools are all maintained at a trifling expense to the Government. They go to the limit of useful training by the ordinary scholastic methods. After passing them there is no further need for professors, instructors, and text-books, although the limit of useful training has not been reached. One officer may be an expert in the manufacture, handling, and employment of submarine mines; another may be an expert in all questions relating to artillery, both coast defense and field; others may know all that may be taught in the schools about the organization, equipment, and tactics of bodies of infantry and cavalry, while others are able to solve every problem connected with military road and bridge building and the construction of permanent and field fortifications.

Nevertheless, these same officers, if assembled together and directed to prepare almost on the spur of the moment some plan of national defense, upon the success of which perhaps the fortune and honor of their country depended, might be completely at a loss. The preparation of such a plan involves the consideration of a thousand details which are not and can not be taught in the schools.

All the work of judiciously combining these details, of determining what are essentials and what are not, of substituting workable makeshifts for things more desirable but which do not exist, the work of training the scientific imagination so that everything useful or necessary in an emergency will be anticipated and every detail carefully provided for in advance, all this constitutes an essential part of the art of war and which can be learned not from books and professors, but only by patient and unostentatious labor in doing these things themselves.

Of this sort of training we have always had a serious lack, and we have experienced the evil results of it at every occurrence of military emergency with which the country has been confronted. Let us see how the War Department proposes to secure this final training of its officers through the medium of the War College.

The General Staff is, under the Secretary of War, the great directing body of the Army. One of the three duties specifically imposed upon it by law is "to prepare plans for the national defense and for the mobilization of the military forces in time of war." In the preparation of these plans it acts as a general does who, after having utilized the services of many officers in collecting data and making tedious and laborious investigations, combines the material facts collected into a plan of operations which he intends to pursue.

Thus the Chief of Staff of the Army sends to the War College the outlines of a work which, for the college, constitutes perhaps nothing more than a theoretical problem, but which for the Chief of Staff means a plan of great practical importance. The college proceeds to the solution of the problem as a part of its assigned task. It makes a complete study of the territory concerned in the problem; it prepares statistical memoirs showing its resources; collects full data in regard to its highways, railroads, and bridges; it studies the details of the ground and the facilities which it affords for attack and defense.

Where information is lacking which can not be supplied from any other known source it calls upon the military information division to secure the information through its officers; it studies the military organization, number and composition of troops, whether militia, volunteers, or regulars, most suitable for the solution of the problem; it prepares the data necessary to effect the mobilization of these troops at a given point with the least delay or confusion; it prepares detailed supply tables showing the proper amounts and kinds of transportation, of clothing, of camp equipage, all quartermaster, commissary, medical, signal, and engineer supplies; it determines most suitable lines (ordinary roads, railroads, or water) for the mobilization of troops and the collection of supplies with respect both to the points from which they come and their ultimate destination.

If the problem involves the use of transports, it prepares a list of all those which the Government could reasonably count on securing; it secures all data necessary for determining the number and character of troops that can be comfortably carried by them, their capacity for transporting animals and every kind of military supplies; if the problem involves the use of railroads, it determines what roads are available, their equipment of rolling stock of all kinds, the amount of this stock that can be accumulated at a given point at a given time, the number and carrying capacity of trains which they can run (a) to the exclusion of all other traffic and (b) without interfering with ordinary traffic, etc.

Having collected the necessary data, the War College prepares what it considers to be the most wise solution of the problem and submits its conclusions, accompanied by memoirs, showing in convenient form all the data above referred to, to the Chief of Staff. The latter, together with the General Staff, criticises this plan, revises it, and when necessary returns it to the War College for the collection of further information and corresponding modification. The final result is that there is a perfect plan, complete in all its details, which is accepted by the Chief of Staff as the one upon which he would operate were there suddenly to be realized the contingency upon which the original problem was based.

If that contingency were to arise the following day he would have under his hand ready for signature the communications to be sent by the War Department to the governors of States, to presidents of railroad companies and steamship companies, the orders ready to be addressed to the commanding officers of troops and to the officers of the Quartermaster, Subsistence, Medical, Signal, and Engineer departments.

As fast as time permits, the War College, under instructions from the Chief of Staff, takes up these problems (it now has in hand three of them), and when the work has passed through its final stage the War Department has in its archives that which it never heretofore has had, i. e., a plan thought out by many minds of what it could best do to-morrow if the emergency contemplated by the problem should arise. These will be of course, from time to time, revised to meet changes which have occurred in the conditions.

But the work outlined above is only a part of the task assigned to the War College. The moment one of these plans should have to be put into execution many officers, as was the case in the Spanish war, would have to be specially assigned to various important staff duties. The approved scheme of work for the War College contemplates the assembling from time to time of a convenient number of such officers for the careful and detailed confidential study of these plans.

During this detailed study there will be carried on a special course of study with sole reference to the plan in hand. Each one of these will involve its special problem in military engineering, in mobilization, in transportation, in sanitation, in signal work, in grand tactics, and in strategy, and possibly in international law.

These problems will be taken up in turn by officers best qualified to pass upon them, and in a series of confidential "talks" every detail that is necessary to know in advance for the successful execution of the plan will be thoroughly mastered. Thus the scholastic work of the War College will not consist in the study of general principles, but in the application of these principles to the details of a specific plan.

A great advantage of this method of work is that while accomplishing the maximum of practical result, it will involve for only short periods the detachment of officers from their other work.

The mere statement of such a scheme should impress upon the minds of everyone who remembers the bitter experiences that we have had in times past the immeasurable importance of the work. Beyond the cost of the building now being erected for the War College, its support involves but a trifling annual expense to the Government.

There are now attached to the War College seven officers, six of them being members of the General Staff, engaged in the first part of the work above described, i. e., the preparation of plans to be passed upon by the Chief of Staff and the General Staff in full committee before final acceptance. It is expected by the coming summer to assemble the first body of officers for the detailed special study which constitutes the second part of the work of the college.

Meanwhile the first and very important part of the work must continue. The rent of the building now occupied by it is $3,000 per annum, and other expenses for light, heat, stationery, Public Printer, binding, etc., are estimated to bring the total for this year to $4,770.91. The rest of the appropriation is spent in the equipment of the college for its special work—books, maps, instruments, the preparation of maps, furniture, etc. These are needed now just as much as they will be when the new building is completed.

In my opinion it is more advantageous to continue the small appropriation in advance of the completion of the new building rather than to make a larger one at that time. The expenditure of money in the special equipment of the War College can be done far more judiciously with small sums available each year than with a larger sum to be more quickly expended. For example, the judicious selection of books for the library can only be made slowly and after much consultation with those for whose use it is intended.

I have endeavored in the foregoing to show that the War College actually exists; is doing most important work, the value of which the general public can never realize, and that the small annual cost of its maintenance is worthy of the favorable consideration of Congress.

Respectfully submitted.

TASKER H. BLISS,
Brigadier-General, U. S. Army, President Army War College.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, while we are on this subject, I would be glad if the chairman of the committee would inform us how many war colleges or schools we have now in the United States.

Mr. HULL. At every post where there is a regiment we have a school.

Mr. HEPBURN. Commence with West Point, if you will.

Mr. HULL. The one at West Point is the permanent Military Academy. We have a school of infantry and cavalry at Leavenworth. We have a school for artillery and cavalry at Riley, and we have a school for artillery at Fortress Monroe. This is supposed to be the head of the educational post-graduate course of the Army.

Mr. HEPBURN. We have still another one, have we not, at Sewalls Point?

Mr. HULL. Oh, we have a school for engineers, yes. That is here now.

Mr. HEPBURN. And we have still another one, have we not, for submarine warfare?

Mr. HULL. That is not so much a school.

Mr. HEPBURN. Who are the students at these various schools?

Mr. HULL. Officers of the United States Army—officers of the militia.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then we have seven schools besides the post schools for the officers in the Army. How many officers have we?

Mr. HULL. In the neighborhood of 4,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is there anything for anybody else to do when these gentlemen are at school?

Mr. HULL. They do not take all of them at once, I will say to my friend. They take them by installments, and then send them back to their command; and I will say to my friend that these schools of artillery—not so much engineering—especially infantry and cavalry and staff corps, have been of great benefit to a very large number of volunteer officers.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman tell us what they all cost in the aggregate?

Mr. HULL. There is very little additional cost beyond what is carried in the regular pay of the officers of the line. The gentleman can see here by the appropriation what these schools cost.

Mr. HEPBURN. There was $400,000 appropriated last year, was there not, for this building?

Mr. HULL. The year before last.

Mr. HEPBURN. And $300,000 this year?

Mr. HULL. All the United States service schools—and that includes these different ones—cost $25,000 last year, and we have appropriated the same amount for this year.

Mr. HEPBURN. Altogether?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is the total expense of these seven schools, exclusive of West Point?

Mr. HULL. That is the service schools. Then we have the School of Artillery and the School of Submarine Defense, $10,000, and for material, apparatus, special apparatus; apparatus for electricians, bindings, books, etc., making it altogether run up more than that, so that I should say that $50,000 would cover absolutely all the expense of these schools.

Mr. HEPBURN. Of all schools excepting West Point?

Mr. HULL. I think so.

Mr. HEPBURN. Of every character?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will that include the traveling expenses of gentlemen that go to the schools?

Mr. HULL. I would not want to give an absolute statement of that without more information.

Mr. PALMER. Who are the students that attend the War College?

Mr. HULL. They are the gentlemen who have graduated with greatest honor at the other schools.

Mr. PALMER. That is to say, these are officers detailed to come here to Washington to make the researches that the brigadier-general refers to in the communication which has been read—to study out plans as to what ought to be or might be done in certain emergencies or under certain conditions?

Mr. HULL. The War College, as I understand, is designed to give the highest education to the best class of officers going through these other schools.

Mr. PALMER. Probably about how many officers will be here in attendance at this War College at any one time?

Mr. HULL. From what we learned during the hearings, I should say twenty-five or thirty at one time.

Mr. PALMER. Then will the gentleman please tell me what is the use of a building costing $700,000 if it is only for the instruction of twenty-five or thirty students at one time?

Mr. HULL. That is a question which was naturally asked in the hearings before the committee by the chairman. Of course it seemed as if the expenditures were very large for this purpose. We were informed that this building is not only for the accommodation of the students, but for many other purposes, for which considerable space is required. I sympathize with the theory of the gentleman, but those were the facts stated to us.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] insist on his point of order?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do; and if the Chair is in doubt, I want to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. HEMENWAY. My point is that this building has not been authorized by law in accordance with the provisions of section 1136 of the Revised Statutes.

The CHAIRMAN. To what provision of the bill is the gentleman's point directed?

Mr. HEMENWAY. To the provision beginning at line 23, page 34:

For the completion of the necessary buildings, including approaches, heating and lighting plant, for the Army War College at Washington Barracks, D. C., in accordance with plans of the architects, $300,000, etc.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman makes his point of order on the whole paragraph?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The whole paragraph, beginning at line 23, page 34.

Section 1136 of the Revised Statutes provides that—

Permanent barracks or quarters and buildings and structures of a permanent nature shall not be constructed unless detailed estimates shall have been previously submitted to Congress and approved by a special appropriation for the same, except when constructed by the troops; and no such structures the cost of which shall exceed $20,000 shall be erected unless by special authority of Congress.

I make the point of order that there has been no special act of Congress authorizing the construction of this building, and the further point of order that if there has been carried upon an appropriation bill an appropriation of $400,000 for this purpose, no point of order having been made against it, and it having gone through for that reason, this provision is still subject to a point of order for the reason that the amount carried is more than $20,000, and there has been no special authority of Congress for the construction of the building.

In other words, suppose that at the last session of Congress, on an appropriation bill, an item got through for the construction of a building, no one having made a point of order upon it, that does not cure this provision when on a later appropriation bill it is sought to increase the amount. In other words, this provision is still subject to a point of order, because the requirements of the statute have never been complied with—estimates have not been made and submitted to the proper committee, and no special act of Congress has ever been passed authorizing the construction of this building.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is not this the building the construction of which was commenced a year or so ago, the corner stone of which was laid last February, and is it not now in process of construction?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I say that even if the building is in process of construction it was provided for on an appropriation bill——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Then the gentleman's theory is that its original inception was unauthorized, and the work that has been done on it and the money expended on it had no authority of law, and the gentleman makes that point now?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the United States Statutes at Large, page 512, contain this language:

Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to expend the sum of $400,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, from the unexpended balance of the emergency fund appropriated in the act approved March 3, 1899, for the erection of the necessary buildings for the Army War College established at Washington Barracks, D. C., for the instruction of officers of the Army and militia of the United States.

That was enacted in an appropriation bill; but it has been reserved for the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] to state that a law enacted in an appropriation bill is not a law, and that all money expended under such a law is illegally expended. This is the first time, I think, that that charge has been made upon this floor. On the regular estimates for this year, the Chair will find, on page 162, is an estimate made for the completion of the Army War College.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Let me ask the gentleman right there, Does not your act limit the cost to $400,000?

Mr. HULL. Oh, as much as buildings are ever limited in the language of the act. This year we put it so that they could not go beyond. Take the State of Illinois and the appropriation made for the construction of the post-office at Chicago. Does the gentleman claim that the money expended was done illegally because they come with an appropriation on the deficiency bill? Take the case of the buildings at Omaha and all over the country.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman will allow me to answer, there can not be a dollar appropriated beyond the limit of cost fixed.

Mr. HULL. That limit was raised.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The limit must be raised by unanimous consent, and if any point of order was made upon this floor, why, an appropriation can not be made, and any dollar of money put into the building for Chicago, or any other building, beyond the limit of cost originally fixed is subject to the point of order.

Mr. HULL. In the estimates for this year you will find on page 162 an estimate for the completion of this building, and a note which says:

By the army appropriation act approved June 30, 1902 (32 Stats., 512), the Secretary of War was authorized to expend the sum of $400,000 from the unexpended balance of the emergency fund appropriated in the act approved March 3, 1899, for the erection of the necessary buildings for the Army War College, Washington Barracks, D. C. Detailed study of the probable requirements of the War College since the time when the original estimates were submitted has shown that true ultimate economy will demand considerably greater floor space than was then anticipated.

The $400,000 already made available might possibly be sufficient to inclose the necessary space in the cheapest types of fireproof construction, using nothing but common brick for the exterior of the building, though it would not permit an architectural treatment at all adequate to its situation and permanence.

The gentleman makes an argument upon the point that provision should have been made that the limit be raised. I want to say to the gentleman from Indiana that his argument might be good upon the question as to whether Congress should give the additional amount or not, but that so far as the point of order is concerned it has no effect whatever.

Here is a work commenced by authority of law. The limit was not enough to finish it properly, and an appropriation was made for the approaches, heat, and lighting plant, so much money. That is what the point of order is based on. As to whether they should have it or not is a matter to be determined after the point of order is decided.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It clearly exceeds the limit of cost fixed by the last Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 1136 of the Revised Statutes provides:

Permanent barracks or quarters and buildings and structures of a permanent nature shall not be constructed unless detailed estimates shall have been previously submitted to Congress and approved by a special appropriation for the same, except when constructed by the troops; and no such structures, the cost of which shall exceed $20,000, shall be erected unless by special authority of Congress.

Whether that means $20,000 for one structure or $20,000 for all the structures it is not necessary to decide here, as in the opinion of the Chair that provision of law as to this particular college was repealed by the act of June 30, 1902, which authorized the expenditure of $400,000 and did not limit the cost of the buildings even to that amount, but authorized the expenditure of that amount for that year.

Now, section 1136 of the Revised Statutes being thus repealed as to this college by the act of 1902, the Chair is of opinion that the paragraph against which this point of order is made specifically providing for the completion of the necessary buildings, which the Chair is advised are already in course of construction under authority of law heretofore given, the point of order must be overruled.

Mr. LACEY. I move to strike out the last word. I had leave the other day to extend my remarks upon the tariff by inserting some documents. I wish further leave in this connection, as some controversy seems to exist as to the views of the President upon the tariff revision, to insert an extract from a speech delivered by him on April 4 last at Minneapolis.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the direction he has indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extract is as follows:

EXTRACT FROM SPEECH OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT.

We are now in a condition of prosperity unparalleled, not merely in our own history, but in the history of any other nation.

This prosperity is deep rooted and stands on a firm basis because it is due to the fact that the average American has in him the stuff out of which victors are made in the great industrial contests of the present day, just as in the great military contests of the past; and because he is now able to use and develop his qualities to best advantage under our well-established economic system.

UNITED STATES WINNING HEADSHIP.

We are winning headship among the nations of the world because our people are able to keep their high average of individual citizenship and to show their mastery in the hard, complex, pushing life of the age.

There will be fluctuations from time to time in our prosperity, but it will continue to grow just so long as we keep up this high average of individual citizenship and permit it to work out its own salvation under proper economic legislation.

The present phenomenal prosperity has been won under a tariff which was made in accordance with certain fixed and definite principles, the most important of which is an avowed determination to protect the interests of the American producer, business man, wageworker, and farmer alike.

The general tariff policy, to which, with regard to changes in detail, I believe this country is irrevocably committed, is fundamentally based upon ample recognition of the difference between the cost of production—that is, the cost of labor—here and abroad, and of the need to see to it that our laws shall in no event afford advantage in our market to foreign industries over American industries, to foreign capital over American capital, to foreign labor over our own labor.

NEED HIGH TYPE OF LABOR.

This country has and this country needs better paid, better educated, better fed, and better clothed workingmen, of a higher type than are to be found in any foreign country.

It has and it needs a higher, more vigorous, and more prosperous type of tillers of the soil than is possessed by any other country.

The business men, the merchants and manufacturers, and the managers of the transportation interests show the same superiority when compared with men of their type abroad.

The events of the last few years have shown how skillfully the leaders of American industry use in international business competition the mighty industrial weapons forged for them by the resources of our country, the wisdom of our laws, and the skill, the inventive genius, and the administrative capacity of our people.

It is of course a mere truism to say that we want to use everything in our power to foster the welfare of our entire body politic. In other words, we need to treat the tariff as a business proposition from the standpoint of the interests of the country as a whole, and not with reference to the temporary needs of any political party. It is almost as necessary that our policy should be stable as that it should be wise.

TARIFF CHANGES.

A nation like ours could not long stand the ruinous policy of readjusting its business to radical changes in the tariff at short intervals, especially when, as now, owing to the immense extent and variety of our products, the tariff schedules carry rates of duty on thousands of different articles.

Sweeping and violent changes in such a tariff, touching so vitally the interests of all of us, embracing agriculture, labor, manufactures, and commerce, would be disastrous in any event, and they would be fatal to our present well-being if approached on the theory that the principle of the protective tariff was to be abandoned.

The business world—that is, the entire American world—can not afford, if it has any regard for its own welfare, even to consider the advisability of abandoning the present system.

Yet, on the other hand, where the industrial conditions so frequently change, as with us must of necessity be the case, it is a matter of prime importance that we should be able from time to time to adapt our economic policy to the changed conditions.

Our aim should be to preserve the policy of a protective tariff, in which the nation as a whole has acquiesced, and yet wherever and whenever necessary to change the duties in particular paragraphs or schedules as matters of legislative detail, if such a change is demanded by the interests of the nation as a whole.

In making any readjustment there are certain important considerations which can not be disregarded. If a tariff law has on the whole worked well, and if business has prospered under it and is prospering, it may be better to endure some inconveniences and inequalities for a time than by making changes to risk causing disturbance and, perhaps, paralysis in the industries and business of the country. The fact that the change in a given rate of duty may be thought desirable does not settle the question whether it is advisable to make the change immediately. Every tariff deals with duties on thousands of articles arranged in hundreds of paragraphs and in many schedules.

These duties affect a vast number of interests which are often conflicting. If necessary for our welfare, then of course Congress must consider the question of changing the law as a whole or changing any given rates of duty, but we must remember that whenever even a single schedule is considered some interests will appear to demand a change in almost every schedule in the law; and when it comes to upsetting the schedules generally the effect upon the business interests of the country would be ruinous.

THE TRUSTS.

One point we must steadily keep in mind. The question of tariff revision, speaking broadly, stands wholly apart from the question of dealing with the trusts. No change in tariff duties can have any substantial effect in solving the so-called trust problem.

Certain great trusts or great corporations are wholly unaffected by the tariff. Practically all the others that are of any importance have, as a matter of fact, numbers of smaller American competitors, and of course a change in the tariff which would work injury to the large corporation would work not merely injury but destruction to its smaller competitors; and equally, of course, such a change would mean disaster to all the wageworkers connected with either the large or the small corporations. From the standpoint of those interested in the solution of the trust problem such a change would, therefore, merely mean that the trust was relieved of the competition of its weaker American competitors and thrown only into competition with foreign competitors, and that the first effort to meet this new competition would be made by cutting down wages, and would therefore be primarily at the cost of labor.

In the case of some of our greatest trusts such a change might confer upon them a positive benefit. Speaking broadly, it is evident that the changes in the tariff will affect the trusts for weal or for woe simply as they affect the whole country. The tariff affects trusts only as it affects all other interests. It makes all these interests, large or small, profitable, and its benefits can be taken from the large only under penalty of taking them from the small also.

To sum up, then, we must as a people approach a matter of such prime economic importance as the tariff from the standpoint of our business needs.

We can not afford to become fossilized or to fail to recognize the fact that as the needs of the country change it may be necessary to meet these new needs by changing certain features of our tariff laws. Still less can we afford to fail to recognize the further fact that these changes must not be made until the need for them outweighs the disadvantages which may result, and when it becomes necessary to make them they should be made with full recognition of the need of stability in our economic system and of keeping unchanged the principle of that system, which has now become a settled policy in our national life. We have prospered marvelously at home. As a nation we stand in the very forefront in the giant international industrial competition of the day. We can not afford by any freak of folly to forfeit the position to which we have thus triumphantly attained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordnance, ordnance stores, and supplies: Manufacture or purchase of metallic ammunition for small arms for current needs and reserve supply, and ammunition for reloading cartridges, including the cost of targets and material for target practice, ammunition for burials at the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and its several Branches, including National Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C., marksmen's medals and insignia for all arms of the service, $825,266: Provided, That provision "for the purpose of furnishing a national trophy and medals, etc.," contained in the act approved March 2, 1903, being an act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, is amended to read as follows: "That for the purpose of furnishing a national trophy and medals and other prizes to be provided and contested for annually, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, said contest to be open to the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and the National Guard or organized militia of the several States, Territories, and of the District of Columbia, and for the cost of the trophy, prizes, and medals herein provided for, the sum of $2,500 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended for the purposes hereinbefore prescribed under the direction of the Secretary of War."

Mr. HEMENWAY. Do I understand the desire of the chairman is to make this a permanent appropriation?

Mr. HULL. I think that was the desire of the committee.

Mr. PALMER. And the desire of the Secretary of War?

Mr. HULL. And the desire of the committee, I think, too. The idea is that anything that will stimulate the rifle practice of the different organizations of the United States, including the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, is money very well expended.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The idea is to set aside $2,500 a year for this purpose?

Mr. HULL. We practically last year made it permanent by saying "hereafter;" but, while that is true, it did not include the Marine Corps and did not include the Navy. The Secretary of War believes that all arms in the service should be brought in here, not only all arms of the regular service, but the National Guard and the various military organizations of the United States. There was a time, Mr. Chairman, in the history of this country when almost every man in the nation was an expert rifle shot. The time is rapidly coming when no one who is not trained in some of these military organizations will know anything about shooting.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The only thing I suggest is, had we not better take care of the amount as it comes due annually in place of making it a permanent appropriation?

Mr. HULL. The only question is whenever they do not need it it will not be expended, and if they should need it they would have to come back each year for it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. But you lose sight of it when it gets clear out of your control.

Mr. HULL. There is this about it, however. I should imagine whenever the Department would not need this for paying the expenses of rifle shooting they would fail to ask for it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. All I desire is that the gentleman should have oversight over it. It it becomes a permanent appropriation it goes to the Committee on Appropriations, and the gentleman's committee knows better how to take care of this item than the Committee on Appropriations, and I would rather the gentleman would not make it an annual appropriation.

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman that as far as trophies are concerned my idea was that there should not be a trophy to be won each year, but that the trophy should be put up and shot for each year and go to the winner, like a cup in yacht races or the Iowa trophy for the National Guard. A medal is something that a man retains permanently.

Mr. HEMENWAY. You want to make this a permanent appropriation?

Mr. HULL. That is the idea of the committee. I was overruled on the trophy business, but that is the idea of the committee, the same as last year.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purpose of procuring field-artillery material for the organized militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, without cost to the said States, Territories, or the District of Columbia, but to remain the property of the United States and to be accounted for in the manner now prescribed by law, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, under such regulations as he may prescribe, on the requisitions of the governors of the several States or Territories or the commanding general of the militia of the District of Columbia, to issue said artillery material to the organized militia; and the sum of $585,000 is hereby appropriated, to remain available until expended, for the procurement and issue of the articles constituting the same.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The item commencing at line 6 and ending at line 19. Do I understand you wish to make an annual appropriation?

Mr. HULL. On page 37?

Mr. HEMENWAY. On page 37.

Mr. HULL. For field artillery? We do not want to make that an annual appropriation. We only make this appropriation to finish up the batteries for that artillery for the militia.

Mr. HEMENWAY. No; you say "to remain available until expended." Why not strike out that and keep it under the control of your committee?

Mr. HULL. I want to say to the gentleman the estimate was provided in that way for the reason it would be impossible to finish them up during this year.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then you can appropriate next year the money.

Mr. HULL. You can do that, of course.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I wish you would do it.

Mr. HULL. But they want to make a contract for it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. We ought all the time to be in touch with what they are doing and not to make permanent appropriations.

Mr. HULL. My judgment from the evidence given in regard to making their contract is that it would be better to make it available than for them to come back again to Congress. I would not really know how to divide this, because we do not need to make all of this appropriation if we do not make it available until expended.

Mr. HEMENWAY. We had better make the full amount available until the end of the fiscal year, and then if it is not expended it goes back into the Treasury and can be reappropriated.

Mr. HULL. I have no objection to that, as far as I am concerned, but I hope it will not defeat the early arming of the Militia.

Mr. HEMENWAY. You leave the whole amount in, and they can contract when the money is appropriated.

Mr. HULL. Then the gentleman moves to strike out the words "to remain available until expended."

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is it.

Mr. HULL. I have no objection.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Make the motion yourself, then.

Mr. HULL. No; the gentleman can make his own motion.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 37, line 18, by striking out the words "to remain available until expended."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 37, line 18, strike out the words "to remain available until expended."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Hereafter all employees of the Ordnance Department whose rate of compensation is annual shall be paid monthly at the rate of one-twelfth of the annual rate, and of such monthly rate and of all other monthly rates of compensation one-thirtieth shall be the daily rate for computation of pay for fractional parts of a month; and for the purposes of this provision each and every month shall be held to consist of thirty days, whether the actual number of days be greater or less.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that provision, although it ought not to apply to the Ordnance Department at Washington, because it would give one set of people in the Department one method of computation and to others another.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I think it has only been one or two years since we made it apply to the pay of the Army, and made it permanent law, but we seem to have left this out. I talked with the Auditor of the War Department about it, and he said that all Departments of the Government ought to come under this provision, as it simplifies the accounts.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If they were all to come under it, there would be no objection to it.

Mr. HULL. This brings the Army all in.

Mr. HEMENWAY. But the employees in the Ordnance Department at Washington who do not belong to the Army will not be taken in. Your language will take in a little bunch of clerks up here and give them rates that the other clerks of the Government would not have.

Mr. HULL. The Chief of the Ordnance Department, in the hearings, made this statement:

General CROZIER. You see what the difficulty is there—that we have some employees who are paid out of more than one appropriation. That portion of their pay which comes out of the army bill is computed in a certain fashion, and that portion which comes out of some other bill is computed in another fashion, and it is very difficult to get the matter straight. What have you to say on that subject, Captain Montgomery?

Captain MONTGOMERY. The law as embraced in the army appropriation bill last year provided for payment only out of funds appropriated for the support of the Army. As it reads, it applies to all army appropriation acts. It did not make a bit of difference whether payment is to be made from the appropriation "Ordnance service," "Pay of the Army," or any other. We have appropriations in the sundry civil acts, and sometimes in the deficiency acts, and an employee being employed on three kinds of work, each kind of work authorized by a different appropriation, one authorization in the army appropriation act, one in the sundry civil act, and another in the fortification act, the result is that you will have to calculate that man's pay on two different bases.

In one case your calculation will be based on the Government salary tables, which have been gotten up by the Comptroller of the Treasury and have been in effect for years.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not think the gentleman from Iowa gets my point. If this were applied to the employees in the Ordnance Department at Washington, it would give a bunch of clerks employed in that Department this method of payment and the balance of the clerks in the other Departments of the Government another plan of payment. The gentleman ought not to confine it to the Army, but let the provision go on that it shall not apply to those employed in the Ordnance Department at Washington.

Mr. HULL. This only simplifies the matter. The Comptroller has decided that it does not apply to anything but the money carried in the army appropriation bill.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Comptroller has decided that it would not apply to any money that is not carried in the army appropriation bill?

Mr. HULL. That is right.

Mr. HEMENWAY. And the clerks provided for under the legislative bill would not come under it?

Mr. HULL. They would not. I do not know what it is, but they would be paid under a different plan or theory. The object of this is to bring the employees all under one computation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter all moneys arising from dispositions authorized by law and regulation of serviceable ordnance and ordnance stores shall constitute one fund on the books of the Treasury Department, which shall be available to replace like ordnance and ordnance stores thus disposed of throughout the fiscal year in which the disposition was effected and throughout the following year.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I rise to give notice that I wish to make some points of order on the remaining portion of this bill. I give this early notice so that I may not be ruled out.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on this paragraph, and the point of order is that it changes existing law. It says:

Hereafter all moneys arising from dispositions authorized by law and regulation of serviceable ordnance and ordnance stores, shall constitute one fund on the books of the Treasury Department, which shall be available to replace like ordnance and ordnance stores thus disposed of.

In other words, it provides that the Ordnance Department may sell certain things that they think ought to be sold, and turn around and repurchase other items with that money. It is a change of existing law. Under the law now the proceeds for any item which is sold have to be turned into the Treasury.

Mr. HULL. I wish the gentleman from Indiana would withhold his point of order, because I acknowledge that it is subject to a point of order, if he insists upon it. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has read the hearings?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes; but I would not allow any officer on earth to dispose of property of the Government and then turn around and invest the money received for it on his own motion.

Mr. HULL. But you have done it for forty years.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then we ought to stop it. The temptation is always strong for a man, when he wants something new and can not get an appropriation for it, to find something that he can sell and then go and buy what he wants.

Mr. HULL. I acknowledge that it is subject to a point of order, but the gentleman is not correct in the statement that we do not allow it. We allow commissary officers to sell stores from the commissary department, and the money does not go back into the Treasury, but they buy other stores with it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I am sorry if they do; if I had charge of the bill, I would change it as quick as I could.

Mr. HULL. I would not.

The CHAIRMAN. To what language does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I make the point of order against lines from 13 to 19, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read the last section of the bill, as follows:

That the officers of the Adjutant-General's Department, except the Adjutant-General, and the officers of the Record and Pension Office shall hereafter constitute one department of the Army, to be known as the Military Secretary's Department; and the Adjutant-General's Office and the Record and Pension Office, heretofore constituting bureaus of the War Department, shall hereafter constitute the Adjutant-General's section and the Record and Pension section of a consolidated bureau to be known as the Military Secretary's Office of the War Department. The officers so consolidated shall be borne on one list in the order of rank held by them, and those of them who hold permanent appointments as officers of the Adjutant-General's Department or of the Record and Pension Office shall be entitled to promotion below the grade of brigadier-general, as now provided by law, and in the order of their standing on said list. Except as otherwise provided herein, the laws now in force shall continue to govern the appointment, promotion, and detail of all officers of the consolidated department hereby created: Provided, That the officers of the said consolidated department shall be subject to the supervision of the Chief of Staff: Provided further, That no appointments or details to the grade of assistant adjutant-general with the rank of major shall be made until the number of officers of that grade shall be reduced to less than ten, and thereafter the number of officers of said grade in the consolidated department shall be ten: Provided further, That of the officers consolidated, as hereinbefore provided, the senior in rank, who shall be chief of the consolidated department and the title of whose office is hereby changed to that of military secretary, shall hereafter have rank one grade higher than that now held by him; but when he shall become separated from service on the active list of the Army the rank of the military secretary on said list shall thereafter be the same as that now held by the senior of the officers hereby consolidated. Except as hereinafter provided, the remaining officers of the consolidated department shall retain the titles that they now bear: Provided further, That when the office of Adjutant-General shall become vacant, the vacancy so created on the active list of the Army shall not be filled, and thereafter the several officers now designated by the title Assistant Adjutant-General and by the title Assistant Chief of the Record and Pension Office shall be designated by the title Adjutant-General. Nothing in this act shall be so construed as to deprive any officer of his commission or to increase the total number of officers of the Army, and all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order of that paragraph beginning at page 39, line 20, and ending with the words "Adjutant-General" in the twelfth line on page 41, that it is new legislation throughout, and I make the further point of order against the several distinct and separate provisos, each as a distinct and separate proposition, because it is all new legislation materially affecting, repealing, and changing existing law.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I do not purpose contesting the point of order. It it obvious to every Member of the House that it is subject to a point of order. I do want, however, to say for the Committee on Military Affairs that at the time it was incorporated in the bill it was supposed it would have practically no opposition on the part of the Members of the House.

It was placed on the military appropriation bill because it was understood it was exceedingly desirous to get these provisions through at the earliest possible date, for the reason set out by the Secretary of War in his letter of the 16th of January, in which he says that if it should become a law it will necessitate many transfers in the clerical force of the Department, all of which must be provided for in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. He says:

I beg leave to suggest, therefore, that if the measure meet with the approval of your committee it be incorporated in the pending army appropriation bill in order to avoid, as far as possible, the delays to which a separate bill is likely to be subjected.

At the time it was incorporated in the bill the committee had every reason to believe that it would be permitted to remain there. That action not having been taken by the House, there is nothing to say except that we believe the measure would result in a large saving to the Government, in better administration to the War Department, and that we hope in the near future to bring it before the House as a separate measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point or order.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to recur to the paragraph providing for contingent expenses of the military information division, on page 4, in order that I may ask unanimous consent that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] be withdrawn. I ask that for this reason, that if his amendment remains in the bill it is impossible for a Chief of Staff to buy a ribbon for a typewriter. It is impossible to buy a paper of pins for his office. It is impossible to buy any stationery for the General Staff, and I do not believe the gentleman intended to make an amendment so restrictive as that. I hope he will consent to having it withdrawn.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I did not intend to and did not do what the gentleman fears. The $50,000 carried on the legislative bill is available for the items the gentleman mentions. I object to returning to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10670, the army appropriation bill, and had instructed him to report that it had made sundry amendments thereto and recommends that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote asked on any amendment? If not, the vote will be taken on the amendments in gross. The question is on the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 6804. An act providing for the appointment of a customs appraiser at Pittsburg, Pa.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. CASSINGHAM to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Nathan Finnigan, Fifty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Also to Mr. LORIMER, to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Louis J. Sacriste, Fifty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WILEY, of New Jersey, for five days on account of death in his family.

To Mr. MURDOCK, for fifteen days, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. HULL (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a detailed statement of the refunds of customs duties for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1903—to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor submitting an estimate of appropriation for miscellaneous expenses of Fish Commission—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SHIPPING BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND PHILIPPINE PORTS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that an order be made to print as a Senate document a hearing had before the Committee on the Philippines of the Senate on the bill (S. 2259) to regulate shipping in trade between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LONG, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2033) to refer to the Court of Claims the claims of the Peoria, Kaskaskia, Wea, and Piankashaw Indians against the United States, and for other purposes, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3607) making appropriations for the removal of the quarantine station at San Diego, Cal., and to acquire a new site, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. KEAN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3809) for the relief of Mary A. Shufeldt; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DRYDEN introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 3810) granting an increase of pension to Virginia B. Mullan;

Mr. STEWART introduced a bill (S. 3824) in relation to pharmacy in the Indian Territory; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. STEWART. I ask that the bill, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Why should it go to the Committee on Indian Affairs? I have no objection to the reference, but naturally it would go to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. STEWART. I think it belongs to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is there some special reason why it should be so referred? If it applies to Indians only, then it ought to go to the Committee on Indian Affairs. Otherwise, it certainly ought to go to the Committee on Territories.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A similar bill was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs in the last Congress.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If it was before that committee at the last Congress, I have no objection to its reference at this session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was before the Committee on Indian Affairs. The bill and accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DILLINGHAM introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 3825) granting an increase of pension to Anna H. Lyman;

A bill (S. 3835) granting an increase of pension to Isaac C. Ross.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 3836) to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved March 3, 1903; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3837) for the extension of W street north between North Capitol and First streets west; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3838) for the extension of Albemarle street; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3839) granting an increase of pension to George B. Abbott; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOPKINS introduced a bill (S. 3840) granting a pension to John A. Cousley, jr.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3841) granting an increase of pension to John M. Bigger; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington introduced a bill (S. 3842) to amend an act entitled "An act amending the civil code of Alaska providing for the organization of private corporations, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1903; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3843) providing for the hearing of cases upon appeal in the circuit court of appeals for the ninth district in the State of Washington; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. NELSON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3844) to authorize the Nome Improvement Company to open and improve the mouth of Snake River at Nome, Alaska; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying petition, which was ordered to be printed, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 3845) to correct the military record of Robert D. Magill; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 3846) granting a pension to Emma A. Poland;

A bill (S. 3847) granting an increase of pension to W. D. Stauffer;

A bill (S. 3848) to pension volunteer army nurses;

A bill (S. 3849) granting an increase of pension to George W. Allen;

A bill (S. 3850) granting a pension to Rachel Fleegel;

A bill (S. 3851) granting a pension to Caroline Gotshall;

A bill (S. 3852) granting a pension to Kate E. Young;

A bill (S. 3853) granting an increase of pension to Margaret Horncastle;

A bill (S. 3854) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Andelfinger;

A bill (S. 3855) granting an increase of pension to John T. Brothers; and

A bill (S. 3856) granting an increase of pension to W. H. H. Taylor.

Mr. MILLARD introduced a bill (S. 3857) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon in the city of West Point, State of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3858) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon in the city of Columbus, State of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. KITTREDGE introduced a bill (S. 3859) granting an increase of pension to Arthur Linn; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KEARNS introduced a bill (S. 3860) granting a pension to James Henry Martineau; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3863) granting a pension to Lillie P. Hinman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 3864) granting an increase of pension to Dean W. King; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BACON introduced a bill (S. 3865) granting a pension to Jefferson Wilcox; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CLAPP introduced a bill (S. 3866) to provide for the investigation of infectious diseases of domestic animals prevalent in the State of Minnesota and adjoining States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 3867) granting an increase of pension to Osmer S. Deming; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 3868) for the relief of David K. Wall and the heirs of John A. Witter, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $8,524.10, with interest thereon at 6 per cent from March 18, 1902, as compensation to the owners of the Norwegian steamer Ragnar for damages to said steamer by collision on March 18, 1902, with the United States army transport Sumner in the Yangtze River, China, intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the messenger in the Chief Clerk's office, House of Representatives, from $750 to $1,200, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ELKINS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $60,000 for continuing and enlarging the work of the Geological Survey in examining, analyzing, and testing the coals and lignite in the United States in order to determine their fuel values, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Geological Survey, and ordered to be printed.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer to report hearings on bills coming before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee be authorized to have said hearings printed.

FOREST RESERVE LANDS.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire to call up from the table this morning for consideration Senate joint resolution No. 30, and to submit a few remarks upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent to take from the table a joint resolution, which will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 30) directing the stay of all proceedings now pending upon any application to enter or patent even-numbered sections of the public lands of the United States in lieu of odd-numbered sections surrendered by any railroad company, or its assigns, within the limits of any forest reserve.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the joint resolution is directed to the practice or the interpretation which has been placed upon the law granting lands to the various railroad companies, which lands have since been included within forest reserves. There was a restriction placed upon these land grants, confining them to odd-numbered sections of land; and it was the intention of Congress, as expressed in making such grants, that the railroad companies should not be allowed to take solid blocks of land to the exclusion of the right of settlers and homemakers who might desire to take those lands under the homestead law.

The reason is obvious. A great advantage was to be derived to the country through which the railroads were constructed, and had the land grants been made in the form of solid blocks of land settlers could only enter upon it and derive the benefit from the construction of the railroad as purchasers from the railroad company having the grant. Congress in its wisdom determined that the railroad company should take the odd-numbered sections and that the even-numbered sections should be retained for the homesteader or homemaker who did not desire or was not able to purchase the railroad company's land.

This was the policy of the Government for a long time. By and by the policy of creating forest reserves was inaugurated, and these forest reserves falling, as they of necessity would in many cases, within the limits of the railroad land grant, it was necessary to make some adjustment of the rights of the railroad company, and they were given the right to select lands outside of the forest reserves in lieu of the odd sections that fell within them.

The act granting this right is a part of, refers back and relates to, the land-grant act. It was the intention of Congress, and it is the letter and spirit of the law that only the same class of lands—that is, the odd-numbered sections—shall be taken in lieu of odd-numbered sections surrendered, carrying out the original intent of Congress that the homemaker should at all times have an open door in the midst of the progress that results from the building of the railroads.

Through some inadvertence the act creating the Mount Rainier Reserve in the State of Washington was not guarded as carefully as it might have been, and there was no specific provision in that act limiting the right of selection to odd-numbered sections. But it is declared that the extent of the reservation shall not be enlarged by the creation of the right of exchange; in other words, that the railroad company's land grant shall remain of the same character and the same general limit, notwithstanding the right to select lieu lands that is given.

The act also provides that they may take them in any State or Territory through which the railroad extends. While I am not making any particular attack upon any particular railroad company, yet I will use for illustration the road that lies nearest to the section of the country with which I am best acquainted—the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

The Mount Rainier Reserve contains something over 2,000,000 acres. I have the exact area stated here. It contains 2,027,520 acres of land. Assume for the purpose of argument that half of that—every alternate section—is railroad land. It is situated in the State of Washington. A land grant is to some extent a burden upon the State in which it lies.

The railroad is not a burden, but the land grant is a burden to this extent, that it diminishes the right of the settler to exercise his homestead rights. It compels him to buy for cash, by bargain and sale, what otherwise he would have a right to locate upon under the land laws.

It is a burden in another way. The States which have been admitted in recent years on the Pacific coast have been given certain concessions for educational and other public purposes. They have the right of selection from the public lands of the United States. It is an absolute grant that passed with the admission act of the State. That right of selection is diminished by the enlargement of the railroad land grant within the borders of the State.

I will illustrate it by the instance in point, the Rainier Reserve. With over 2,000,000 acres of land in the State of Washington they surrender the railroad lands, say a million acres, and take a roving commission into every State and Territory in the Union to select lands in lieu of that surrender. What is the result? They come down into the State of Idaho and select a part of our public lands that form the capital, the stock in trade, upon which rest our future growth and greatness, and the body of public land is diminished to the extent of the selections made in that State.

Washington is relieved of the burden she has created, whether to her profit or not I do not undertake to say, having a great forest reserve, a national park around Mount Rainier, with over 2,000,000 acres in it, and other States have to indemnify the State of Washington or the railroad company for the lands thus taken.

Now, it is all right for the Government to create great reserves and parks for the public benefit, for the benefit of all the people of the whole country, but the Government should do it at its own general expense and not at the expense of the public lands that are held in trust by the Government for the benefit of the people now and hereafter to be in the State of Idaho or in the State of Washington or in any other State.

That is the application of this pernicious principle of granting a roving commission to the railroad company to select lands in any State or Territory in lieu of those surrendered.

Even the forest reserves that are created in Arizona result in the selection of lands in Idaho, Oregon, Washington, or in any State where the railroad company may choose to go for the purpose of selecting lands in lieu of those surrendered in Arizona.

I will not this morning go into the question of the relative value of these lands further than to say that as a matter of fact these companies, acting through their representatives or their grantees, if you please, have surrendered worthless lands in the Mount Rainier Reserve in the State of Washington, and have selected white-pine lands in the State of Idaho that will scale from 3,000,000 to 6,000,000 feet of lumber to the quarter section. That I cite merely as an instance of the method or the manner in which this system works.

Now, this joint resolution provides that all these entries shall be suspended. There is no limitation on them. They never had the right under the law to make the selections. They have been permitted to make them, and they have reached a point in the Interior Department having jurisdiction of the issuing of patents for those lands that, while some of them have passed to a patent, a large number of them stand at the doorway ready for a patent.

I submit to the Senate that those entries should be suspended, because if they are allowed to be made they are a violation of the spirit of the law that granted the lands to the railroad companies.

The forest reserves already created number more than fifty—about fifty-two. They contain 62,352,685 acres of land. The railroad land which lies within those forest reserves amounts to about 4,000,000 acres.

The railroad companies are given the right to select, at their option, a better class of land than those they surrender. They are given a right to go into other neighborhoods than that in which the land surrendered is situated, and to take advantage of the growth and advancement of the country in selecting the land. They can select land out in the vast forests of Montana or Washington and go down in the neighborhood of established cities and civilization and exercise the right of selection. The injustice of it must be obvious, and that it is in direct violation of the spirit of the law creating railroad land grants must be likewise obvious.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from Idaho permit a question for information?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Can they exercise this right at will, or is it done under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. HEYBURN. The direction expressed in the act goes only to the method of exercising it, the question of a survey, and the method of transfer by the railroad company in surrendering land to the Government.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But the question I ask is whether they exercise this privilege of taking even-numbered sections in lieu of odd-numbered sections at will, where there are vacant even-numbered sections, or is that done under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. HEYBURN. It has been done under a misdirection or misapprehension as to their legal rights, with the permission of the Land Department in its various branches, and it is to that that the joint resolution is directed.

Mr. CLAPP. May I interrupt the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I think the matter can be simplified to the Senator from Indiana if it is understood that after the surrender by the companies to the Government certificates are issued which are called scrip. That scrip is disposed of to whoever may take it, and then they may locate that scrip under the terms of the act. As to the Northern Pacific, that scrip is only available in the States through which the company runs, as I think the Senator will see.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; but as to other reservations that does not apply. The joint resolution is directed to an inquiry under the process of exchange as to all reservations. I merely used the Rainier Reservation as an illustration.

Mr. CLAPP. I understood the Senator this morning to state that the Rainier bill was exactly similar to the others.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; not to all others.

Mr. CLAPP. But as to the Northern Pacific.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; there is no bill except as to the Rainier Forest Reservation. The others were created under the general law giving the President power to create them by proclamation, and there are some fifty-odd of them that have been created that way. In the instance of the Rainier Reservation it was created by an act of Congress, but the provisions of the general act differ slightly from those in the special act relating to the Mount Rainier Reserve.

The joint resolution is directed not alone in its purpose to suspending these entries by railroad companies operating under the general forest-reserve act, but under the Rainier act. It appears from the reports made at various times by the Interior Department that the Northern Pacific Railway Company, claiming to be the successor of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, is claiming to exercise the right of exchange given to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in the Rainier Reserve.

The Northern Pacific Railway Company is not the successor of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and Congress, in order that there might be no mistake about it, has by direct enactment refused to recognize it as the successor, doubtless actuated by a knowledge of the manner of the reorganization of that road.

The Northern Pacific Railroad Company made certain mortgages in violation of the charter granted to it by Congress. Those mortgages were void under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. Notwithstanding that fact, the Northern Pacific Railroad Company foreclosed, or those mortgages that were made without authority of law were foreclosed against it.

The question arose as to whether the title passed. With all those things in the minds of the lawyers who participated in the proceedings of Congress, they affirmatively denied the right of selection or refused to recognize it as existing in the Northern Pacific Railway Company. Yet that company has been assuming to exercise the right of selection for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

If those entries are suspended as to the even-numbered sections it will detract nothing from whoever may be entitled to exercise that right so far as the joint resolution is concerned. It is not directed at the exercise of the right to take odd-numbered sections except that it confines them to certain limits.

It has been suggested that it is not competent to take away any vested right because they may have sold to innocent purchasers. The purchaser of the right of exchange from the railroad company stands exactly in the position the railroad company stands in. He can have no greater right. He can not enlarge the right of the railroad company by purchasing the right to exercise it.

If innocent parties have been misled into the belief that they could select even-numbered sections in lieu of odd-numbered sections surrendered, they have made a mistake which is easily rectified. If the railroad company has sold them a right which they did not have, their remedy is plain. If they have exercised or exhausted the right of selection by taking lands or filing upon lands not subject to selection, they still have the right, and may exercise it within the scope and the power that went without the right of selection.

So it is not a case where anyone is going to be injured. It is not a case of an ex post facto law. It is simply a case of correcting a wrong impression and a wrong practice which has grown up pursuant to it in a Department over which Congress has absolute power.

It matters not what contracts the Interior Department may have made with reference to the exchange of these lands, if those contracts are not within the spirit and the letter of the power given by law they are void. They are as void as any other contract that might be made by an individual beyond the power to make them.

So there can be no objection to the passage of the joint resolution if it is agreed that Congress only intended that the railroad companies should have the right, either as an original grant or by selection, to odd-numbered sections. The practice to which the joint resolution is directed results in enlarging the land grant in one State and diminishing it in another at the election of the railroad company. I hope that the joint resolution will meet with the approval of the Senate.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What does the Senator from Idaho desire to have done with the resolution?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I was about to suggest that this whole matter is now before the Committee on Public Lands, which is having hearings on the subject, and that the joint resolution should be referred to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution having been read twice, it will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FULTON. Before it is referred, I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho a question.

I understand the objection to permitting the railroads or their assigns to select the even-numbered sections within the limits of a railroad grant is that it would take from the Government the entire land within those limits and give the railroad companies practically a solid body of land.

But I see that by the joint resolution and by the bill which was introduced by the Senator from Idaho it is proposed to prohibit the selection of even-numbered sections in any locality, whether within the limits of a railroad grant or otherwise.

I did not understand the Senator to explain the object and purpose of that provision, or rather why they should be confined to odd-numbered sections in a locality outside of a railroad grant.

Why should they not be allowed to select even as well as odd sections as long as the land is not within the limits of a railroad grant? I simply ask for information, because I did not understand the object.

Mr. HEYBURN. It was not the intention of Congress that the railroad company should, under any circumstance, go beyond their lieu-land limits. They were given an express and direct grant. Then they were given certain limits in which they might select lands in lieu of those they lost from any cause within their grant. It certainly would be a violation of the spirit and intent of the law as it stands to allow them to go outside of the lieu lands under any circumstances.

As to the selection in a solid block inside, which they have done, if they take every even section, having already the odd sections, it results in excluding everybody but themselves from that section of the country. Then they make contracts. They sell these rights and give forty and fifty years in which to remove the timber. It results in making that section of the country an uninhabited desert until the expiration of that period, and ties up the growth of the State within those limits.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

HEIGHT OF BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate certain resolutions that are on the table.

Mr. STONE. I desire to ask leave, if it suits the convenience of the Senate at this time, to call up resolution No. 84, which I offered some days ago.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] has been recognized.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope the Senator from Missouri will yield to me for a moment, as I simply desire to make a correction of the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. On the 8th day of January the bill (S. 2435) to amend an act to regulate the height of buildings in the District of Columbia was favorably reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia. On January 22 a similar bill, which had passed the House of Representatives, was ordered favorably reported, and was so reported. In reporting that bill I meant to ask that it should take the place on the Calendar occupied by the Senate bill, and that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed. I now ask that that order may be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the Calendar number?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Calendar number of the Senate bill is 184 and the Calendar number of the House bill is 398. I simply ask that the House bill shall go on the Calendar in the place of the Senate bill and that the Senate bill shall be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

RECESS APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask the indulgence of the Senator from Missouri to let me request the consideration of a resolution which I introduced yesterday, which was objected to by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I have had conferences with members of the Committee on Military Affairs, and they say that they have no objection to the passage of the resolution. It will only take a moment, and I shall be obliged if the Senator will permit me to have that resolution now taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. STONE. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that the resolution requesting certain information from the Secretary of War, which I submitted yesterday, may be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. TILLMAN, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, instructed to send to the Senate information in the nature of answers to the following questions:

First. What officers in the Army were appointed during the recess of the Senate occurring between March 19, 1903, and November 9, 1903? Were commissions issued these officers; and, if so, of what character? What officers failed of confirmation during the special session beginning November 9 and ending December 7, 1903? Have these officers been reappointed, and have commissions been issued to them? If so, what is the character of the commission and what authority of law is there for its being issued?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

REVOLUTION IN PANAMA.

Mr. STONE. I now renew my request that the resolution submitted by me on the 13th instant may be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the resolution referred to by him may be now taken from the table for consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOM. If I may be allowed to interrupt the Senator from Missouri for a moment, as I understand he simply desires his resolution to be taken up at this time for the purpose of enabling him to address the Senate upon it, and not with any expectation of disposing of the resolution now.

Mr. STONE. Yes; and then I shall ask that the resolution lie over.

Mr. CULLOM. All right.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print 5,500 additional copies of the annual report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration.

The message also announced that the House had passed with amendments the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print and bind 3,000 copies of Senate Document No. 452, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, entitled "Treaties, laws, Executive orders, etc., relative to Indian Affairs," in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed with amendments the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print and bind 10,000 copies of the proceedings upon the unveiling of the statue of Count de Rochambeau in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed with amendments the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print and bind 16,500 copies of the acceptance by Congress of the statues of Charles Carroll of Carrollton and John Hanson in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2121) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act providing for public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents.'"

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 5761) to authorize the Charleroi and Monessen Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River;

A bill (H. R. 7620) defining the limit of navigation of the Osage River in the State of Missouri; and

A bill (H. R. 10670) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 6804) providing for the appointment of a customs appraiser at Pittsburg, Pa.; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

REVOLUTION IN PANAMA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution called up by the Senator from Missouri, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. STONE on the 13th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to make inquiry into the facts relating to the revolution in Panama of November 3, 1903, which resulted in establishing the Republic of Panama, and particularly to inquire with reference to any action or part taken in said revolution and in the organization of the said Republic by the Government of the United States, or by any official, civil or military, of the United States; and that pending the consideration by the Senate of the treaty for the construction of the Panama Canal, known as the Hay-Bunau-Varilla treaty, the said committee shall proceed promptly with said inquiry, and upon the completion thereof, and on or before the 1st day of May, 1904, said committee shall report to the Senate the testimony taken and its conclusions thereon.

Said committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to compel the attendance and take the testimony of witnesses, and to examine all books, papers, and documents that may be needed for the purpose of said inquiry.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, for the resolution just laid before the Senate I desire to offer what I send to the desk as a substitute or a modification of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri modifies his resolution. The resolution as modified will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations is hereby instructed to investigate and ascertain whether Bunau-Varilla and other persons residing in the United States and subject to our laws did aid or promote an insurrection in Panama against the Republic of Colombia, and did give assurances to citizens of Panama that they should have the aid and assistance of our Navy in behalf of such insurrection, and whether any official of any Department of the Government did disclose or make known to said Bunau-Varilla, or to any other person, the action which the Government of the United States designed or proposed to take in the event of an insurrection. Said committee shall have the authority to send for persons and papers, compel attendance of witnesses, and shall make report at earliest practicable date.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, in what I am about to say in support of that resolution it is not my intention to discuss the Panama treaty per se, nor is it my intention to indicate what I shall esteem it my duty to do when the ratification of the treaty shall be the immediate subject of our consideration. Such a discussion would be foreign to my purpose, and therefore would not be entered upon even though there might be no question of propriety involved in doing so. The merits or demerits of the treaty—that is, as to whether it is good or bad in itself, and whether, under all the circumstances surrounding it and surrounding the whole situation, we should ratify or reject the treaty—is an after consideration to be determined when we arrive at that stage of the proceeding.

It is not my present purpose to enter upon that consideration, and whatever I may say with reference to the treaty will be incidental and without any intention to discuss it. Whether the treaty itself is good or bad, and whether, if it should be ratified and executed, it would promote the public weal or prove to be a public misfortune, is measurably immaterial to the purpose I have in mind. So far as my present purpose goes, I might admit—which, however, I do not—that all the provisions of the treaty are excellent; that the route chosen is the best, and that the treaty, if carried out, would promote in the highest degree the prosperity of our people and add immeasurably to our national prestige. All that might be admitted, and still, with my present lights, I would stand where I am, uncertain and unsatisfied, however great the selfish temptation might be to go forward blindly, indifferent to every consideration except that of sordid gain.

Mr. President, unless our ideals have fallen to a lower plane, there is something dearer to our hearts and of infinitely greater consequence to the American people than mere commercial considerations of profit and loss. I want to see this interoceanic canal constructed. No man living can be more genuinely solicitous than I to see this stupendous enterprise on foot and to see the work accomplished. I think I comprehend and correctly measure what the construction and successful operation of such a canal would mean to the commerce of the world, and especially what it would mean to the American people in more ways than one. But above all these considerations, important as I esteem them, I would place the honor and good name of the Republic. Is the honor and good name of the Republic involved in the transactions out of which this treaty has been evolved? Have we proceeded with that wisdom, circumspection, and high sense of honor that should characterize a mighty people of our standing and pretentions in dealing with other nations? If we have, then we can go forward resolutely and without fear. If we have, then I can vote to ratify this treaty without hesitation.

But if we have not, aye, if there is a well-grounded doubt about it, then we should pause long enough to satisfy ourselves on that point before going beyond the possibility of retreat. If the treaty is tinctured with dishonor by our fault, I want to know it before I act, that I may act intelligently in the light of the truth. The senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] and the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and others have appealed to Senators to put this matter above the plane of partisan politics. They have said that the questions involved are of a character and of such universal importance that they should be considered and determined in a purely patriotic spirit and without reference to party divisions. To that sentiment I heartily subscribe, and in turn I now appeal to them to illustrate their precepts by their example. It is just as easy for the distinguished Senators I have named to preach a policy of patriotism devoid of partisan rancor as it is for me to preach it, and they can expound that policy with more effective eloquence than I can command.

But at this time and in the present juncture it is more difficult for them to practice what they preach than it is for me or my colleagues on this side of the Chamber to do so. They are more closely allied by party ties to the Administration and more amenable to its influence than we, and hence it is more difficult for them to take a stand and assert themselves against the policy of the President. It requires high courage and a high type of the public man to break away from his party and throw himself in its pathway, and I even question if it is wise to do that except for paramount reasons of the highest moment. The other day the Senator from Wisconsin, who is to me always interesting, denounced with much zeal and apparent feeling the coercive tendency of the party caucus, and lauded in well-rounded periods the beauty and dignity of Senatorial independence. That sounded well, Mr. President, for it was cast on a lofty key and was pleasing to the ear, but, after all, "the proof of the pudding is the eating thereof." I mean now to put these Senators, who thus exploit the quality of their independence, to the test. Not that I would have them make any needless attack upon the Administration, or, for that matter, any attack at all. I would not ask or expect them to lift a hand against the policy of the Administration for which their party is responsible, and which they are determined, if possible, to continue in power, without adequate cause.

I would not myself do that if I stood in their shoes. I would not myself do that even as it is, with a Republican Administration, for, without regard to party association, the President and all others in authority should be treated with courtesy and fairness. Unwarranted attacks are unjust attacks. But if any man in high position, even the President of the Republic, exercising great power and clothed with great responsibilities, shall rush, ill-advised it may be, or impulsively and with a too strenuous zeal, into sensational and spectacular performances which overstep the bounds of his authority or which tend to discredit the good faith and good name of our Government, I believe that Senators, exercising independence with dignity, should rise above party environment and uphold the true American standard of national justice and honor. In that spirit I offered the resolution now before the Senate, and in that spirit I purpose to discuss it.

And now, Mr. President, I want, if I can, to get this matter fairly before the Senate, and this I wish to do without undue prolixity and without incumbering my argument with matter irrelevant to my purpose. For some inexplicable reason the present Administration has resolved upon having a canal over the Panama route, or to have no canal at all. I do not disparage the value of a canal across the Isthmus of Panama; that it would be of incalculable value to our people I do not question. But equally sure am I that the Nicaragua route, viewed solely from the standpoint of our national interests, would be in every way infinitely preferable to that across Panama. Up to the passage of the so-called Spooner Act of June 28, 1902, the overwhelming public sentiment of the country had settled in approval upon the Nicaragua route. That sentiment was voiced in the Hepburn bill, authorizing the construction of the Nicaragua Canal, which passed the House of Representatives on January 9, 1902, by an almost unanimous vote. The passage of that bill through the House was but the crystallization of a well-defined public sentiment.

But just there, when the sky seemed to be clearing and the way becoming easy to a speedy beginning and completion of the enterprise, a magic and potent hand was thrust forth from a shadow somewhere and wrought a sudden change—a change as significant as it was sudden. You know what happened. You know how the Isthmian Canal Commission changed front and recommended the Panama route, after having twice indorsed the Nicaragua route as the better; and you know how the House of Representatives was driven to the wall and compelled to accept the Panama route as first choice or take nothing at all. The Administration and its counselors seem to have become suddenly infatuated with the Panama route—to have become possessed of an acute, consuming passion for it—and to have resolved unalterably that the canal should be constructed there. True, the law, as finally passed—the act of June, 1902—authorized the President to go to Nicaragua if he failed to secure a satisfactory treaty with Colombia. But events have demonstrated that the President never intended, under any contingency, to go to Nicaragua. For some reason, which ordinary folk outside the circle of the elect can not comprehend, the President and those about him who mold the policies of the Administration are wedded to Panama.

Without looking into the Administration's family closet for the skeleton, if there be a skeleton; without looking behind the curtains or below the surface for a solution of the mystery, if there be a mystery, the facts of which we are cognizant warrant the statement that the Administration, from the passage of the Spooner Act to this day, has had but one fixed, definite, unalterable purpose with regard to an isthmian canal, and that has been and is to construct it at Panama or not to construct it at all. The motive for this extraordinary course we can afford to leave covered in the mystery which surrounds it. For the present it is sufficient to know, what is evidently true, that the President started out to execute the law of 1902 wedded to the Panama scheme and without a serious thought of Nicaragua. Of this I am absolutely convinced. I am not now arraigning or censuring him for that. I think he was wrong, whether viewed from the standpoint of the law or sound public policy, but that is not now material to my purpose. It does not matter in the abstract whether his hot devotion to the Panama project was prudent or imprudent, wise or unwise, right or wrong. It is sufficient to know that his impetuous and strenuous heart was firmly set upon it.

What I want to know is whether in forcing forward the policy of the Administration officials of this Government overstepped the bounds of international comity, law, and justice and were guilty of acts which national honor and interest, in the best and truest sense of the term, demand should be disclaimed. There are some things we know and some we do not know, or know only in a vague way; but the things we do know make it important that we be advised of other things of which we have only an inkling. I do not charge misconduct on the part of the Administration; I do not charge complicity of any American official in the Panama insurrection; but I can not shut my eyes to the fact that the situation is surrounded by circumstances that cast upon it the shadow of grave suspicions. If anything has been done by the President or by his direction which should not have been done, I am willing to believe it is due more to indiscretion, impulsiveness, and to that volcanic, irrepressible love he has for things eruptive, tragical, lurid, and sensational than to any other cause. But whatever the cause, our duty and responsibility remain the same.

GROUNDS OF SUSPICION.

Mr. President, what are the things, or some of them, that give to our part in the Panama revolution a sinister aspect? Let us see. To begin with, while the Hay-Herran treaty was pending for ratification before the Colombian Senate Secretary Hay sent some remarkable communications to Bogota. In his message to Congress of January 4 the President said:

> That there might be nothing omitted, Secretary Hay, through the minister at Bogota, repeatedly warned Colombia that grave consequences might follow from her rejection of the treaty.

We have some of these messages to the American minister, and some of the communications made, under instructions, by the minister to the Colombian Government. He was directed to warn the Colombian Government, which he did, that to reject the treaty or unduly delay its ratification would seriously compromise the friendly relations between the two countries, and might result in consequences which every friend of Colombia would regret.

This is strange language, Mr. President, for one sovereign to address to another. It is not the language of diplomacy or amity or courtesy, but of threat and menace. It did not tend to conciliate, but to exasperate. Is it too much to say that it was not spoken to persuade, but to intimidate and coerce? Would the Secretary of State have dared—I put it strongly, have dared, I say—under like circumstances, to have addressed a communication of that kind to any first-class power? And, Mr. President, what would you and these American Senators have done if Great Britain had sent an insult like that to this Chamber when the Hay-Pauncefote treaty was under consideration? I do not care to express just what I think of this example of Rooseveltian diplomacy. I will only say that I can take no pride in seeing my country strut before the world like a swaggering bully on the stage. Colombia was "warned," says the President, that grave consequences might result from a rejection of the treaty. What consequences? What did he mean? If he meant anything, necessarily he meant if the treaty should be rejected we would forcibly seize the Isthmus of Panama and settle with Colombia on our own terms, or he meant that Panama would secede from Colombia and set up an independent government under the protection of the United States. That was the undoubted meaning of his threat. The President himself admits it. In his recent message to Congress on this subject January 4, 1904, he bluntly boasts that he had these two remarkable alternative schemes in mind.

As to the first of these two schemes—that of the forcible acquisition of the Isthmus—he said in the message alluded to:

> My intention was (if the treaty should be rejected) to consult the Congress as to whether under such circumstances it would not be proper to announce that the canal would be dug forthwith; that we would give the terms we had offered and no others, and that if such terms were not agreed to we would enter into an arrangement with Panama direct or take what other steps were needful in order to begin the enterprise.

There you have it—the declared purpose of the President to seize vi et armis the territory of a neighboring, friendly nation for a purely commercial purpose, openly proclaimed in the blustering diction of the buccaneer without disguisement and without shame. Here is an American President preaching the morality of force and the doctrine that might makes right, a monstrous doctrine which has filled the history of European monarchies with crime, and a doctrine, too, which our nation was born in bloody protest against.

True the President admits that he had some thought of complimenting Congress by consulting it before he acted, and no doubt it is true. I am willing to concede as much, that he really intended, if the circumstances were auspicious, to observe his constitutional obligations to that extent. But whatever he thought of doing, or might have done, in that behalf is immaterial. The declaration of his intention shows his temper, disposition, and purpose. It reveals a fixed determination upon his part to appropriate the Isthmus of Panama to this enterprise at all hazards, and a willingness upon his part to go to any length to accomplish his purpose. This is important, for it throws a light upon other things and should make it easier for us to understand what actually happened. Ordinarily when we know a man's mind we have some index to his conduct.

The President, I say, was determined to have the Isthmus of Panama at all hazards. That is perfectly plain. He makes it so himself. He intended, if the occasion arose in the execution of his plans, to ask the Congress to authorize him to seize it. But that extreme step was not to be taken or attempted if the same end could be accomplished in another way. That other was the secession of Panama; and that was one, and the preferable one, of the two schemes the President had in mind.

In his message the President says that he thought it possible, if the Hay-Herran treaty should be rejected, that the people of Panama—> might take the protection of their own vital interests in their own hands, * * * declare their independence upon just grounds, and establish a government competent and willing to do its share in this great work of civilization.

And, as the President naively put it, "this is what actually occurred;" and this was one of the grave consequences with which he threatened Colombia.

What is it the President says? What is it he justifies and applauds the people of Panama for doing? Why, it is for an act of secession—for dismembering and breaking up an established American republic. And what are the grounds the President defines and labels as "just grounds" for this act of rebellion? Only this and nothing more—that Panama might do its share in constructing a water-way for the reason that it might be of some commercial advantage to the people of the Isthmus. Mr. President, if those who have gone to the shadowy bourne from which no traveler returns are permitted, in the language of another, to view the transitory scenes of this earth, with what feelings of mingled delight and derision must John C. Calhoun and Jefferson Davis view the ludicrous and fantastic performances of President Theodore Roosevelt! South Carolina has been vindicated by the President. Will any Republican who approves this declaration of the President ever dare in future to reproach the South or rend the bloody shirt to excite the passions of northern audiences against treason and rebellion? Mark you, the President admits that he contemplated the secession of Panama as a consequence of Colombia's refusal to ratify the Hay-Herran treaty, and that secession was one of the calamities with which the President threatened Colombia.

The President resents any insinuation of complicity by this Government in the revolutionary movement in Panama, and declares that any such insinuation is "as destitute of foundation as of propriety." This assurance of the President, so positively made, has great weight with me, and its weight is augmented by the fact that I am anxious to acquit him and all others of any improper connection with the Panama insurrection. I hope he is not misinformed or mistaken and that he is absolutely correct in what he says. Nevertheless even the President must admit that the circumstances are most unfortunate if the Administration is innocent, and certainly no man will deny that while this treaty is pending the Senate, as a matter of right and duty, ought to be fully advised as to all the facts, and especially the President or his Cabinet ministers ought not to withhold from the Senate any information in their possession or send it here grudgingly and by piecemeal, as has been done.

Whatever the President may or may not have had to do with what actually eventuated in Panama, one thing is sure, and that is that he contemplated entering into direct arrangement with Panama if Colombia rejected the treaty. He says so in so many words. He says if Colombia refused the terms we offered her he intended to ask the Congress for authority to "enter into an arrangement with Panama direct." That is the language of his message, and there can be but one meaning to it. He was not to wait upon Panama, but was himself to seek Panama for the arrangement; he was himself to initiate the arrangement. That he admits he intended doing if he found it to be necessary. But Panama could not have made any arrangement with the President without seceding from Colombia and establishing a government of her own. Without independence Panama would have had no power to make a treaty. Without independence Panama could not have interfered with the jurisdiction, sovereignty, and right of Colombia. Thus the President admits his willingness, if he had found it necessary to his purposes, to have inspired revolt—to have incited rebellion in Panama.

If he was willing to foment a rebellion, it follows he would have been willing to support and uphold it. And now with this admission before us of his willingness to instigate rebellion, boldly avowed in a public message of high import, I can not perceive why the President should be so oversensitive about suspicions. I can not understand why he should resent a bare suspicion that he might have done what he openly admits he was willing to do. He stands before us as admitting his entire willingness to have fomented rebellion in Panama, to have dismembered the Republic of Colombia, and to have supported the lawless act by the power of our arms, and yet he denounces any suspicion of complicity by this Government in what was actually done as being as "destitute of foundation as propriety." Destitute of propriety is pretty strong. I can not agree to the language of this disclaimer. It is not warranted by the facts.

In the present aspect of the case there are circumstances that force their way upon our perception and make it difficult for us to reconcile them with any theory that does not compromise the integrity and good faith of our Government. There are circumstances surrounding the situation that make it impossible for me to rid myself of the apprehension that the zeal of the Administration carried it beyond the line of international rectitude. It may be that these circumstances can be so explained as to silence this apprehension, but it can not be silenced by mere reproach. The very attitude of the President, standing alone, would be sufficient to excite suspicion as to the conduct of the Administration. And when we turn from the magisterial figure of the President, bestriding the Isthmus like a miniature Colossus, to the occurrences themselves that suspicion is not allayed, but intensified.

To begin with, is it possible for any sane man to believe that a rebellion could have been organized in Panama with the faintest hope of success without foreign aid? Colombia has a population of about 5,000,000, exclusive of Panama, while Panama has a population of 250,000. This enormous disparity in numbers would of itself make hopeless the cause of Panama in a war with Colombia. The men who organized this rebellion were guilty of treason, and it is unreasonable to suppose that they would have staked their lives and fortunes on such a venture without some assurance of extraneous help, and certainly not without greater reason than they had. The fact that other ventures of like kind had ended disastrously, so far from encouraging a new attempt, would prove any such attempt also doomed to failure if left alone.

Without foreign aid this revolution would have been insipid, abortive, impossible. It would have been an act of stupidity and madness. It requires a blind unreasoning faith to believe that it would have been attempted without some assurance of outside aid. By whom such aid was promised, or by what authority, is another question, but that it was promised by some one and relied upon, who can doubt?

AID PROMISED.

The public prints declare that Bunau-Varilla, now Panama's minister at Washington, promised it. It has been said that Duque and Amador, who came from Panama to this country on that mission, promised it. Whether these utterances of the public press are true, in whole or in part, I neither affirm nor deny, for I do not know. What I know is that Bunau-Varilla, Duque, and Amador were all conspicuous figures in the conspiracy out of which this revolution sprang; that they matured their plans in New York; that they were frequently in Washington seeking audience of our high officials, and I know what they are reported to have said has been set forth with great circumstantiality of detail.

Undoubtedly it is true that they might have advised the people of Panama that they had official assurance of American support, and yet have done so falsely and without authority. However, that would have been a cruel and wanton thing to do, for they were here to represent their associates in a dangerous enterprise, and to have advised them falsely might have been to involve them in irretrievable disaster. Still they might have been capable of such an act; they may have made such representations without authority. And that is the view I would unhesitatingly take. I would not for a moment tolerate the possibility of a high and responsible official of this Government participating in a treasonable conspiracy against a neighboring sovereignty, except for that unfortunate combination of circumstances that give form and substance to grave suspicions.

I can not escape this fact, that if Bunau-Varilla and his coadjutors had been permitted to outline the course of this Government there would be no change, not the slightest deviation, from the course actually pursued. Bunau-Varilla himself could not have ordered events more to his liking than they were ordered by the officials of our Government. All that happened may have happened naturally and without collusion, expressed or implied, but beyond question the circumstances are sinister and inculpatory. The President desired the secession of Panama and expected it. It would be folly to deny that he intended from the beginning to suppress and prevent any interference with the revolutionary movement by the forces of Colombia. Every precaution was taken and every preparation made in advance to meet the expected emergency when it arose. So anxious was the Department of State about it, and so sure of its advent, that the First Assistant Secretary thought that it had come hours before it really eventuated. At 3.40 p. m., November 3, 1903, he cabled the consul-general at Panama as follows:

Uprising on Isthmus reported. Keep Department promptly and fully informed.

To this the consul-general replied:

No uprising yet. Reported will be in the night.

From whence came this premature report to the State Department? It would be interesting to know. Could it have come from that voluble, grandiloquent Frenchman, seemingly ubiquitous and omnipotent, who finds no obstacle in conscience or propriety in combining an agency for the Panama Canal Company with the more ornate duties of a minister plenipotentiary for the new Republic? The report was ahead of time, but no matter; though premature, it was prophetic. The Secretary was not doomed to disappointment. The uprising was belated, but it came. And after it came, what happened? Events followed fast upon the heels of each other. I need not recall those events in detail. They have been fully exploited here already. It is sufficient to say that the captains of our war ships and marines were promptly and peremptorily ordered to prevent the landing of Colombian troops in Panama, and to use whatever force might be necessary to prevent any conflict on the Isthmus. These orders were obeyed, as they should have been. Colombia sought to convey troops in sufficient numbers to suppress the insurrection, maintain order, and restore her authority, but was denied the right to land them, and the troops she had there were so hedged about, restrained, and coerced by our authority that they were practically driven from the Isthmus.

In consequence of this intervention on our part, preconcerted and prearranged, the revolution, otherwise hopeless, became a shining success in its way. In a sense, almost literal sense, we booted Colombia from the Isthmus and lined the coast with our guns to prevent invasion. Whatever the motive or excuse for this, the effect was to protect the conspirators and assure the success of their enterprise. There was nothing the Panama insurgents could have desired this Government to do that it did not do. Never did ambitious duty take greedy power so opportunely to a rescue.

RECOGNITION OF PANAMA.

Thus, Mr. President, was this new child spewed forth into the family of nations. The revolt occurred on November 3. Before three suns had set, before a Government worthy of the name had been established, the President recognized what he called, or miscalled, the Republic of Panama, and entered into diplomatic relations with it. I will not add to the discussions we have had here upon that point. Whatever may be said in the abstract regarding the law of nations in recognizing new revolutionary governments, and whatever may be said regarding precedents in such cases, in this instance we had such special interests at stake and were so involved in the complications that a delicate sense of justice and honor should have impelled us to move with the utmost deliberation. But the Government did not move with deliberation; on the contrary, it moved with the greatest precipitation. It acted with unseemly haste and in a manner that gives to the act a bad appearance. This quick recognition could not have been more unwarily adjusted to time and circumstances. To the world it is bound to look as if it were part of a programme—an act in a play.

THE TREATY.

But there was method in the madness. Recognition was the one necessary thing left to be done before the final step. After recognition came the crowning act, the objective act, to which all precedent acts were but preliminary—the making of a canal treaty with Panama. The belief is inevitable that to this end everything done had been directed. Without this the whole business would be aimless and meaningless. If the situation created was not created to furnish the President an opportunity to "enter into an arrangement direct" with Panama, then what was it created for? The opportunity was created, and the President embraced it with the fervent ardor of a lover who waits impatiently at the tryst. On November 6 he recognized the Republic of Panama. On the same day the junta of Panama appointed Varilla minister to the United States. Varilla is a Frenchman, not a Panamaian, and his interest in the revolution sprang not from patriotism, but from his connection with the French canal company, in whose stocks he is said to be a large investor. His appointment as minister he extorted from the junta as the price of his influence at Washington.

Immediately after the President recognized the Panama Republic on November 6 a commission was appointed by the junta to come to Washington, with power to negotiate a canal treaty. On November 10 Doctor Amador and Frederico Boyd, of this commission, sailed for New York, and arrived there on November 17. They telegraphed Varilla of their arrival and intention to proceed at once to Washington. They arrived in Washington on November 18, and found that the treaty had been already drawn and signed by their French minister and our Secretary of State a few hours before their arrival. That is the treaty now before the Senate, dated November 18, 1903, and signed alone by John Hay and Bunau-Varilla. The commissioners had their long journey for naught. For fear that they might be troublesome, they were ignored and then dismissed without apology. Indignant they may have been, but helpless they certainly were. They had no alternative but to accept the treaty as it was written. The Administration held the whip handle and could drive them as it would. Within two weeks after the President's recognition of the Republic of Panama this remarkable treaty had been executed in this remarkable way at Washington. Mr. President, some may hold this to be wise diplomacy and honorable statecraft, but, to my thinking, it wears more the aspect of political artifice.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. Sir, strange stories have been told in the newspapers about these various occurrences—startling stories, even monstrous, if they are true. I do not know that they are true, although related with great minuteness of detail, and hence I have thought it would be ungracious to exploit them here. I have barely adverted to them; I have not recounted them. Still they have gone to the world with their dreadful accusing, plausible in the light of known events, and can we afford to dismiss them with a sneer? However that may be, the undisputed facts can not be ignored. Judged by these facts, measured by that standard, it is impossible to review the history of these transactions without a feeling of profound astonishment.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. STONE. I now yield to the Senator.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator was speaking about the Government holding the whip hand in the negotiation of this treaty. I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks the Government has asked anything in the treaty that it should not, or if the treaty is more favorable to the interests of civilization and the interests of this country than it ought to be?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, it is as favorable to the United States as any citizen of this country could possibly ask. But concessions and rights are granted in that treaty to the United States that no respecting sovereignty acting of its own free will would ask or grant. It gives to the United States practically a sovereign title to the zone as a part of the canal, which I understand embraces practically all that is of value to Panama.

HOW JUSTIFIED.

And now, Mr. President, upon what flimsy pretenses is our conduct justified?

First, it is said that the United States were overgenerous in what they offered Colombia in the Hay-Herran treaty, and that Colombia was guilty of an ungracious act in rejecting that treaty. All that may be true—it is needless to inquire—but to say we would be justified on that ground in resorting to force to accomplish our ends is to assert an absurd proposition, vicious and indefensible from every proper standpoint of international law or morals. Colombia acted strictly within her right, as every sovereignty may do, and as we have done under similar circumstances.

It is not unusual for treaties made by the President with foreign governments to be rejected by the Senate here. Colombia acted in accordance with her constitution and forms of law, strictly within her right, and in conformity to the usage of nations. The Colombian Congress had the same right to ratify or reject the treaty that the American Senate had to ratify or reject it. To hold differently would be to abridge the sovereignty of Colombia and destroy her freedom of action. We might question her wisdom or impugn her motives, but her right is above impeachment. The argument of the President on this head, made in his recent message, is the veriest sophistry, put forth to create a sentimental excuse in the absence of a legal one. This whole contention is puerile, vicious, and preposterous.

Secondly, a novel and visionary right of international eminent domain has been intimated, if not asserted. In other words, it has been advanced, in substance, that since an isthmian canal is of great moment to the world's commerce, the United States, acting for the world, might take whatever was necessary for the canal and settle for the despoilment afterwards. That is an old doctrine in the Old World, but a new one here. It is the exact doctrine under which powerful nations, without conscience, have plundered weak ones in all the ages. It is the doctrine of the divine right of force. Whenever and wherever that doctrine is accepted, the one limit upon its application is the power to apply it. When the hand of power is strong enough to serve the spirit of greed some refinement of sophistry can always be found to excuse a crime. That doctrine has not yet been written into our code of morals or creed of public faith; and it is to be hoped that this first attempt to make it a principle of our international policy will be the last.

Thirdly, it is contended that we interfered because of treaty obligations to keep the peace and protect transit across the Isthmus. This contention is predicated on the treaty of 1846 between the United States and the Republic of New Granada (now Colombia). By this treaty the United States stipulated to guarantee "the perfect neutrality" of the Isthmus of Panama, "with the view that the free transit from the one to the other sea may not be interrupted or embarrassed in any future time while this treaty exists;" and, in the same manner, the United States guaranteed "the rights of sovereignty and property which New Granada (Colombia) has and possesses over the said territory." By this treaty it is contended the President was obligated to protect transit across the Isthmus from interruption, and that in the furtherance of that duty he had the right to exclude Colombia from all participation in the work of preserving order in that part of her territory.

In other words, under this treaty an attempt is made to justify the President in all he did. The United States, by virtue of this treaty, have intervened on former occasions to maintain order on the Isthmus, and these interventions are now pointed to as precedents for the things recently done by the Executive. But the circumstances and conditions under which the former interventions occurred were very dissimilar from those existing when the last occurred, and all former interventions were made at the request of Colombia or in aid of her authority, and when peace had been restored our interference ceased. In this instance our intervention was not to aid Colombia, but to thwart her. The effect of this intervention, whatever the purpose, was not to aid the sovereignty responsible for order, but to aid insurgents who were guilty of disorder. The effect, whatever the purpose, was not to uphold the sovereignty of Colombia, but to overthrow it in the interest of a rebellious movement.

A treaty is a law, but it is a law made by the consent of the contracting parties. The ordinary canons of interpretation should be applied to a treaty as well as to a statute. The intention of the contracting sovereignties should be regarded in interpreting a treaty, as the intention of the law-making power is regarded in interpreting a statute. It surpasses belief, it is unreasonable to suppose, that Colombia would have entered into a convention with the United States under which she could have been lawfully denied the right to exercise her own power in preserving order and upholding her authority in her own territory. Whether we look to the text of the treaty or to the intention of the parties, it is manifest that the interpretation now sought to be placed upon the treaty is farfetched and untenable and made under stress to meet an exigency.

Not only was it the right and duty of Colombia, as the sovereign, to keep the peace, but she had also special and important property interests at stake. She was a large stockholder in the Panama Canal Company, and a large proportion of her revenues, amounting to hundreds of thousands annually, were derived in payment of concessions from the Panama Railroad Company.

In addition to that, all the properties of the Panama Canal Company and the Panama Railroad Company were to belong absolutely to Colombia, without compensation, at certain periods fixed for the expiration of their respective concessions. The value of the canal properties can be estimated when we reflect that in the pending treaty it is agreed that we shall pay to the canal company $40,000,000 for its possessions. All these vast interests of Colombia we have imperiled, if not destroyed, by our act. Already has Colombia been denied representation in a recent meeting of the canal shareholders held in Paris. And yet, despite all this, we are asked to believe that Colombia deliberately entered into a treaty, and has permitted it to stand in the face of an express stipulation that she might reform or annul it on twelve months' notice, under which these overwhelming disasters might be lawfully visited upon her. Such an interpretation is against reason and in contempt of justice. Our intervention brought peace, it is true, but it was the peace that reigned at Warsaw.

UNSATISFACTORY.

Mr. President, I profoundly regret that I can find nothing in the grounds put forward to justify the President's course which is satisfactory to my mind. If the Administration is really innocent of wrongdoing, the facts are woefully unkind to the Administration. The things proved, to say nothing of those asserted, put the Government on the defensive. They tend strongly to show that we were in some way, some discreditable way, a party to the Panama insurrection. And if so, what do you think about it?

There was a conspiracy of Panamanians against Colombia. They conspired to dismember that Republic. Their plans were matured, or partly matured, in the United States. These men were traitors who staked their lives on the cast of the die. And if it be true, no matter how disguised, that high officials of our Government, conscious of the designs of these conspirators against a friendly nation, an American republic, had secret audiences with them, receiving confidences and imparting knowledge, what do you think about it?

Mr. President, we may secure an isthmian canal as the result of these embroilments, which we could have better obtained without them. But what a pitiful chapter will our connection with this insurrection be in the history of our country! The insurrection itself was venal and selfish. It was not a struggle for liberty, but for greed. Generals, admirals, and civil officers serving in Panama, now lauded as patriots, were bribed with cash to support the insurrection. Protesting loyalty to the central government, they accepted bribes to betray it. I make this statement on the authority of the Globe-Democrat, the most strenuous Republican journal in the Mississippi Valley, whose special correspondent in Panama, vouched for as a gentleman of high intelligence and integrity, makes the accusation with the utmost detail, giving the names of the traitors and the amounts received for their treachery.

Sir, if a weak, brave people oppressed should outstretch their hands to us with a cry for liberty upon their lips, and we should go to the rescue, it would be a noble act. But to aid, in whatever way, a band of lawless conspirators in an attack upon a sister republic, that they and we might promote a mere commercial enterprise of common interest to both, is to do something I would rather should not be written in American history. We can not afford to become marauders and plunder weaker nations. A giant we are, indeed, but we should not use our strength brutally, like a giant. Good morals forbid it anywhere, and, in addition, a wise self-interest forbids it on this hemisphere.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri will suspend for one moment while the Chair lays before the Senate the Calendar of General Orders.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator from Missouri will be allowed to complete his remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the Senator from Missouri be allowed to proceed. The Chair hears no objection. The Senator from Missouri will proceed.

OUR TRUE POLICY.

Mr. STONE. The true policy of this Government with reference to the republics south of us would lead us on different and higher lines. We should so comport ourselves as to inspire the unhesitating confidence of our neighbors. They should not stand in dread of our power, but rely upon it as a shield for their protection. We should link them to us by bonds of mutual amity and interest. What boot is the Monroe doctrine to them if it stands only to guard them against European aggression, while the door is open for us to invade at pleasure?

If I could be potent in shaping our policy in this behalf, I would be governed by one supreme consideration—that of attracting the southern republics to us by a course instinct with the spirit of candor, justice, and fair play. I would enter into such compacts with them as would promote our commercial relations and make them for all practical purposes, offensive and defensive, a part of us. I would strive to inaugurate great republican policies of government—monetary, commercial, and political—common to all America, and these I would oppose, if need be, to the monarchical policies of the Old World. But that is a dream—an iridescent dream—while our Government goes careering under the impulse of rough-riding strenuosity.

CONCLUSION.

Mr. President, we should have the truth, are entitled to the truth, and the whole truth, about these transactions. I would hope that the whole truth, when known, would vindicate our good name, but we should have it anyhow to the end that we may act intelligently and in the interest of justice and national honor. Senators, ever mindful of that high independence which should characterize their conduct, should not turn aside from the straight path of duty, and, to serve a party exigency, suppress the truth, or any part of it, to shield any man from his folly. To call on the President for information, to be given if in his judgment compatible with the public interest, is not sufficient, and certainly not in the present case, where the personnel of the Administration is most affected. The Senate should inquire in its own way and through its own agencies. A direct charge of wrongdoing is unnecessary; but grave suspicions are abroad, and unhappily they seem to be warranted by the facts.

Of course you can refuse to inquire, and if you do I suppose we will have to accept and be governed here by what may be voluntarily given us from official sources. But I shall protest against being confined to information coming from those upon whom suspicion rests and who are interested, if any are, in suppressing or coloring the facts for self-vindication. If I shall be compelled to vote on the ratification of this treaty without full information as to all the occurrences out of which the treaty has come, I shall do so with a feeling of doubt as to my duty, because uncertain to what extent the honor of the country is involved.

Mr. President, unless some Senator desires to speak upon the resolution I shall ask——

Mr. STEWART. I should like to make a few remarks right now.

Mr. STONE. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What request did the Senator from Missouri make as to the resolution?

Mr. STONE. I said that if no Senator desired to speak upon it at this time I would ask that it might go over subject to call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Subject to the call of the Senator——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from Nevada is going to speak.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Or that it lie on the table without prejudice?

Mr. STEWART. I should like to make a few remarks.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Nevada desires to be heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As soon as the Senator from Nevada has finished his remarks, the Chair will have that disposition made of it if the Senate is willing. The Senator from Nevada is entitled to the floor.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the honor of the country is assailed under a misapprehension of facts. After the Spanish rule in Central America was broken, a confederacy was formed between Panama, Colombia, Venezuela, and Ecuador. This confederacy, as the records will show, was for common defense against foreign aggression. There was a full recognition of the right of secession.

In 1846 a treaty was formed between this confederacy, which was then known as New Granada, and the United States. By this treaty the New Granadan Government grants to the Government of the United States—> the right of way or transit across the Isthmus of Panama upon any modes of communication that now exist or that may be hereafter constructed shall be open and free to the Government and citizens of the United States.

And the United States—> guarantees the rights of sovereignty and property which New Granada has and possesses over the said territory.

Venezuela seceded from the confederacy of New Granada. Afterwards Ecuador did the same. Another confederacy was then formed between Colombia and Panama, having the same object as the former confederacy, namely, defense against foreign aggression.

THE RIGHT OF SECESSION was expressly reserved in this new confederacy. There was no trade or commercial relations between Panama and Colombia. Over 200 miles of jungle, mountains, and morasses intervene between the city of Panama and Colombia. Contrary to the terms of the confederation, Colombia repudiated the conditions of the compact with Panama and treated Panama as a conquered province or colony, to be governed by satraps appointed at Bogota and to be robbed without any real representation. Of the $250,000 annual payments made by the Panama Railroad for the privilege of crossing the Isthmus, $225,000 was taken to Bogota and the remaining $25,000 absorbed by Government officials in Panama who were appointed at Bogota.

No public improvements were made in Panama, but the vast accumulations from customs and other sources were expended at Bogota. The treatment of the people of Panama by the oligarchy at Bogota was never exceeded by Spain in any of her provinces,

WEYLER'S RULE IN CUBA NOT EXCEPTED.

Uprisings and revolutions were almost continuous from the beginning of 1850 until the final revolution in 1903, whereby Panama acquired her independence. During all this time the influence and authority of the United States were exerted to prevent the rebels of Panama acquiring their independence. It was impossible for the people of Panama to conduct a war for independence without making the transit across the Isthmus the theater of action. The bulk of the population of the Isthmus is at the cities of Panama and Colon and along the line of the Panama Railroad. Fighting at either of these cities or along the line of the road would necessarily interfere with travel and commerce, and the United States stood guard over the only part of the Isthmus where a war for independence could be conducted and thereby upheld and maintained the wicked and tyrannical rule of the oligarchy of Colombia.

I call the Bogota Government an oligarchy because it is governed by military chieftains who abolish constitutions at will. The constitution to which the people of Panama agreed was abolished by Colombia because it restrained the rapacity of Bogota.

In 1886 Mr. V. O. King, United States minister to Colombia, in a dispatch to the Secretary of State of the United States, gives a fair specimen of the manner in which the Bogota Government treated constitutions. He says:

> At the close of the late revolution President Nunez, whose term of office had then nearly expired and whose reelection was forbidden by the constitution then in force, issued a proclamation annulling that instrument and declaring an interregnum in the Government. He appointed provisional governors in all of the nine States, and directed them to nominate two delegates each, who, together, should constitute a national council to convene at the capital.
> On assembling in November, 1885, the first acts of this body were to ratify the conduct of Doctor Nunez and to confirm his appointments. It then elected him as chief magistrate of the nation for the term of six years, and proceeded to formulate a projet of fundamental principles for a new constitution to be submitted to the corporate vote of the municipal boards of aldermen throughout the country. Upon canvassing the returns the council declared a majority of such votes to be in favor of the new constitution, and thereupon proceeded to elaborate the instrument that is herewith submitted, which, from the number, fullness, and precision of the precepts enunciated, has left but little of the machinery to be devised by the executive or legislative power.

Who will say that such proceedings as this did not justify Panama in her fifty attempts to throw off

THE DESPOTIC RULE OF COLOMBIA?

Who can say that these revolutions would not have been successful if the influence and arms of the United States had not been used against the rebels in order to keep open the transit? Why did Colombia constantly call upon the United States to put down the rebellions on the Isthmus? Was it wrong, after the usurping President Marroquin and his coworkers had rejected the treaty for a canal without debate, after it had been given out from high sources in Bogota that twenty-five millions were wanted from the United States, besides the forty millions that this country was about to pay the French company, for the President of the United States to refuse to suppress another revolution on the Isthmus? Was it wrong, after the delegates from Panama at Bogota had given notice that there would be a renewed attempt on the part of Panama for independence, for the President to direct our ships to Panama and Colon

TO PROTECT THE INTERESTS OF THE UNITED STATES?

Was it wrong, when the soldiers of Colombia were threatening the lives of our people and the destruction of the property of citizens of the United States, for the President to cause troops to be landed for the protection of the lives and property of Americans? Who will say that the new Republic was not justified in getting rid of Colombia's soldiers, sent there for their subjection, either by killing them or bribing them or by any other method known to civilized warfare?

Six days after the revolution in Panama our minister, Mr. Beaupré, sent the following dispatch to the Secretary of State:

> Knowing that the revolution has already commenced in Panama, * * * says that if the Government of the United States will land troops to preserve Colombian sovereignty and the transit, if requested by the Colombian chargé d'affaires, this Government will declare martial law, and by virtue of vested constitutional authority, when public order is disturbed, will approve, by decree, the ratification of the canal treaty as signed, or, if the Government of the United States prefers, will call extra session of Congress and new and friendly members next May to approve the treaty.

Would it have been right for the Administration to have acted on this dispatch and overthrown the government at Panama and reinstated the sovereignty of the usurper Marroquin? This seems to be the view taken by those who criticise the President. Is it possible? Has it come to this, that the President of the United States can do no right and that the usurper Marroquin, who rules by the sword, can do no wrong? The appeal of Marroquin to the Administration having failed, he is not without hope. Ex-Consul Smythe says that he was authorized by President Marroquin to quote him as saying that—

> The people of Colombia still hope that actual conflict may be averted through Democratic intervention in the Senate. Personally, I count on the assistance of the Democratic party and the great American people to save the sacred rights of Colombia, which have been so scandalously wounded.

I do not believe that President Marroquin is as familiar with the views of the Democratic party as he claims to be. If he should have the question put to any Democrat aspiring to be elected President next fall, does he suppose that such Democrat would take sides with Colombia against the United States? It is true that the President of the United States was elected Vice-President, and became President on the death of the Chief Executive, as provided by the Constitution. It is equally true that President Marroquin was either elected or proclaimed Vice-President of Colombia, and became President by ejecting the Chief Executive, and by means of a bloody revolution has remained in office. It is natural for such a man to want to trade with the United States for the restoration of Panama, in consideration of the ratification of the treaty by Colombia. No one is surprised at his proposition and ratify the treaty, because that appears to be a customary practice in our so-called sister Republic. The case is different, however, with the Democratic party of the United States. It is patriotic, believes in law, order, and constitutional government. Marroquin has no more chance to gain even the sympathy of the Democrats of the United States for his vile practices than he has to influence the Administration to make war on the Republic of Panama in order to give him another chance to exact tribute for transit across the Isthmus.

TO ABOLISH THE CONSTITUTION

The Government of the United States and all the leading governments of the world have recognized the independence of Panama as an established fact. If the influence of the United States was exerted to aid Panama in establishing that Government, which is not proved, what wrong has been done? The people of the United States detest tyranny, oppression, and robbery of a struggling people. Those who are familiar with the history of the Isthmus for the last fifty years have felt keenly the injustice of the use of the power of the United States to prevent the people of Panama from asserting their rights. There will be no mourning on the part of the people of the United States because the Government of Colombia overstepped the mark and demanded too much blackmail from the United States and the French company. If twenty-five millions and forty millions more on account of the French company was a larger tribute than she was capable of collecting, will any just man be sorry that she failed?

I PROTEST AGAINST CHARGING DISHONOR

upon this Government for the refusal of the Administration to longer lend the power of the United States to the tyrants and plunderers at Bogota. It is sufficient while Colombia was in possession, through her satraps, of the Isthmus of Panama, for the United States to overawe and suppress insurrection which would interfere with the right of way secured by the treaty of 1846, but when Panama, without firing a gun, was able to acquire peaceful possession of the Isthmus, was it not the duty of the Government of the United States to see to it that the transit across the Isthmus was not disturbed by a foreign foe from Colombia? Was it not the duty of the United States to protect the lives and property of American citizens peaceably residing upon the Isthmus, as they rightfully might?

I do not believe that the people of this country will for a moment sympathize with the complaints of Colombia. She has lost no property. She has lost no territory. The people of Panama have simply asserted their right to property and right to territory. By the compact she formed with Colombia her right of secession was secured. If the exercise of that right has long been delayed on account of the influence of the United States, Panama has not lost that right. This Administration need not to approve its Panama policy. That policy has already been approved by the nations of the world in their speedy recognition of the Government of Panama. If by the honest and patriotic course of the Administration the United States have acquired a right of way to build the canal across the Isthmus, who has been injured? The people want the canal. The folly and extravagance of Colombia cleared the way. The new Government has granted the rights and privileges which are necessary in the vast undertaking of connecting the two oceans by a waterway. Civilization and progress and the aspirations of the American people are promoted by the action of the Administration. I have no intention to discuss details, but I felt called upon to enter my protest against reflections upon the honor of this Government based upon a total misapprehension of facts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the first bill on the Calendar.

Mr. STONE. I inquire, Mr. President, what disposition has been made of the resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is on the table, subject to the Senator's call.

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE RELATIVE TO PANAMA, ETC.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I think the resolution introduced yesterday, which came over until to-day, ought to be laid before the Senate at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour for laying resolutions before the Senate has passed. The Calendar of General Orders is now the regular order.

Mr. CULBERSON. That resolution, then, goes over until to morrow, holding its place, as I understand?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It holds its place under the ruling the Chair made a short time ago, that every resolution was entitled to a day in court.

Mr. CULBERSON. In that case, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to correct a word in the resolution, so that it may be reprinted by to-morrow. In line 7, after the word "representatives" the word "of" should be stricken out and the word "or" inserted. The resolution is printed correctly in the RECORD, but in the resolution printed by order of the Senate there is an error, and so I ask that the resolution may be reprinted in correct form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the resolution will be reprinted with the correction the Senator has made.

MEMORIAL BRIDGE ACROSS THE POTOMAC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the first bill on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 820) to provide for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from Washington to the Arlington estate property was announced as first in order.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I do not think we can dispose of that bill this morning. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over for the present, retaining its place.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would simply say in that connection that a similiar bill has passed the Senate two or three times. The bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia. I will not insist, as, of course, I can not insist, that it shall not go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One objection does not lie against a bill on the Calendar of General Orders after 2 o'clock.

Mr. GALLINGER. I beg the Chair's pardon. I had overlooked that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is for the Senate to decide whether or not it will proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no doubt the Senate will pass this bill in the near future, and I think we might as well act upon it to-day as at any other time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is there a report accompanying that bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. MARTIN December 11, 1903, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 820) to provide for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from Washington to the Arlington estate property, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill has the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, as will appear by the following letter:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, December 7, 1903.

SIR: The Commissioners have the honor to recommend favorable action upon Senate bill 820 (58th Cong., 1st sess.), "To provide for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from Washington to the Arlington estate property," which was referred to them at your instance for their examination and report.

They have for the past three years annually recommended a similar proposition to Congress as a memorial to American patriotism. It has been recommended by the President of the United States and has the active support of patriotic organizations and citizens all over the United States. During the meeting of the national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic at Washington, from October 5 to 9, 1902, a fine corner stone for the memorial bridge was presented by the Stonecutters' Union of the District of Columbia and accepted by the Secretary of War upon the recommendation of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Very respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
President of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I do not think we ought to provide for the erection of a memorial bridge without Congress itself passing on the plans. There has been a great deal of criticism about the plans that have heretofore been prepared and submitted for this memorial bridge; and this bill proposes to put the decision, as I understand it, of the plans for the construction of the bridge solely in the hands of the Secretary of War. It seems to me that when we are about to enter upon a work, the importance of which I think I fully recognize, Congress ought to know what kind of a bridge is to be constructed, and not, as the years go by, have the whole country feeling that a mistake has been made in the character and appearance of the bridge.

I have every confidence in the present Secretary of War, but he is not an engineer; I have every confidence in the incoming Secretary of War, but he is not an engineer, and I, myself, do not feel that I can vote for a bill which conclusively appropriates $5,000,000—although only $500,000 is carried in this bill—for a bridge, which is to be approved by any one man.

I think that what ought to be done is to appropriate $500,000 to enable the Secretary of War to secure the plans and make report to Congress, and then let Congress determine what plans shall be selected for the construction of the bridge. If we do not adopt such a course, I think we will regret it hereafter.

Of course I do not intend to go through all the controversy that there has been about the plans; but there has been such controversy about the plans that no bridge has been yet constructed. The difficulty about it, as I understand, has been that the plans which have been presented have met with such opposition—some of them, not all of them—from parties who have experience and talent in relation to such matters that it has not been possiule to reconcile the different views as to the plans for the bridge.

I saw one plan, Mr. President, which it was supposed would be accepted and the bridge built according to it, and with my little knowledge on the subject and from what I could gather by looking at the picture of it, it seemed to me to be entirely improper.

I do not know that I desire to say anything more about it. I want to vote against this bill. I would vote for a bill which directed the Secretary of War to call for plans and gave him $500,000 with which to secure those plans and then left to Congress the determination of the question.

Now, I suppose it will be said that when the plans come to Congress there will be a difference of opinion about them. I suppose there will be, but, if that be so, I think we had better wait before beginning the construction of this bridge until we can get some one plan which will receive the acquiescence of a majority of Congress, to say the least, and the plans being submitted and the report made to Congress, if a majority of Congress is not ready to adopt any of them, then I think it would be worth while to try it over again and get some other plans.

Mr. President, I did not intend to say a word about this measure. I made the objection, and I thought the bill would go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is under Rule VIII where objection is made that a bill goes over.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I know that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not apply to bills under Rule IX.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. This bill involves something more than the building of a bridge to drive carriages over from this side of the river to the Arlington estate. It involves the whole plan for the beautification of this great capital city of the nation, and a plan of bridge ought to be selected with reference to the whole subject of the improvement of the city of Washington. To have a bridge that would be inharmonious would be a thing that we should forever regret. It is for that reason that I think we ought not to put the final determination of what plan shall be finally adopted into the hands of any one man or that it should be subject to the decision of any one man.

What more capacity has the Secretary of War to accept a plan and to proceed to expend $5,000,000 to construct a bridge according to that plan than has the President of the Senate or, indeed, any Senator?

I do not know that I desire to say anything more about the bill, but what I fear is, that if this bill in its present form is passed, in the future we are very likely to regret that Congress ever gave into the hands of a single individual the right to say what that bridge should be, what its plans should be, and what its appearance should be. I want to vote against it, and I will call for the yeas and nays, so as to have an opportunity to record my vote.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, the proposition for the construction of a bridge from Washington to the Arlington estate has been before the Senate quite a number of times in the last few years, and the difficulty has always been to agree upon some plan for the bridge. No Senator, so far as I know, has ever antagonized the purpose of such a bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And I do not now.

Mr. MARTIN. That is just the point to which I wish to invite attention.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that there may be no misunderstanding, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. MARTIN. Cheerfully.

Mr. GALLINGER. In addition to the fact that similar bills have been before the Senate for quite a number of years the Senator will likewise recall the fact that the Senate has passed such bills.

Mr. MARTIN. I was coming to that. Whenever such a bill has been before the Senate, I say it has never been antagonized by any Senator on this floor; but the trouble it has met has always been from those who declare themselves the friends of the measure.

I am not wedded to any particular plan. I want, as other Senators do, the very best plan adopted, in order to have this bridge one such as will meet the useful purpose contemplated and also such as will make it an ornament and a credit to the national capital. I believe every Senator must realize that the two Houses of Congress are not so constituted as to enable them to determine the technical matters involved in the construction of a great bridge.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. MARTIN. I do.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the Senator will allow me, I am in thorough sympathy with the object of the Senator's measure; but there seems to be a great deal of force in the objection made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. There would seem to be some danger in leaving the entire subject to the discretion of one officer of the Government. A plan has occurred to me, which I desire to suggest to the Senator for his consideration. Would it not be better to constitute by the bill a commission, say a commission composed of the President pro tempore of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia of the Senate, and the chairman of the like committee of the House, with the Secretary of War in addition? It seems to me there is a commission in whose discretion Congress might very well leave this subject.

Mr. MARTIN. I will ask the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Connecticut if it would meet their views to say "the President of the United States, on the recommendation of the Secretary of War."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. No.

Mr. MARTIN. A large commission, such as has been suggested, seems to me not only unnecessary, but rather cumbersome, and that it might tend to delay.

If you want to safeguard this measure you must put the responsibility somewhere, and when you put the responsibility on the Secretary of War, it is not his judgment alone that the country will have. He will have the engineer officers of the Government. He will have the architects and the engineers, who will present plans and will argue them before him. Under this bill the field is open to the world, and the War Department would simply be the judge to pass upon the different plans presented. So the talent and skill of the whole country will be availed of.

But we must have some tribunal to decide between the competing plans which will be presented. If Senators do not feel that it is best to leave it to the arbitrament of the Secretary of War, although he will have the assistance of the Staff to aid him, I would gladly, if it meets their views, propose to amend the bill by saying it shall be left to the President of the United States on the recommendation of the Secretary of War.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from Virginia yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MARTIN. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The recent history of all great and successful works of this kind has universally been along the line suggested by my colleague. They have been conducted by a commission, and I think the suggestion will commend itself to everybody. But I suggest this to my colleague and the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Virginia: Why would it not be most expedient and practicable to authorize the Secretary of War to appoint a commission of experts, of which he shall be ex officio the chairman? That simplifies the matter. It reduces it to a matter of art and engineering, and this is a combined work of art and engineering. It pursues——

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am merely making a suggestion. I do not know whether or not it will meet the views of the Senators. It pursues the common course which has been followed in recent years in this and every other country where a great work of art and of engineering skill has been erected. The idea of a commission I think nobody would object to, but I am suggesting whether a commission of three or five experts, appointed by the Secretary of War, would not be a better commission than to have the commission suggested by my colleague.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The objection to that is it takes it out of the control in any way of Congress.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The commission I propose would leave it within the control of Congress, because the majority of the commission would be composed of Senators and Representatives.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I was going to suggest one more thing, and then I am through. This is merely by way of suggestion. And that the plan reported upon by this commission shall be referred to Congress. That would be the plan which has universally been pursued in every great work of combined engineering and art.

Mr. MARTIN. I feel that the bill is sufficiently safeguarded as it is, but, as I say, I am not wedded to any plan. To meet the views of the Senator, I would be willing to have the plan approved by a board. I really think it should be the President of the United States. That would in effect be a board. He would not act without consultation with competent people. He would have his advisers. But I do not object to a board, or to a board to be appointed by the President or the Secretary of War.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not care which one.

Mr. MARTIN. I would not object——

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Virginia permit me?

Mr. MARTIN. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have heretofore cooperated in the committee and on the floor of the Senate with the Senator from Virginia in this matter, as he knows. I have felt it incumbent upon Congress at some time to make provision to construct this bridge, which will be an ornament to the capital city and a credit to the country.

I rose particularly to suggest to the Senator, inasmuch as there is so much difference of opinion, whether it would not be wise to let the bill go over and let the members of the committee confer with other Senators with a view of reaching an agreement as to the form in which this matter shall be put in the bill.

I myself quite sympathize, upon reflection, Mr. President, with the view that it is rather risky to leave the matter in the hands of one officer of the Government, however accomplished he may be, and I think perhaps instead of taking the afternoon in the discussion of the bill, if the Senator will agree with me, we might pass it over to-day and possibly come in the next time the Calendar is reached with an arrangement which will enable us to pass the bill speedily.

Mr. MARTIN. I will act on that suggestion and let the bill be passed over to-day, retaining its place on the Calendar. In the meantime I will confer with the Senators who have expressed their fears about the wisdom of leaving the determination of the plan to one man, and I will be very glad to agree with them upon some board or commission, which shall be named in the bill or the appointment of which shall be authorized in the bill, with power to determine the plan. I consent that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MARTIN. Without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN subsequently said: Since the bill (S. 820) to provide for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from Washington to the Arlington estate property was under consideration a few moments ago and passed over, I have conferred with the Senators who made some suggestions in respect to the bill, and we have agreed upon an amendment which I think will be satisfactory to all Senators. I ask that the Senate may resume the consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 820) to provide for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from Washington to the Arlington estate property.

Mr. MARTIN. I move to amend the bill by inserting in line 8, page 1, after the word "by," the words "a board composed of;" and to further amend it by inserting in line 9, after the word "War," the words "the President pro tempore of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia of the Senate, and the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House of Representatives."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 8, after the words "approved by," insert "a board composed of;" and in line 9, after the word "War," insert "the President pro tempore of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia of the Senate, and the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House of Representatives;" so as to read:

The said bridge to be constructed on a plan to be approved by a board composed of the Secretary of War, the President pro tempore of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia of the Senate, and the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House of Representatives, and not to cost more than $5,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. At the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin, for the sake of better expression, I will offer another slight amendment. I move to strike out the word "have," in line 4, page 1, and to insert in lieu thereof the words "cause to be."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 4, page 1, strike out "have" before the word "constructed" and insert in lieu thereof the words "cause to be;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be constructed a memorial bridge from the most convenient point of the Naval Observatory grounds, or adjacent thereto, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION AND MILITARY RECORD BILLS.

Mr. SCOTT. I notice by the Calendar that at 4 o'clock to-day unobjected bills reported from the Military Affairs Committee to correct records, and also unobjected pension bills, are to be taken up. I would ask the Senate to let us go on with that order now.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think we had better continue with the Calendar of General Orders until that time is reached. There are other bills here which should be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next bill on the Calendar.

EXTRA PAY TO CERTAIN DEPARTMENTAL EMPLOYEES.

The bill (S. 1842) to provide for compensation for certain employees of the Treasury, War, and Navy Departments was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to add at the end of the bill the following:

For executive department, to pay the employees of the executive office, $8,914.10; for certain employees in the offices of the Adjutant-General, Paymaster-General, and Chief of Engineers, War Department, $2,137.90, in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of War, contained in his letter of June 9, 1902; and for clerks employed at headquarters of the Marine Corps, $1,186.98, in accordance with the recommendation of the commandant of said corps and of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to hear the report read, if it is not long.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. STEWART December 16, 1903, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1842) to provide for compensation for certain employees of the Treasury, War, and Navy Departments, having considered the same, make the following report:

A bill similar to S. 1842, but including an additional provision for payment of employees of the Executive Office (White House), passed the Senate at the first session of last Congress and was also incorporated by this committee in the "omnibus bill," so called ("For allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims, etc."), at last session. Since the passage of the bill by the Senate additional recommendations have been made by the War and Navy Departments covering certain War Department and Marine Corps employees, and your committee has added to this bill provision for these employees.

As this committee's report, made during the first session of the last Congress on a similar bill which passed the Senate, well states the facts in this case, your committee adopt the same as their report on the bill under consideration, with the addition of the recommendations as to the employees of the White House and certain War Department and Marine Corps employees, and report back S. 1842 with the following amendment:

Add to the provisions of the bill the following (p. 2, line 7, after the word "cents"):

"for Executive Department, to pay the employees of the Executive Office, $8,914.10; for certain employees in the offices of the Adjutant-General, Paymaster-General, and Chief of Engineers, War Department, $2,137.90, in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of War, contained in his letter of June 9, 1902; and for clerks employed at headquarters of the Marine Corps, $1,186.98, in accordance with the recommendation of the Commandant of said Corps and of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy."

With this amendment your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

[Senate Report No. 777, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1694) to provide for compensation for certain employees of the Treasury, War, and Navy Departments, having considered the same, submit the following report:

This bill provides for the compensation of certain employees of the Treasury, War, and Navy Departments for the extra hours they worked during the period of the Spanish war, and is carrying out the earnest recommendations of the Secretaries of the Treasury, War, and Navy Departments, which recommendations are printed herewith as an appendix to this report.

An amendment to the general deficiency bill of last session providing for this compensation for certain employees of the War Department was favorably reported by your committee at last session and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, but no action was taken by the Senate upon it.

The extra services rendered by the employees of the three Departments mentioned, for which compensation is provided in the pending bill, are well described in the recommendation of the Secretary of War to Congress dated January 11, 1899, which statement also applies to the services of the Treasury and Navy Department employees, viz:

"The conditions created by the war with Spain rendered it necessary that the clerks and other employees should work regardless of hours, in order to the performance of the immense amount of clerical work devolved upon the Department, and consequently they have worked by night as well as by day, including Sundays and legal holidays. With a spirit of cheerfulness they responded to every demand made upon them, and labored with industry and zeal, sacrificing health, comfort, and personal convenience to the performance of duty. Under these circumstances it seems to be a measure of justice that these employees should be compensated for the excessive and arduous services thus rendered."

The present Secretary of War has supplemented this recommendation. His recommendation is printed in the appendix.

The day's labor for Government employees in the Departments is fixed by law at seven hours, to wit, from 9 o'clock a. m. to 4 o'clock p. m. (sec. 7 of act approved March 15, 1898). While the strict letter of the law permits the head of a Department, by special order, to extend the hours of work for employees, your committee believe that the labor, inconvenience, and hardships attending such extra work constitute strong equities for extra compensation. On this point the Secretary of War, in his recommendation of January 11, 1899, says:

"The fact that the law referred to establishes the hours of labor would seem to justify the belief that it was not the intention of Congress that the prescribed hours should be permanently or indefinitely extended without additional compensation, but that the provision was designed to meet any sudden or temporary emergency that might arise."

The policy of Congress in connection with extra work performed by Government employees is shown in the following joint resolution, approved February 25, 1899, providing for the payment to certain laborers, workmen, and mechanics at United States navy-yards and stations of 50 per cent additional pay for work performed in excess of their regular hours.

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay 50 per cent additional for all work in excess of eight hours per diem performed by laborers, workmen, and mechanics whose compensation is fixed upon a basis of eight hours per diem, and who, between March 18, 1898, and October 31, 1898, were employed at any United States navy-yard or naval station, and who worked in excess of eight hours per day and have not already received said additional compensation; the amount due each laborer, workman, and mechanic affected by the above to be based upon the time records of the several bureaus at the navy-yard or naval station where the work was performed."

This 50 per cent granted to the navy-yard employees was additional pay (they having already been paid the regular rates for every extra hour's work done), and was for extra work performed during the Spanish war, in the same manner as the extra work performed by the employees of the Treasury, War, and Navy Departments, for which compensation is now asked.

The following are the regulations of the Secretary of the Navy under which extra work is now performed in the navy-yards:

"(2) The following rules shall be observed for estimating the pay of laborers, workmen, and mechanics for work performed in excess of eight hours per day and for work performed outside of yard hours:

"(a) For work performed, by reason of extraordinary emergency, in excess of eight hours per day, the ordinary rate of pay, with 50 per cent additional, shall be allowed.

"(b) Men employed in relays shall be paid at the rate allowed for day work, whether they work by day or at night.

"(c) For work performed on Sundays or legal holidays the ordinary rate of pay, with 50 per cent additional, shall be allowed.

"(d) The foregoing provisions relate solely to laborers, workmen, and mechanics whose compensation has been fixed upon a basis of eight hours per day, and have no application to employees whose ordinary duties require their presence before or after yard hours, at night, on Sundays, or on legal holidays, and whose compensation has been fixed with reference to the irregular and unusual character of their employment."

The compensation provided for in the bill under consideration is not at a greater rate than regular pay, such as was paid the navy-yard employees and recognized by Congress as just and proper for extra work, but is merely pay at the regular rates for the extra time during which services were rendered.

There seems to be no reason or justice in Congress providing by law for the payment of one class of Government employees for extra work caused by the Spanish war and refusing to pay another class of its employees for extra work caused by the same war.

The following are the Departments' estimates of amounts required by Treasury, War, and Navy Departments to pay the extra compensation as recommended by the heads of said Departments:

Treasury Department	$8,176.02
War Department	108,833.59
Navy Department	42,447.56
Total	159,457.17

In view of the foregoing facts, and the strong recommendations of the Secretaries of the Treasury, War, and Navy Departments, your committee believe that the provisions of S. 1694 are just and proper, and therefore report the said bill back to the Senate with the recommendation that it pass.

APPENDIX.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 12, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the favorable consideration of Congress, communications from the Treasurer of the United States, the Register of the Treasury, and the chief of the division of loans and currency of this office, in regard to obtaining compensation for the employees in their respective offices for the extra services rendered by them in connection with the issue of the 3 per cent loan of 1898, under the provisions of the act of June 13, 1898, said services having been rendered after the hours of 5 p. m. and on Sundays and holidays.

The amount required to be appropriated to meet such extra compensation is $8,176.02, as follows:

Office of Treasurer of the United States	$2,705.59
Office of Register of the Treasury	2,489.75
Division of loans and currency, office of Secretary	2,980.68

Respectfully,

O. L. SPAULDING, Acting Secretary.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 11, 1899.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith petitions from civilian employees in the offices of the Surgeon-General and the Quartermaster-General of the Army, praying that they be granted compensation for the work performed by them in excess of the regular working hours during the war with Spain, said petitions being strongly recommended by the Surgeon-General and the Quartermaster-General, as appears from their respective indorsements thereon.

These petitions apply to only two of the bureaus, although the statements therein presented are applicable alike to other bureaus and offices of this Department.

Section 7 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved March 15, 1898, prescribes the hours of labor for clerks and other employees in the Executive Departments, and provides—

"That the heads of the Departments may, by special order, stating the reason, further extend the hours of any clerk or employee in their Departments, respectively; but in the case of an extension it shall be without additional compensation."

The fact that the law referred to establishes the hours of labor would seem to justify the belief that it was not the intention of Congress that the prescribed hours be permanently or indefinitely extended without additional compensation, but that the provision was designed to meet any sudden or temporary emergency that might arise.

The conditions created by the war with Spain rendered it necessary that the clerks and other employees should work regardless of hours, in order to the performance of the immense amount of clerical work devolved upon the Department, and consequently they have worked by night as well as by day, including Sundays and legal holidays. With a spirit of cheerfulness they responded to every demand made upon them and labored with industry and zeal, sacrificing health, comfort, and personal convenience to the performance of duty. Under these circumstances it seems to be a measure of justice that these employees should be compensated for the excessive and arduous services thus rendered, and I therefore earnestly recommend that provision be made by Congress whereby they may receive just compensation for such services during the period from May 1 to December 31, 1898.

Very respectfully,

R. A. ALGER, Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 20, 1899.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of the Committee on Appropriations, statements showing in detail the number of days' service rendered by the employees of the several bureaus and offices of this Department in excess of the regular working hours and the amount that would be required to pay for such services should Congress decide to make provision for that purpose.

These statements represent an appeal by the employees for compensation for their extra work, and in thus submitting the matter to Congress I deem it not improper to state that were it an appeal simply to a spirit of liberality, for the grant of a gratuity, I should feel inclined to withhold my commendation; but believing it to be based upon justice, it commands my recommendation to favorable consideration.

Since the commencement of the war with Spain these employees have worked early and late, regardless of hours, including Sundays and holidays, with a zeal and fidelity deserving of the highest commendation. The extra services thus rendered were needed by the Government in order to meet the demands imposed upon the Department by the conditions of war, the Government thus becoming the beneficiary. As a consequence of the severe strain thus imposed upon the employees the health of many of them has become impaired, necessitating expense of medical treatment, while all have sacrificed much personal comfort and convenience.

It therefore seems to be only just that the employees who have rendered such faithful and valuable daily services to the Government in excess of the regularly established office hours should be compensated therefor, and I accordingly earnestly recommend that an item may be inserted in the pending deficiency appropriation bill making an appropriation of the amount necessary for that purpose.

Very respectfully,

R. A. ALGER,
Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 1, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith, for transmission to Congress, detailed statement showing the number of days' service rendered by the employees borne upon the regular rolls of the War Department and its bureaus and offices in excess of the regular day's labor of seven hours each, from April 21, 1898, to January 31, 1899, and the total amount required to reimburse the employees for such service should Congress decide to make provision for that purpose.

In submitting this estimate of appropriation it is proper to state that I should not feel inclined to forward the same if it were not believed to be a matter of simple justice to a class of employees who have rendered great service to the Government.

Since the beginning of the war with Spain and up to the present time the clerks of the War Department have labored early and late and with a zeal and fidelity to the interests of the Government worthy of the highest consideration. Such established privileges as the customary leave of absence usually granted by the heads of the Departments and the periodical respite from labor incident to Sundays and legal holidays were quite generally dispensed with in the effort to meet the immense pressure of business brought on by the war.

Some clerks have died, and the health of many has been impaired in direct consequence, it is thought, of the severe strain incident to the continuous and responsible service rendered under trying circumstances and unfavorable conditions. The extra duty was performed by these employees cheerfully and efficiently when greatly needed to meet the demands of war, and it does not seem appropriate that the Government should accept the same as a gratuity from the employees of the War Department, many of whom are poorly paid in comparison with those employed elsewhere in the departmental service.

This measure was inaugurated by my predecessor, a copy of whose letter, addressed to Congress at its last session, is herewith inclosed. There are numerous precedents for such action, a list of which is also herewith inclosed, and it will prove but an act of justice to faithful public servants, who, in my opinion, are fully entitled to the favorable consideration of Congress in this respect. The measure commands my favorable consideration and hearty approval.

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of War.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 23, 1900.

SIR: In view of the fact that recommendations have been made by the honorable the Secretary of the Treasury and the honorable the Secretary of War for an appropriation to pay the employees in those Departments for services rendered in excess of office hours between January 1, 1898, and June 30, 1899, by reason of the increase of work due to the war with Spain, I have the honor to ask, in case these recommendations are favorably considered, that the same consideration may be extended to employees of the Navy Department who have rendered like services. The Bureau of Navigation has prepared an estimate with reference to employees of that Bureau, which I inclose, and I have authorized the other bureaus to furnish estimates also for similar transmission.

It has occurred to me that if this form of remuneration should not meet the approval of your committee it would be proper to consider whether or not the same plan might be adopted that is sometimes adopted with reference to employees in the Senate and House of Representatives: that is, to make an appropriation for paying an extra month's or more months' salary.

Very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, November 25, 1901.

SIR: Replying to your letter of the 8th instant, in which you refer to the suggestion made by this Department in its letter to the Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, March 28, 1900, relative to compensation of employees in this Department for services rendered in excess of office hours between January 1, 1898, and June 30, 1899, and request to be furnished with an estimate, for the use of the Committee on Claims, showing the aggregate amount required for each bureau to pay one month's extra pay to the employees who may be entitled to extra compensation, I have the honor to inform you that it is estimated that the following amounts will be required under each bureau and office of the Navy Department for the purpose mentioned, viz:

Office of Secretary of Navy (omitting Secretary and Assistant Secretary)	$3,402.02
Bureau of Yards and Docks	914.24
Bureau of Equipment	1,216.88
Bureau of Navigation	2,865.98
Bureau of Ordnance	1,767.80
Bureau of Construction and Repair	7,988.40
Bureau of Steam Engineering	3,094.32
Bureau of Supplies and Accounts	5,061.60
Bureau of Medicine and Surgery	913.72
Office of Judge-Advocate-General	1,039.96
Office of Naval War Records	1,318.80
Library, Navy Department	219.80
Hydrographic Office	7,759.40
Naval Observatory	3,191.60
Nautical Almanac Office	1,354.00
Office of Naval Intelligence	859.04
Total	42,447.56

Referring to the bill you propose to introduce at the coming session of Congress, providing for the payment of these extra war-time services of the employees of the Treasury, War, and Navy Departments jointly, the following is suggested for incorporation therein, in order to make an equitable distribution:

All clerks who have been employed during the entire period, January 1, 1898, to June 30, 1899, shall be allowed one month's extra pay. Those employed for a shorter period shall have one-eighteenth of a month's pay for each month or fraction of a month employed during said period.

Very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM M. STEWART,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, March 25, 1902.

MY DEAR SIR: I have the honor to submit the following:

During the Spanish-American war nearly the full force of employees of the Executive Office were occupied on their official duties from 9 o'clock each morning until 1 o'clock the following morning, including Sundays. While the extra duties necessary during the first year of an Administration are always anticipated and cheerfully performed, it would seem only just that in this extraordinary case Congress should make an appropriation in compensation for the services rendered by the clerical and messenger force in excess of the customary office hours.

Inclosed I send you detailed statements showing that on the basis of the actual extra service of each employee at the same rate per hour as his regular salary, from April 21, 1898, to January 31, 1899, $5,353.02 would be sufficient to compensate those on the Executive Office rolls, and $2,561.08 additional would provide for those detailed here at that time from Departments. The total amount necessary would be $8,914.10.

I therefore earnestly recommend that $8,914.10 be appropriated by the Congress for this purpose.

Very truly, yours,

GEO. B. CORTELYOU,
Secretary to the President.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS,
United States Senate.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 9, 1902.

SIR: In connection with Senate bill 1694, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, entitled "A bill to provide for compensation for certain employees of the Treasury, War, and Navy Departments," who rendered extra service to the Government during the war with Spain, which passed the Senate May 16, ultimo, and is now pending before the Committee on War Claims, House of Representatives, I have the honor to request that the total amount to be appropriated for the War Department may be increased, in order to provide for extra compensation to certain employees who were inadvertently omitted from the original estimate, as follows:

Office of the Adjutant-General	$31.65
Office of the Paymaster-General	2,097.55
Office of the Chief of Engineers	8.70
Total	2,137.90

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of War.

Hon. THADDEUS M. MAHON,
Chairman Committee on War Claims, House of Representatives.

No. 100.] HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS,
Washington, D. C., May 17, 1902.

SIR: It has been brought to my attention that a bill passed the Senate yesterday (S. 1694) providing one month's extra pay for clerks of the War, Navy, and Treasury Departments who worked overtime during the war with Spain.

This bill contains no provision for the benefit of the clerks employed at these headquarters, day after day, long after office hours, frequently until midnight, during the Spanish-American war, and as their case is equally as deserving as those provided for in the above-mentioned bill, it seems but just that they should be granted the same extra compensation as the clerks in other branches of the Navy Department who performed like duty, and I respectfully recommend that a request be transmitted by the Department to the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives to have the above-mentioned bill so amended when it reaches the House as to provide one month's extra pay for the clerks at these headquarters who performed extra service during the war with Spain, whose names and monthly pay are as follows:

F. R. Hanna, chief clerk, commandant's office	$128.40
J. W. Armstrong, messenger, commandant's office	80.94
W. W. Trail, chief clerk, quartermaster's office	128.40
H. J. Wylie, clerk, quartermaster's office	124.71
L. L. Nicholson, chief clerk, adjutant and inspector's office	128.40
M. A. Nicholson, clerk, adjutant and inspector's office	124.71
J. H. Demeritt, chief clerk, paymaster's office	133.34
H. H. Thompson, clerk, paymaster's office	104.76
Percy F. Archer, clerk, assistant quartermaster's office, Washington	116.66
Daniel Kirby, clerk, assistant quartermaster's office, Philadelphia, Pa.	116.66
Total	1,186.98

Very respectfully,

CHARLES HEYWOOD,
Brigadier-General, Commandant.

The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

[First indorsement.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT, May 19, 1902.

Referred to the honorable the Secretary of the Navy with the recommendation that provision be made in the bill now before Congress for the benefit of the clerks employed at the marine headquarters.

CHAS. H. DARLING, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I have no objection to the bill, but I wish to ask the Senators who reported it and who are responsible for it if this is a correct statement of the whole thing: Certain clerks and employees of the Government, whose regular period of work is embraced within the arduous hours of 9 to 4, during a war that the country was engaged in, worked something overtime, and this bill is for the purpose of paying them extra for working overtime, beyond those hours—9 to 4—during war. Is that it?

Mr. STEWART. That is it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, this is a bill to pay employees who were asked to volunteer and render extra services. They were not forced to do it, but they were told that the Departments were behind in their work. The heads of the several Departments asked these volunteers if they would work from 9 to 5 in the day and return at 7 and work till 10 in the evening. These employees worked in this way for months, including many of them Sundays and holidays. This is to pay them not 50 per cent extra, as has been provided in some cases—the Navy Department, for instance, as to its employees at times—but is to pay them the same price per hour for the extra that they were paid during the regular hours of the day.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, this bill is certainly a very deserving measure. At the time of the Spanish-American war it became my duty, as Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to put into effect a law of Congress within sixteen days in order that the people all over this great country might have stamps to carry on business legally. In order to do that I had to ask for volunteers in that department, and many of them worked twenty hours a day, especially those who were engaged in sending out by express packages of stamps. They worked on Sundays. They worked on the Fourth of July. They were willing workers. If it had not been for those people the business of this country would have come to a standstill, because it would have been impossible to get the stamps out in time to transact the business of the country. There ought not to be a word of objection to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Ought not the title to be amended, as the executive department is included by the amendment which has been agreed to? I suggest the addition of the words "and for other purposes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title will be amended as suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for compensation for certain employees of the Treasury, War, and Navy Departments, and for other purposes."

Mr. GALLINGER. That will do.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN DESERT-LAND ENTRYMEN.

The bill (S. 147) for the relief of persons who made the first payment for desert lands under the act of March 3, 1877, but who were unable to perfect entry thereof, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. CLARK of Wyoming December 16, 1903, which is as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 147) for the relief of persons who made the first payment for desert lands under the act of March 3, 1877, but who were unable to perfect entry thereof, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report it back with the recommendation that it do pass.

A similar bill was introduced in the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress. It passed the Senate, but failed in the House. The following report was made on a bill, identical with the present measure, introduced in the Fifty-sixth Congress. It is adopted as the report of the committee.

[Senate Report No. 1206, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session.]

If this bill shall pass and become a law, the loss and gain account between the Government on the one side and the entryman on the other would stand about as follows:

1. The Government loses nothing whatever. It simply pays back some of the money it received several years ago, without interest on the same, for which it gave no thing or value whatever.

2. The Government gains (a) the use of this money since paid in up to the time of proposed repayment; (b) a cancellation against each entryman of his desert-entry right, in that the entryman can not again enter desert lands.

As to the settler, it is different. His losses are:

1. His desert-entry right has been exhausted.

2. He will have lost the use of his money during the intervening years.

3. And a point of much more importance, he will have lost all the money expended in improvements upon the forfeited land, such as ditches, fences, buildings, etc., because the land has reverted to the Government.

The proposed measure restores some part of the losses of the settler by returning to him a part of the gains of the Government; but even after this measure of partial justice the advantages are still with the Government as against the entryman.

In many of the Western States and Territories there were vast areas of public lands which in their natural condition were arid and unproductive and to which the preemption, homestead, and other existing land laws were so inapplicable that no effort was made to acquire title to them under these laws. It was known that portions of these lands possessed a rich soil, and if subject to artificial irrigation would become highly productive.

As an inducement to their reclamation the act of March 3, 1877, was passed, whereby it was provided that any citizen of the United States, or person who had declared his intention to become such, could, upon payment of 25 cents per acre, file a declaration under oath with the register and receiver of the local land office, announcing his intention to reclaim a stated tract of desert land not exceeding one section, by conducting water upon the same, and that at any time within three years thereafter, upon making satisfactory proof of the reclamation of the tract, and upon the payment of the additional sum of $1 per acre, the claimant could obtain a patent for the land. This act was by its terms made applicable to "all lands, exclusive of timber lands and mineral lands, which will not, without irrigation, produce some agricultural crop."

The circular of instructions issued by the General Land Office March 12, 1877 (4 Copp's L. O., 22), clearly recognized the assignability of desert-land claims. By those instructions local land officers were directed to issue a certificate to desert declarants, in which it was certified "that if within three years from the date hereof the said ——— ———, or his assignee or legal representatives, shall satisfactorily prove that the said land has been reclaimed by carrying water thereon, and shall pay to the receiver the additional sum of $1 per acre for the land above described, he or they shall be entitled to receive a patent therefor under the provisions of the said act."

Acting under these instructions assignments of desert-land claims were sustained by the General Land Office, and this practice was continued until about April 15, 1880, when the Secretary of the Interior, in the case of S. W. Downey (vol. 7, C. L. O., p. 26), held that desert-land claims were not assignable, and that purchasers thereof secured no right or title thereto.

On account of the former rulings, however, assignments of desert-land claims, where made prior to April 15, 1880, were recognized, subject to the qualification that, whether by original claim or by assignment, one could only acquire title to 640 acres under the desert act. (Peter French et al., 5 L. D., 19; Henry W. Fuss, ibid., 167; Riggan v. Riley, ibid., 595.) Thus, if the assignee had exercised his right to an original desert claim he was not permitted to take anything under an assignment of another, even though that was not the rule when the assignment was made; and if he held an original claim of his own making, and had secured another by assignment, he was necessarily compelled to elect which claim he would perfect title under and to forego the other, although that was not the rule when his original claim was made or when he secured the other by assignment.

Congress has since, in the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat., 1095), expressly authorized assignments of desert claims, but this gives no relief against the prior cancellation of such claims.

In Webster v. Luther (163 U. S., 331) and Beley v. Naphtaly (169 U. S., 353) it is held by the Supreme Court that assignments are valid where the act granting a right of entry contains no restriction against assignment, and this notwithstanding prior rulings of the Land Department to the contrary. The desert act of March 3, 1877, contained no restriction against assignment, and had the decisions of the Supreme Court just referred to been made before the passage of the act of March 3, 1877, doubtless the Department would have recognized such assignments, as under the court's decisions it now seems it ought to have done.

The rulings of the Land Department as to what were desert lands within the meaning of the act of March 3, 1877, were not uniform. By said circular of March 12, 1877, the proof upon this point was to be made to the satisfaction of the registers and receivers, and the proof accompanying many declaratory statements was accepted as satisfactory by these officers and the filing allowed by them upon the first payment being made, and afterwards the claims canceled because the land filed upon produced a small but natural growth of grass or because of a small but natural growth of trees upon some minor portion thereof, and this even though the grass or trees were of no appreciable value.

A growth of mesquite, which is recognized to be of as little value and use as sagebrush, was for a long time held by the Land Department to be timber, and therefore to except the land from the operation of this act, while subsequent decisions of the courts in several Western States and Territories hold that mesquite can not be recognized as timber, and this is now the ruling of the Land Office.

The departmental rulings permitted a small amount of nonirrigable land to be included in a desert claim where the topography of the country was such that the land susceptible of irrigation could not be taken, including some which was nonirrigable, but the application of this rule varied widely from time to time, and the presence of the same amount of nonirrigable land was held permissible in some instances and not permissible in others, the claims being canceled in the latter.

The rulings with respect to compactness of the land included in a desert claim were shifting and contradictory, as clearly appears in the cases of William Thompson (8 L. D., 104) and J. H. Christensen (9 L. D., 302). Claims which were in full conformity with the rulings existing when the claims were initiated were subsequently canceled because not in conformity with later and changed rulings.

In many localities in the arid States there was an abundance of land with good soil but scarcity of water, and in the effort, under this statute, to reclaim and make productive and valuable lands which otherwise were altogether unproductive and without value, more land was filed upon than could be reclaimed and irrigated with the available water supply. The result was that those who originally held or who afterwards obtained the prior water rights were able to perfect their desert claims and others were unable to perfect theirs. In some instances the project for conducting water to the land from remote places proved more difficult and expensive than at first contemplated, and had to be abandoned. In given localities the presence of alkali or of too much sand in the soil prevented successful reclamation and cultivation, necessitating abandonment of the claim.

In all these cases, however, the claimant was required to make, and did make, the first payment—ordinarily 25 cents per acre, but within the primary limits of a railroad land grant 50 cents per acre; and in those cases where the claim was subsequently canceled under the rulings or circumstances referred to, the Government still retains the land and also holds the first payment thereon.

This recitation of these changing and conflicting rulings of the Land Department is not intended as a reflection upon the officers of that department, upon whom devolved the difficult task of administering the act of March 3, 1877, which was altogether unlike any preceding land law and the rational application of which could only be developed and ascertained by long experience and observation in its practical administration. Such recitation, however, does show that the correct method of administering and applying the act was learned at great cost to the claimants thereunder, and that the errors and imperfections in its earlier administration fell heavily upon them.

Your committee believe that in all cases where the desert-land claimant failed to obtain title to the land, from whatever cause it may have happened, if not from his own fraudulent or unlawful act, the first payment should be repaid to him, his heirs or assigns. The Government itself has lost nothing, and it can not in equity and justice retain this money for which the claimant, without fault upon his part, has received no benefit.

There is no occasion to extend the provisions of the bill to desert claims under the act of 1891, because (1) since that act assignments have been recognized in conformity with its express direction, and (2) before the time of that enactment the rulings of the Land Department as to what is desert land, as to including small areas of nonirrigable land, as to compactness of the claim, and other matters had become uniform and were set forth in circulars and regulations so that claimants and subordinate land officers were given such full information as to render impossible the mistakes incident to the administration of the earlier act.

Mr. BERRY. The Secretary read "Committee on Public Lands." The bill came from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WARREN. No.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No.

Mr. WARREN. That is a misprint. It comes from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BERRY. It is on the Calendar as coming from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator has the wrong report.

Mr. WARREN. No; the Calendar does state that it came from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BERRY. That is what it says.

Mr. WARREN. But it was considered and reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Indiana is mistaken.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from Indiana is not mistaken as to the Calendar and as to the report before him; and if the Senator from Arkansas has before him a report which refers to another bill——

Mr. LODGE (to Mr. BEVERIDGE). It is on the Calendar as coming from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BERRY. It is Order of Business 121—a bill (S. 147) for the relief of persons who made the first payment for desert lands under the act of March 3, 1877, but who were unable to perfect entry thereof. [December 16, 1903.—Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, Committee on Claims, without amendment. (Report No. 120.)]

Mr. WARREN. But the report itself states that it comes from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BERRY. Ah! But I was talking about what the Calendar stated.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator who reported the bill is not in the Chamber. I think perhaps it had better go over until he returns.

Mr. WARREN. Of course an objection will take the bill over. I will say, however, that there is no necessity to wait for information from the Senator who reported it.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator mean by that that we can have the report read?

Mr. WARREN. The report can be read.

Mr. SPOONER. But that is not always satisfactory.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not wish to explain the bill at length if the Senator from Wisconsin desires to hear from the Senator who reported it.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that the bill is merely to refund to the entryman the 25 cents per acre he paid on his land when making the entry, where he was not able to prove up because of circumstances through no fault of his and beyond his control, and generally because of the change in the regulations of the Interior Department, which required a different proof at the end of the prescribed three years than was required when he entered the land.

The bill proposes only to restore the 25 cents the Government got. It does not restore his rights to a desert entry which have been forfeited through his first entry. It does not reimburse him for the money which he has expended in reclaiming or attempting to reclaim the land.

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to ask the Senator a question. Has the bill been referred to the Interior Department?

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that I have not the report before me; but as I recall it, it was referred some years ago, when it was first sent here.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I ask the Senator from Wyoming a question?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. How much money does the Senator suppose is involved in the bill?

Mr. WARREN. If all the amounts that were originally paid in were claimed under the bill, it would probably amount to less or more than $1,000,000, but it is estimated that with the safeguards in this bill and under the ordinary course it will not reach beyond a quarter of a million dollars.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator explain to me, as I am not familiar with these land laws—unless I am trespassing upon the Senator from Wisconsin——

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator from Wyoming explain what the bill means in this language:

> But an assignment of the desert-land claim, or an error on the part of the original claimant in filing upon land not subject to desert entry, shall not defeat such repayment.

What about his assignment?

Mr. WARREN. At what line is the Senator reading?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Beginning on the fifth line of the second page. If he has assigned his claim, who is to get the pay—the original entryman or the assignee?

Mr. WARREN. If assigned under the original act as provided by law, it would be to the assignee; but if the Senator will read further in the bill he will find, on page 11, that speculative assignments are prohibited.

Mr. SPOONER. Upon what theory, I should like to ask the Senator, could the assignee be paid for the land?

Mr. WARREN. The original desert-land act provided that an entry could be made and assigned, and the assignee could take it up and carry on the improvements and make the expenditure and receive title, where for any reason after making the original entry the settler desired to assign it to another and have him carry out the law. Then virtually it belongs to the assignee.

Mr. SPOONER. Without indicating thereby any opposition to the bill, I think it had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will have to be done by unanimous consent. A single objection does not lie to bills under Rule IX.

Mr. SPOONER. I will not object, then.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I was not present in the Committee on Public Lands when this bill was considered nor did I know that it had been reported. I thought the Calendar stated that it had come from the Committee on Claims.

I remember something of the bill being before the Committee on Public Lands, however, several years ago. The desert-land act provided that entryman should pay 25 cents on the dollar at the time he made the entry. He was required thereafter to make certain improvements from time to time and to pay an additional amount.

The truth of the matter is that there were a great many of these entries made, and the parties who made the entries sold them to other individuals. They changed hands. There never was an effort to comply with the law in numerous cases. It seems to me that when the man who took the land paid the 25 cents and took his chance on proving it up, it is rather unreasonable after all these years, in the change of ownership so often, that he should come now and ask the Government to repay what it was well understood at the time the entry was made that he would forfeit. It is well known——

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. BERRY. In just one moment. It is well known that in hundreds of cases in desert-land entries the parties made a pretense of setting out a few trees. There was an utter failure to comply with the intent and spirit of the law in hundreds of cases, and thereby the attempt was made to acquire title fraudulently. Where men made those entries and sold to different parties, now to undertake to say that the assignee should come and get money back it seems to me is not good legislation. I do not think the bill ought to pass.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will permit me, I wish to say right here that the bill has been reported favorably every time it has been introduced, and for some four Congresses from the Committee on Public Lands.

The Senator from Arkansas is mistaken in the position he takes, because this bill seeks to cover the point where there has been no fault or fraud on the part of the entrymen. I live in the semi-arid region where the law has been in effect. I have lived there ever since the passage of the law. While it is true the law may have been abused in some cases and there may have been evasions, yet the great growth of that country is due to it, the great growth of Utah and Colorado, not so particularly Colorado, perhaps, because she had a good growth before the law was made applicable to that State. But take Wyoming, Utah, and other States. Wyoming almost owes its very existence to this law.

During one time in the Government of the United States there seemed to be an idea on the part of men in high places that every man was a thief until he proved himself innocent, and that every man who wanted a piece of public land was necessarily a thief. Consequently there were regulations adopted and changes made, from time to time, which made it almost impossible to prove up on any land. There were years there when very few acres were proved up. For instance, when I would take a piece of land to-day I would have to make certain affidavits as to its reclamation and as to water. I would go on and take up the water and reclaim my land, and at the end of three years there would be a new regulation, perhaps, which required that I should show the ownership of stock in some organization or corporation that owned water, and I must show that the water is unfailing and so on; in fact, different regulations than prevailed during the earlier period. When I submit my proof as to the ownership of the water doubt appears on the part of the land officers as to proof, under the new regulations, of my ownership, and my entry is canceled. The Government has not only received my 25 cents, but one, two, three, four, or five dollars an acre that I have expended upon the land toward reclamation.

Now, the proposition is not to reimburse men who have not tried to move upon their land, because it is specifically stated in the bill, as the Senator from Arkansas will see if he will read it, that it does not propose to pay for fraudulent or unlawful entries, but it merely proposes to pay a little pittance the Government has received of 25 cents per acre to the man who has paid that and lost his time and lost his money in improving the land, and has lost his rights as well, which this bill does not propose reimbursing him for.

It seems to me that it is an exceedingly small matter for the United States to refund only the principal alone that it has taken without interest when the other man, the entry man, has lost his right, and forever lost it, for that matter, to enter the land, and he has lost his time and money spent in reclamation. Though he may be an assignee, if in good faith he has gone on and expended the money and reimbursed the other man it matters not. The bill provides against the matter of fraud in assignments.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Wyoming said that the bill provided that it should be paid where it was done without fault. That is not the language of the bill. If the Senator will read it, he will find it says:

> Where such person was unable from any cause, other than his own fraudulent or unlawful act.

And it provides that in any case where he failed to make the improvement within the time his money is to be repaid to him. That is the provision of the bill; and it will be construed that there must have been some fraud upon his part, or otherwise the money will be paid.

Now, in regard to what the Senator from Wyoming says about the Interior Department making unlawful orders, holding men up, etc.——

Mr. WARREN. I did not say that the Department made unlawful orders.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator said by reason of contradictory rulings.

Mr. WARREN. I did not say contradictory rulings. I said by changing orders from time to time.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to say that in my judgment there have been millions of acres of the public lands secured under the law by the fraudulent acts of persons who procured men to go upon the land under these various acts by a previous arrangement, furnishing them the money, and where they violated these laws in order to get the holding of thousands of acres of land into the hands of a few individuals or wealthy corporations. Now, that is what I think about the operation of the western land laws.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator pardon me? I wish to ask a question for my own information. The Senator seems to be familiar with the subject. Thereafter the people who entered upon the land really for some other person made assignments to the gentlemen for whom they had entered the land?

Mr. BERRY. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. So these assignees would under this bill be entitled to the payment?

Mr. BERRY. Yes; under the bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am asking for information.

Mr. BERRY. That is what the bill, I understand, proposes, that payment shall be made to the assignees of the parties who paid the 25 cents an acre. They sold out to the others, and the proposition now is to pay back to them where they failed to comply for any cause with the law unless it was a case of fraud. That is the broad proposition, and it covers thousands of acres of land in the Western States.

I have this idea about it, Mr. President, that when the law said if the party who entered did not comply with the subsequent requirements he should lose his 25 cents. It was a contract between him and the Government and he has no right to come back here complaining and asking to have his money paid back, and this applies doubly to the asignee rather than to the original entryman. That is my objection to it.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas is not as familiar with the practical workings of the law as some of the rest of us. I know very well that there have been a great many entries made, and made under the first provision of the law, not so much for the direct benefit of the party making it as of some other parties, but in those cases this measure does not touch them. If the individual who felt he could not himself complete the provisions of the law, and so secure 320 acres, or more than that, I think, originally, turned it over to somebody else, almost invariably in that case it went to those who were able to comply with the law, and they became owners of the land. If he did assign it to somebody who did not get the land, the Government still has the land and the Government has the 25 cents an acre.

Some years ago in one of the counties of Colorado a very extended ditch concern was advertised, said to be able to furnish water for a large area of country. A great number of settlers went in there supposing that they would be able to secure water for their claims. They entered upon the land, paid the quarter of a dollar an acre, and complied with the law in putting on the necessary improvements. When the time came they found that the ditch company had failed and was utterly incapable of furnishing them any water, which they had, as I said, expected to buy, and so in a large section of the country the people had to abandon their land. In that case it seems to me that there ought not to be any great objection made to the Government paying back the small amount, say $80, that was taken from a settler.

Mr. President, $80 is not very much to some of the Senators in this Chamber, but it means a great deal sometimes to a settler. I think these little returns should be made of money that the Government has received and has rendered nothing for whatever and has had the use of long enough to compensate at least for some little annoyance about the law. If Senators had seen the country settled as I have seen it settled, and if they knew what it cost to settle the country, they would not be quite so tenacious, or quite so severe, or quite so condemnatory of the settler.

Mr. President, if any settler has failed to comply with the law, he has failed to comply from inability to do so. He has not filed on a piece of land and then abandoned it after paying his 25 cents if he had the power to go on and complete under the law the entry he hoped to make.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say a word about the law. In 1878, when the law was first passed, I was a member of this body. At that time in Colorado we did not need the law. Our streams were easily diverted, and I objected to its application to the State of Colorado, fearing that people who desired large land holdings would get together and take a great deal of land they ought not to have. It was not until 1882 or later, perhaps, when on reorganizing the law somewhat, Colorado was put in. I know that in Wyoming, in Utah, in Idaho, and in Colorado since the law went into effect it has been a valuable method by which men have been enabled to get land.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Does he not understand that it was the intention of the law to provide for reasonable assignments where men were not able to comply with its terms?

Mr. TELLER. It would be an exceedingly harsh law that did not allow a man to make an assignment if he found himself incapable of going on and completing the entry. The Government was after two things. The primary thing the Government had in view when it passed the law was to get the arid land settled. That was the primary purpose, and any man who settled under the arid-land law paid for it all that it was worth, and often many more times than it was worth. Communities would combine to build a ditch. They would figure that it would cost two or three or five dollars an acre, and when they got through it would cost very often at least three or four times that amount.

Now, I wish to say a word or two about the execution of the law. After a while, say for the next four years after 1885, there was an exceedingly harsh execution of the law. They were required to put water practically upon every acre of the 160 or 320 acres, whichever they had taken. If they found that one end of the claim was too high for water of the neighborhood there was trouble with the parties, and many of them were compelled to abandon their land or get it under some other system after they had paid this money.

Now, Mr. President, the gist of the whole thing is this. It is seen in this one thing. The Government of the United States has still got the title to the land or has sold it to somebody else. They have got the money of the settler, for which he got nothing from the Government in return. The amount, I understand, is not large, but it will be of benefit to some of those people, and I think with the generosity of the Government in very many other directions nobody ought to complain of this little moiety that is going to the settler who has failed to make good his title when the Government has suffered nothing by his failure.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I do not myself become restive at all under the strictures of the Senator from Colorado that there is something akin to stinginess in the spirit of inquiry which has for a few moments obstructed the ordinarily easy passage of such measures through the Senate. I beg the Senator to remember, and I know he does remember, that we are a little more apt to be too easy than too strict. We are not here expending our own money for the purpose of indulging in our own generous impulses, and there is no one here who does not want to deal justly, I take it, by the settlers on the western lands, and all of them.

But the Senator contends for a principle, and there is a principle underlying this bill which, when the power of precedent in a legislative way is remembered, is of very great consequence to the people of the United States. If, on a thorough investigation, justice by the Government to its citizens demands the payment of this money, it ought to be paid, and more should be paid if justice demands the payment of more.

But I want to say, in the first place, that I dislike to see a report upon a bill of this kind relating to the public lands come to the Senate with some evidence accompanying it that the measure has been referred to the appropriate Department of the Government, the Department charged with the execution of the land laws of the United States, for its examination and report as to the facts and as to the justice of the claims. If all the men in this country who expend money under contracts with the Government for land which afterwards they for one reason or another, not fraudulent, abandon are to be reimbursed, this is a bagatelle, a trifle utterly; it would bankrupt the country. Every man who has made a homestead entry in good faith and paid land-office fees, who has been obliged for some reason not at all his fault, involving no fraud, to abandon it, should be refunded the money which he paid, or it should be given to his heirs, upon the theory which underlies this bill. Why not? The Government either would still own the land or it would have disposed of it under the laws of the United States to some one else.

There has been a great underlying governmental policy as to the disposition of all the lands of the Government, differing as the character of the lands differ. In this instance the law was intended to apply to waste places in the country to bring about settlement. So were the homestead laws intended to furnish homes to the people, to take people out of the crowded cities, to increase taxable values.

I can see no reason for this legislation. These men knew when they made this contract just what they would be called upon to do under the law. The man who made a homestead entry knew under the law just what his contract was, just what he was obliged to do.

Mr. President, there is pending in this body a bill for the relief of some homestead settlers in the northern part of Wisconsin, and, joined with that, a bill for the relief of homestead settlers in the wagon-road grant in Oregon. Those men went upon those lands many years ago by authority of the Government. They had been railroad lands. On contest, first by the General Land Office and then the Secretary of the Interior, it was held that they were part of the public domain and these men were invited to go upon them. They occupied the land for years; they felled the forests; they cultivated the lands; they fought the vast forest fires, in which some of them, in the endeavor to protect their log cabins, their improvements, and their families, lost their lives.

Later the Supreme Court of the United States decided that the Interior Department was wrong, that the land belonged to the railway company, and that those settlers had no title. Do you suppose it would be possible to make up to those people their loss in time, in toil, in hope, in improvements? The full measure of justice thus far to receive legislative sanction from either House has been to give those people the right to select an equal amount of public lands elsewhere in the United States; and coupled with that was a provision that, although they had lived five years upon the lands of which they were deprived, they must live one year on newly selected lands before they could receive a patent; that is, the widows and their children should go out on the frontier, go on uncultivated lands without capital, and live upon them for a year—must make bricks without straw—before they could have any relief at all under the law.

The hardships which come to settlers upon the public lands are not limited to those people who have settled under the desert-land law. They are not limited to the arid region of the United States by any means. There are innumerable cases of the kind in all the public-land States of the United States. Now, if this principle is to be adopted, if it is right, let us adopt it, but it is so magnificent in its proportions that we ought not to adopt it in a haphazard way, without most thorough deliberation and examination, and without the advice or report of the Land Department. I ask my friend from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] if I am wrong about that?

Mr. TELLER. I will tell you in a moment.

Mr. SPOONER. Will you not tell me now?

Mr. TELLER. I would rather not interrupt the Senator until he gets through.

Mr. SPOONER. All right. I can not myself quite see—perhaps the Senator may be able to explain it—why the homesteaders over the country who have entered upon lands, who have built their modest structures—the origin of improvements always upon the public lands—who have cultivated their little patches, felled forests, made fences, and all that, and then been obliged through some misfortune—perhaps a forest fire or perhaps illness, anything other than fraud—to abandon them, leaving the land to the Government, leaving the improvements to the Government, to be sold to somebody else—I can not for the life of me see why the fees paid at the land office by that army of men should not be reimbursed if the fees paid in these cases are to be reimbursed. I think I shall therefore move, without the slightest hostility to settlers—for I have none—to recommit this bill, unless the Senator from Colorado convinces me that I am wrong, to the committee from which it came, expressing the hope that it will be referred to the Interior Department for investigation and report.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Colorado kindly yield to me, as the Senator from Wisconsin has asked me a question?

Mr. TELLER. I will yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Wisconsin speaks of that very deserving class who were wronged by reason of their settlement upon railroad lands; but I think he stated—at least, I so understood him—that some measure of restitution had been offered by the Government. Am I right about that?

Mr. SPOONER. I stated that it was pending. I do not know what the Government will do about it, but it is a mere trifling restitution.

Mr. WARREN. As this is, Mr. President. Here is a case where the land remains with the Government, where the land that has been paid for remains with the Government and the man's right to enter further land has been canceled, and the money that he has expended upon the homestead has all been lost. Now the Senator would refuse such a man the meager sum of 25 cents in part restitution for the land. I want to ask a question, and it is this——

Mr. SPOONER. I will answer the question, and then I want to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. WARREN. The rulings of the Land Department at one time were that the growth known as mesquite was not timber, and that the entry could be entertained under the desert-land law of such mesquite lands. Later on the department ruled—and that ruling stood for several years—that those lands were not susceptible of that class of entry, but were timber lands and not desert lands. Consequently, those who had entered upon mesquite lands in good faith were unable to prove up, and they lost their land. Still later the department again returned to its old ruling, and made a ruling that the mesquite lands were not timber lands at all. Does the Senator think that the parties who made entries in good faith upon mesquite lands ought to be charged with fraud? Does he think the contract of the Government is one in which the entryman is at fault in a case like that?

Mr. SPOONER. I have not said anything about land entries by fraud.

Mr. WARREN. I am speaking of a contract that was made by the Government with the consent of the entryman.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator, then, refers to a case where some one has attempted to obtain a patent for land which he has taken, which was not open to entry under the act?

Mr. WARREN. Not at all. He entered upon the land, paid the 25 cents per acre, and spent one, two, or three years upon that land. He then was confronted with the change in ruling that had been made by the Interior Department, and consequently was unable to prove up his land.

Mr. SPOONER. Is the bill confined to those cases?

Mr. WARREN. The bill is virtually confined to them; but I do not think it should be confined to them.

Mr. SPOONER. I should now like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. WARREN. Very well.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the real difference in principle between the class of cases which is covered by this bill—at least one class of cases covered by this bill—and the case of persons who in good faith entered homesteads on railroad lands? In the case of a man who enters upon a homestead in good faith, pays the land-office fees, moves upon it with his family, if he has a family, or lives alone upon it, if he has no family, and makes the requisite improvements, a man who, through some misfortune or cause not imputable to fraud, is compelled to abandon and leave the land and improvements to the Government, why should not he be paid back his land-office fees if the land-office fees should be paid back in this case? What is the difference in principle?

Mr. WARREN. Answering that question, I will say that where the land-office fees are paid in addition——

Mr. SPOONER. That is a mere play upon words.

Mr. WARREN. They should be reimbursed if the fault was the Government's that the settlers were unable to prove up. I think the law provides that entries of that kind may be reinstated.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. With the permission of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]——

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] a question. My attention was attracted to certain provisions of this bill concerning assignments of these entries. I have myself some little knowledge and personal experience of the settlement of the western country.

I should like to ask the Senator for information whether or not it was not sometimes, if not frequently, the case, that there were a large number of entries under the names of individuals in behalf of a third party or corporation, and that if, after a while, those entries were not assigned to the person or corporation for whom, in fact, they were made? Is not that so?

Mr. WARREN. My attention was diverted by a question asked me by a Senator behind me; and I should be glad if the Senator from Indiana would repeat his question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I was saying, by the permission of the Senator from Colorado, that I desired to ask the Senator a question. I was simply asking the Senator whether or not it was not sometimes, if indeed not frequently, the case that entries of land were made by various individuals in their names, and then afterwards assigned to a third individual or corporation, who thereby became the assignees of those entries; and, further, I ask whether or not the provisions of this bill would not pay back, not to the person who originally entered the land, but to those collective assignees, the money which had been paid in?

Mr. WARREN. Only in cases where they had in good faith proceeded with the reclamation of the land.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That would be true, according to the Senator's interpretation of the bill, only in case it was not done fraudulently. Now, I ask the Senator, under the bill, how is the fact that it was done fraudulently going to be established?

Mr. WARREN. The Interior Department will not undertake to pay unless each case is made clear from suspicion or fraud or unlawful act.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. How could it be made clear, I will ask the Senator, who is familiar with this matter, except by an affidavit of the assignee that he wa acting in good faith? If that be the case, is it not perfectly clear that any person who had taken such assignments in large bodies of land, in a large number of cases collectively, would certainly make that affidavit?

Mr. WARREN. The Interior Department has, in every case, all the papers and proofs submitted by the entryman when he offered proof. This much to start upon——

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. I understand that we are proceeding by the permission of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator from Indiana will accept my answer, I should like to answer the question myself.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Colorado is peculiarly qualified to answer the question, he having once been Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. TELLER. In the case the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] suggests I will say that I think some of the things which have been referred to were done, but the parties to whom assignments were made went on and completed the title. So those people are not here and are not coming here. Anybody, any corporation, or any individual who took an assignment of a number of claims did it with the capacity of completing the entry and holding it, and they have got completed entries. This is to cover cases where one settler bought out another settler and then found himself unable to get water on his claim, either because it could not be had at an expense that would justify him in procuring it or for some other reason, and so he was obliged to give up.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The question that attracted my attention was whether or not this bill would only apply to such a case as that to which the Senator now refers. I do not know.

Mr. TELLER. The trouble with the Senator's proposition is that there are not any such cases. There might be an isolated case or two.

Mr. President, I have had some knowledge of the settlement of the Western States. Pretty nearly forty years ago I went through a good portion of the present State of Idaho and through a portion of Utah. I have been all over the State of Colorado, except a very small portion of it, again and again. I have been through Montana and the Dakotas. I know something about that country, and I know that the fright some people have now that that country is going to be aggregated into great farms and great holdings is simply nonsense.

Irrigated land is the most profitable land there is when an intelligent man farms it, and except in rare cases it can be farmed in a profitable way only in small holdings. By "small holdings" I mean a quarter section or a half section at the outside. Of course occasionally a farm much larger than that can be found, where some intelligent man manages to farm it, but he is there looking after it.

Irrigated land can not be farmed as land with rain can be. There must be an intelligent man to know how much water to put on, when to put it on, and when not to put it on, and there has not been under the desert-land law, to my knowledge, any great aggregation of desert-land holdings in the Western States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, in case there had been aggregations of collective assignments to one person or corporation, would or would not the bill cover them?

Mr. TELLER. I think if there had been an aggregation in the hands of an individual or corporation who failed to go there and complete title, then there would be a claim, but I will venture to say that the Senator may search with a search warrant and he will find that in all of these cases assignments are made to individuals, not to corporations, and not in great numbers, either.

Now, Mr. President, I want to apologize to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. If I seemed to be criticising the Senator or anybody else, I wish to say that I had no intention of doing that, but I presume I did speak in an improper manner, because I have some feeling when it comes to these questions, and it is natural that I should have.

When I went to that western country in 1861, in the beginning of the year, there was an area of country two-fifths of the United States with practically nobody in it—a desert. The State of Colorado had about 25,000 people within it; miners congregated in the mountains. Except a little fringe along the Missouri River, there was no settlement from that river until California was reached but a gathering of Mormon people in Salt Lake Valley. We used to go in a stage hundreds of miles, seeing no homes or farms, nothing but the stage stations every 10 or 12 miles apart.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, under the special order of the Senate pension and military relief bills are now to be considered.

Mr. TELLER. I will conclude in just a moment, Mr. President. I did not know there was a special order.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask that the Senator may be permitted to conclude his remarks.

Mr. TELLER. I only want a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the Senator from Colorado will proceed.

Mr. TELLER. I will merely say, in the briefest possible terms, that I have seen that country settled. I have seen there communities as good as can be found anywhere in the world. I will venture to say that I can find in the arid lands of Colorado a community that need not fear comparison with any community in the United States. I can find amongst the farmers of Colorado as many educated men and women as you can find in any New England State, or in the State in which I was born—the State of New York.

Mr. President, they have made a garden of the desert, and they made it under tribulations, with the expenditure of toil and with sacrifices that entitle them to praise and not contempt. When I think what that country was forty-three years ago and think of what it is now, I feel that I should like to take off my hat to its early settlers. I want to give those who went into that country the meed of praise. They organized communities three or four years before there was any national law for their control and maintained all the arrangements of a civil government as well as they are maintained to-day under the State governments, and infinitely better than they are maintained in some of them, and even in some sections of my own State.

It is not to be wondered at that we men who went there in the early days, if we were not of that class, should have some feeling that if the Government has taken $160, as it has in some cases, out of a settler who has been unable to complete his entry under the law, and the Government has given nothing for that $160, it ought to pay it back.

It is not any answer to say that there are other deserving citizens of the United States who have been trying to make homes on the public lands who are also entitled to our consideration. I would not measure justice to the people of the United States by the amount that it would cost. I say we owe it to these people to pay them back the money; and if there are other classes to whom we owe the same obligation, we need not be disturbed for fear the amount will be beyond our ability to pay. I doubt whether in this case the expenditure can possibly reach a quarter of a million dollars, a sum that we vote away here day after day to the most worthless and undeserving objects, not measuring our right to vote it away unless when it comes to be what the Senator from Wisconsin calls a charity.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 5761) to authorize the Charleroi and Monessen Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River; and

A bill (H. R. 7620) defining the limit of navigation of the Osage River, in the State of Missouri.

The bill (H. R. 10670) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHARLES W. HOWARD.

Mr. SCOTT. I call for the regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the first bill in order on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 59) for the relief of Charles W. Howard was announced as first in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that Charles W. Howard shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged, upon tender of his resignation on account of disability, from the military service of the United States as a second lieutenant of the Second Regiment Missouri Artillery Volunteers, on the 10th of December, 1863, and it authorizes the Secretary of War to issue to him a certificate of honorable discharge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM B. BARNES.

The bill (S. 54) for the relief of William B. Barnes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that William B. Barnes, late major, Eleventh Regiment New York Heavy Artillery shall be considered and held to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on September 30, 1863, and that a certificate of such discharge shall be issued.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAURA S. GILLINGWATERS.

The bill (S. 57) for the relief of Laura S. Gillingwaters was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that, notwithstanding the records of the proceedings and sentence of the court-martial in the case of Private James E. Gillingwaters, late of Company H, Twelfth Missouri Cavalry Volunteers, the Secretary of War be directed to issue to him an honorable discharge of the date of his release from military control; and it directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be paid to Laura S. Gillingwaters, widow of James E. Gillingwaters, all pay and allowances forfeited by the proceedings and sentence of the court-martial and full pay and allowances up to the date of his release from military control.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES W. HOWELL.

The bill (S. 58) for the relief of James W. Howell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that James W. Howell, late of Company H, Fifty-fourth Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private in that company and regiment on the 4th of July, 1865, and authorizes the Secretary of War to issue to him a certificate of discharge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RICHARD C. SILENCE.

The bill (S. 62) for the relief of Richard C. Silence was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that Richard C. Silence shall be held and considered to have been a first lieutenant of Company I, First Regiment, West Tennessee, from November 29, 1862, to March 7, 1863, and to have been honorably discharged from the service of the United States as of date of March 7, 1863, and that a certificate of such service and discharge be issued to him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES STIERLIN.

The bill (S. 63) for the relief of Charles Stierlin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that Charles Stierlin, late second lieutenant, Battery L, First Missouri Artillery, shall be considered and held to have been honorably discharged from the service of the United States March 16, 1864, and that an honorable discharge shall be issued to him of that date.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOTTLIEB C. ROSE.

The bill (S. 60) for the relief of Gottlieb C. Rose was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that Gottlieb C. Rose, late major of the Fourth Missouri Cavalry, shall be considered and held to have been honorably discharged from the United States service December 12, 1864, and that a certificate of such discharge shall be issued to him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM B. THOMPSON.

The bill (S. 64) to correct the military record of William B. Thompson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to correct the military record of William B. Thompson, Company C, Sixty-third Regiment Indiana Infantry Volunteers, by removing therefrom the word "deserted" and substituting therefor the words "absented himself without proper authority, and was, on writ of habeas corpus, by the civil authorities, in September, 1862, discharged at Indianapolis, Ind., being under 21 years of age."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES K. BOLSTER.

The bill (S. 746) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Charles K. Bolster was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion standing against the name of Charles K. Bolster, late a private, Company G, Fifteenth Maine Volunteer Infantry, and to grant him an honorable discharge from the military service of the United States as of September 17, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM T. GODWIN.

The bill (S. 970) to authorize the President to revoke the order dismissing William T. Godwin, late first lieutenant, Tenth Infantry, United States Army, and to place the said William T. Godwin on the retired list with the rank of first lieutenant, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the President to revoke the order, dated September 13, 1862, dismissing William T. Godwin, late first lieutenant Company G, Tenth Regiment United States Infantry, from the United States Army, and to appoint him a first lieutenant in the Army and place him on the retired list with that rank.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE M. LINCH.

The bill (S. 2688) granting an increase of pension to George M. Linch was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George M. Linch, late of Company A, Twenty-sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN W. TIFFANY.

The bill (S. 2870) granting an honorable discharge to John W. Tiffany was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to revoke General Orders, No. 95, Headquarters Department of Washington, July 13, 1865, approving and confirming the proceedings, findings, and sentence in the case of Second Lieut. John W. Tiffany, of Company H, Twenty-seventh Regiment Michigan Volunteers, so far as they relate to him, and to disapprove the proceedings, findings, and sentence, and to issue to him an honorable discharge as of date July 13, 1865.

FLORA STANTON KALK.

The bill (S. 3400) to amend the act entitled "An act granting a pension to Flora Stanton Kalk," approved February 25, 1899, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that the act entitled "An act granting a pension to Flora Stanton Kalk," approved February 25, 1899, be amended so as to read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Flora Stanton Kalk, widow of First Lieut. Frank Green Kalk, late of the Fifth United States Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $17 per month, and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of said Frank Green Kalk until they reach the age of 16 years.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask if this is an increase of a pension allowed by a former act?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what I was going to ask.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand the Committee on Pensions has an invariable rule that it will not increase any pension which has been granted by Congress by law. They have refused to do so in a number of such cases that I have had, and I have very quietly and complacently submitted, supposing they were treating everyone in that way.

Mr. SCOTT. If the Senator will allow the Secretary to read the report, he will see that it gives the reason.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read. I do not think the report explains it, though.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. MCCUMBER on the 18th instant, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3400) to amend the act entitled "An act granting a pension to Flora Stanton Kalk," approved February 25, 1899, have examined the same, and report:

The purpose of this bill is simply to provide for the usual allowance of $2 per month on account of each of the minor children of the late Frank Green Kalk, Fifth United States Infantry, whose widow, Flora Stanton Kalk, was granted a pension of $17 per month during the third session of the Fifty-fifth Congress. There are two children under the age of 16 years.

Previous to the passage of the act granting pension to Mrs. Kalk, it was the practice of the Bureau to allow the $2 per month additional for each child under 16 years of age, without any express provision to that effect in the act. Just about that time, however, it was decided in the Bureau that this additional allowance for the children would not be granted unless specifically so provided in the special act. Because of this ruling Mrs. Kalk has been unable to obtain the additional allowance for her children. Since the promulgation of this ruling care has been taken by the committees of both Houses to authorize the allowance of the additional $2 per month for each of the soldier's children under the age of 16 years in cases where an original or increased pension is provided for the widow. In all fairness and equity, Mrs. Kalk is entitled to the additional allowance of $2 per month for each of her children, and it is but just that her bill should be amended so as to provide for the same.

The bill is reported back favorably, with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator from Missouri will agree that this is a proper bill. In providing pensions by special act, unless a provision is placed in the bill continuing the pension to the minor children their pension is dropped at the Bureau, and this was simply an omission in the bill which was passed.

Mr COCKRELL. It would not be the granting of an increase of pension?

Mr. GALLINGER. It would not.

Mr. COCKRELL. It would simply be legalizing what ought to be done?

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely.

Mr. SCOTT. Legalizing it as to the children.

Mr. COCKRELL. What I wanted to know was whether the widow's pension was increased over and above what it was in the former bill?

Mr. SCOTT. No.

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

Mr. COCKRELL. If it is to grant a pension to the minor children, they are entitled to it. They ought to have had it in the other law.

Mr. SCOTT. It is to protect the minor children.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPHINE C. CHASE.

The bill (H. R. 5559) granting an increase of pension to Josephine C. Chase was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Josephine C. Chase, widow of Willis R. Chase, late of Company H, One hundred and ninety-third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Franklin W. Chase, helpless and dependent child of said Willis R. Chase, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY D. WRIGHT.

The bill (H. R. 2108) granting an increase of pension to Henry D. Wright was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Henry D. Wright, late of Company K, Sixth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Albert Moulton, late of Company K, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS HALL.

The bill (S. 3645) granting an increase of pension to Francis Hall was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-four;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Francis Hall, late of Company C, Seventh Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] to this case. It is one I am entirely familiar with. The committee evidently were laboring under a misapprehension, as will be seen from the report, which says:

This bill as amended proposes to increase from $12 to $24 per month the pension of Francis Hall, late of Company C, Seventh Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry.

Passing down the page, the information is given that the soldier—filed and established a claim under the general law, and was pensioned May 22, 1895, for shell wound of right knee and disease of eyes at $8 per month from October 1, 1884, which rate was increased to $14 per month March 16, 1887, to $16 per month February 22, 1888, and to $17 per month November 2, 1893.

So, instead of receiving $12 at the present time, he is receiving $17 for a shell wound and for disease of the eye. The report further states:

Claimant is about 78 years of age. His medical examination, dated October 15, 1902, rated him $12 for shell wound of right knee, $18 for disease of eyes, being totally blind in right eye and sight much impaired in left eye, and $6 for rheumatism.

Which would be a total of $36 a month.

I know this soldier very well, and in drafting the bill I felt that $30 per month was not a large allowance under the circumstances. He is drawing $17 per month now, and in my opinion, after examining all the papers, he ought to have been allowed at least $30 per month in the Bureau. I hope the Senator will agree with me that the amendment ought not to be agreed to, and that the pension ought to remain at $30 per month.

Mr. SCOTT. I am perfectly willing to have the amendment disagreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JENNET THOITS.

The bill (S. 962) granting an increase of pension to Jennet Thoits was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jennet Thoits, widow of Oren Thoits, late of Company I, Thirtieth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATHAN P. BOWMAN.

The bill (S. 3130) granting an increase of pension to Nathan P. Bowman was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nathan P. Bowman, late major and additional paymaster, United States Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN HERZINGER.

The bill (S. 2965) granting a pension to John Herzinger was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Herzinger, late of Company I, Third Regiment Missouri Mounted Volunteers, war with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to John Herzinger."

MILTON H. SWEET.

The bill (H. R. 4200) granting an increase of pension to Milton H. Sweet was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-four;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Milton H. Sweet, late of Company A, Second Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. DOLLIVER. This is a House bill which passed at $30, and I notice that the committee proposes to reduce the pension to $24. I think that ought not to be done, for the reason that the pensioner is totally blind and totally helpless. He is a very old man, with a long record. In 1886 he was allowed a pension under the old law at $4 a month for a disease of the eye, which appears to have resulted in his total blindness, according to the House report. I ask the Senator from West Virginia to consent that the amendment shall be rejected.

Mr. SCOTT. In considering this case, in view of the fact that the party who is proposed to be pensioned is worth some property in western Iowa and in view of a rule the Pension Committee goes by, the committee thought he was entitled only to the amount we recommend in the bill.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I will say the report indicates that he has no property in the world except a cottage in the town of Washington, in Iowa, worth $1,500, and he is in a very helpless condition. I think my colleague is perfectly acquainted with the old man.

Mr. ALLISON. I am.

Mr. SCOTT. What did the bill as passed by the House give?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Thirty dollars.

Mr. SCOTT. Very well; I am willing to have that amount restored.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JANE I. LONG.

The bill (S. 3274) granting an increase of pension to Jennie Long was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jane I. Long, widow of Eli Long, late brigadier-general, United States Volunteers, and brigadier-general, United States Army, retired, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I hope the amendment which reduces the pension from $100 to $50 will not be agreed to. The record of General Long is a brilliant one, and I would ask that the report be read.

I will state to the Senate that General Long left no estate whatever, and his widow is entirely dependent upon her pension for a livelihood. She gets $8 a month at the present time, and that is all she has. General Long during his life could obtain no insurance, and in consequence he left his family entirely destitute. He died from the effect of wounds, though they were unable to prove it satisfactorily before the Department.

I trust the amendment will not be agreed to and that a pension of $100 a month will be granted. I ask that the report be read.

Mr. SCOTT. Before the report is read, I should like to make a statement.

The Committee on Pensions at some previous time—I am sorry the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has left the Chamber—adopted a rule that in the case of widows of general officers the maximum pension should be $50 per month. That is the reason why the rate fixed by the House was stricken out. The widows of such officers as Lawton and others get only $50.

I personally have no objection to having the larger amount put in the bill, but I wished to explain to the Senate why the committee reduced it, so that Senators may know the reason the committee had for striking it out. It was not because General Long was not a brave and gallant officer, as he certainly was from his record, but it is on account of the rule established by the committee for pensioning the widows of general officers.

Mr. KEAN. I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out "$50" and inserting "$100."

Mr. COCKRELL. To disagree to the committee amendment is the proper way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That would not do in this case. The Senate will have to amend the committee amendment in order to fix the rate at $100.

Mr. KEAN. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that the amendment strikes out all after the enacting clause and inserts a substitute.

Mr. COCKRELL. So I see.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey moves an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 4, before the word "dollars," strike out "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof "one hundred."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. When the bill has passed I shall ask leave to make a single remark.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Jane I. Long."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I think the passage of the bill is a mistake, and I think it will return to plague us.

Mr. COCKRELL. The published rules of the Committee on Pensions, which have been published for some years, state that on no bill will they report over $50 for the widows of officers. This is breaking the rule of the committee. I do not know what effect it will have. I have no doubt that General Long was a very gallant officer, that his widow is in comparatively destitute and needy circumstances, and all of that; but it is a dangerous precedent, and I want to say that I voted "no" on the passage of the bill. I did not ask for a yea-and-nay vote upon it, but I now record my vote "no." I have stood by the committee and tried not to violate their rules and not to ask any of my constituents to violate them.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I shall certainly have to ask for the amendment of a bill which I have introduced and which is pending before the committee, in which I told the widow of a very high officer in the Army that $50 is all she could expect to get. I shall have to ask that the rate fixed in that bill shall be raised to $100. I now notify the committee.

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to me we ought to vote on the bill.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will regard the bill as an open question if the Senate desires.

Mr. CULLOM. I think we had better so regard it and vote down the rate of $100. It seems to me that a pension of $50 is as much as Mrs. Long ought to receive.

Mr. KEAN. I hope the Senator will not insist upon that.

Mr. SCOTT. I have stated the rule of the committee, and since I have been a member of the Committee on Pensions we have never deviated from it, no matter how deserving or how gallant the officer. I will say to my friend the Senator from New Jersey that, as much as I would like to favor him personally and the widow of this gallant officer, I am sure the committee will have a hundred or a hundred and fifty bills in a very short time proposing an increase from $50 to $100 for the widows of general officers.

Mr. CULLOM. Of course you will, and Congress will give it to them.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senate ought to be careful in this matter. If they decide to raise the limit to $100, of course it is the privilege of the Senate to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. These motions are put with such rapidity that if any Senator desires it the Chair will not regard a bill has passed because it has been announced as passed. The Chair will regard the vote reconsidered by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed and by which the amendment was agreed to, and will put the question again on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, if it be the purpose of the Senate to adhere to a fixed Procrustean rule here—and I am not criticising it if that shall be its determination—then I have not a word to say. But if there is to be any departure in the direction of raising the limit, as it has been termed here, I am satisfied that if the Senate would listen to the report filed with this bill this is a case which would have been excepted because of the conspicuous record of this dead officer. He died directly as the result of wounds received—not once, but repeatedly—in the service, long years intervening between the close of the war and his death, and he a hopeless sufferer from those wounds.

The testimony borne in the report which accompanies this bill will induce the Senate, in my judgment, to depart from a fixed rule, unless it be the purpose of the Senate not to depart from that rule in any case. Now, if that is what the Senate means to do, I have not a word to say; but if there is to be an exception anywhere to be made, I insist that the motion of the Senator from New Jersey to amend ought to have the fullest measure of consideration at the hands of the Senate because of the exceptional record of this officer.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, it is only a short time ago when we pensioned the widow of General Lawton, who was shot by the enemy, at $50 a month. How can we justify ourselves in giving a pension of $100 to another lady, the widow of an officer of whom we may admit, and do admit, all that has been said? It seems to me that we shall be called upon to increase the pensions already granted at $50 a month, and certainly hereafter we shall be called upon to increase them to $100 a month.

I make these remarks with the greatest hesitation, but it appears to me that we must observe some rule about this matter and not let our sympathies in favor of a particular widow run away with our judgment in the case. It seems to me it is better to adhere to the rule which has been established.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I wish to say only a word. It does not seem to me that we can afford to set this precedent. I remember since I have been in the Senate of securing several pensions to widows; a pension for the widow of General Palmer, for instance, who served with us and who was as gallant an officer as ever was in an army. His widow is poor, and yet she got $50. General McClernand was another gallant officer whose widow is poor. Both of them are living in my town. I never asked for more than $50 a month for either of them, and they were glad to get that.

Now, if we set the example of $100 for another widow, the very ladies who are now content with what they have been given will see this, and before I am four days older, probably, I will have a bill to give them $100 apiece. I think we had better adhere to the rule.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask that the bill may go over for to-day.

Mr. KEAN. I trust the Senator will not make that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will Senators please vote? The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment of the Committee on Pensions was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Jane I. Long."

SALLIE H. HOFFECKER.

The bill (S. 2215) granting a pension to Sallie H. Hoffecker was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 6, after the word "late," to strike out "of" and insert "captain;" and in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twelve" and insert "eight;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sallie H. Hoffecker, widow of Joseph V. Hoffecker, late captain Company A, Sixth Regiment Delaware Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. TRAVIS.

The bill (H. R. 6022) granting an increase of pension to George W. Travis was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 7, before the word "Militia," to insert "Volunteer;" and in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. Travis, late of Company F, Forty-seventh Regiment New York State Volunteer Militia Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ABRAM WILSON.

The bill (H. R. 5841) granting an increase of pension to Abram Wilson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Abram Wilson, late of Company E, Third Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and Company H, Fourth Regiment New York Provisional Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALONZO DUTCH.

The bill (H. R. 5176) granting an increase of pension to Alonzo Dutch was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alonzo Dutch, late first lieutenant Company E, Eighth Regiment New York State Militia Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut subsequently said: I wish to call attention to a bill which was passed. It is the bill (H. R. 5176) "granting an increase of pension to Alonzo Dutch, late first lieutenant Company E, Eighth Regiment New York State Militia Infantry." I do not know whether that is a proper description. I have no objection to the bill. I suppose it refers to an officer in the regular service.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to say that if we pension militiamen generally, we have about 40,000 of them in Missouri.

Mr. SCOTT. Oh, no; we do not want to do that.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think in all probability that is a mistake, as the soldier is already a pensioner, and he would not be a pensioner if he was simply a militiaman and not mustered into the United States volunteer service. Militiamen are not pensionable. I do not think there will be any harm done by letting the bill stand passed.

JOSEPH H. KENNEDY.

The bill (S. 3038) granting an increase of pension to Joseph H. Kennedy was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty-four;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph H. Kennedy, late of Company G, First Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. McCREARY. The amendment fixes the amount at $24 per month. The original bill proposed the rate of $25 per month, but the amendment is satisfactory to me.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE M. LINCH.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Senate bill No. 2688, granting an increase of pension to George M. Linch, was passed during my absence temporarily.

I move that the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I move that the amendment reported by the Senate committee be disagreed to. In that connection I am authorized by the chairman of the committee to state that since the bill was reported to the Senate additional evidence has been presented to the committee and he is satisfied to have the amendment disagreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 2688) granting an increase of pension to George M. Linch.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment which has been agreed to will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. The amendment reported by the committee, which was agreed to, was to strike out the word "thirty," before the word "dollars," and insert "twenty."

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, what is the proposition—to make the pension $20 or $30 per month?

Mr. KITTREDGE. To make it $30, as provided in the bill before it was amended.

This soldier is drawing a pension of $17 per month under the general law. His condition is such, and especially this winter, since the bill was introduced, that upon presenting proof of that condition the chairman of the committee authorized me to make the statement which I have made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment which was agreed to will be disagreed to, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and the amendment is disagreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALLISON. Are the pension cases concluded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the pension cases.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 27, 1904, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate January 25, 1904.

POSTMASTER.

INDIANA.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 26, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, Mr. George J. Smith, Representative-elect from the Twenty-fourth district of the State of New York, is present and ready to take the oath of office.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will present himself.

Mr. George J. Smith came forward and was duly qualified by taking the oath of office prescribed by law.

JANITOR FOR THE COMMITTEE ON INDUSTRIAL ARTS, ETC.

Mr. HILDEBRANT, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back favorably the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions is hereby authorized to appoint a janitor to said committee for the sessions of the Fifty-eighth Congress, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, at the rate of $60 per month.

JANITOR FOR LIBRARY OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. HILDEBRANT also, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back favorably the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a janitor to serve in the library of the House, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, at the rate of $60 per month until otherwise provided by law.

HORSES, CARRIAGES, ETC., FOR POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am directed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to report a substitute for a resolution referred to that committee.

The following proposed substitute for House resolution 152 was read:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and is hereby, requested to furnish to this House, at his earliest convenience, a statement showing the number of horses, carriages, and automobiles maintained at Government expense for the use of officials in his Department, together with a statement showing the cost of said horses, carriages, automobiles, and harness, the date of purchase, from what fund the payment was made, and the amount of wages paid to men acting as coachmen, footmen, and chauffeurs, whether carried on the rolls as such or in some other classification; also the list of officials entitled to the use of said carriages, and the date when such service was inaugurated.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I move the adoption of the substitute reported by the committee.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes, sir.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether he will accept an amendment to specify the time upon which payment of wages has been asked?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not feel free to accept any amendment, Mr. Speaker, as I have been directed by the committee to report this substitute.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand the committee desires to obtain information sufficient to guide the House, and as the matter now stands the information obtained is likely to be almost worthless.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] moves the previous question.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Indiana had made a motion to adopt the substitute, whereupon the Speaker put the motion to the House. The gentleman from Indiana did not call the previous question and did not retain the floor. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] got the floor in his own right.

Mr. OVERSTREET. No; he asked me a question. I have not surrendered the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recollects quite well that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] yielded to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. The Chair asked the gentleman from Indiana whether he yielded, and he did yield, for a question. The Chair does not understand that the gentleman from Indiana yielded the floor.

Mr. CLARK. Is there not debate for forty minutes allowed on a motion for the previous question, if anybody wants it?

Mr. OVERSTREET. This is a unanimous report of the committee. I see no occasion for debate.

Mr. CLARK. I have no desire on earth to make a speech; but I want to know what is the rule.

The SPEAKER. If there has been no prior debate, forty minutes are allowed for debate under the previous question, twenty minutes on a side.

Mr. CLARK. Then I give notice that I should like to be recognized for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks the previous question.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Indiana to withhold that——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (continuing). Long enough to answer a question that will interpret this resolution.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana declines to yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the previous question is voted, then will there not be twenty minutes on a side for debate?

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, if there has been no debate.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Well, there has not been thus far——

The SPEAKER. The Chair states that under the rule, if there has been no debate, there is twenty minutes on a side, after the previous question is ordered, for debate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Has there been such debate on this question as would preclude the forty minutes' debate after the previous question is ordered?

The SPEAKER. That is a question of fact.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is debate now in order?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that debate is not in order, for the reason that debate has been had already.

Mr. CLARK. Now, Mr. Speaker, surely the fact that one Member asks another Member a question can not be construed by any fair rule as a debate.

The SPEAKER. Under some circumstances the Chair thinks he might well hold that there had been debate, where it was evidently for obstruction or dilatory purposes; but it seems to the Chair that a fair construction of the rule under existing conditions would not authorize the Chair to say that such debate had been had as to preclude debate at this time. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Therefore the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire recognition at this time?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will reserve my twenty minutes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska desires recognition?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized for twenty minutes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I shall occupy only a few moments and leave the balance of the time open to other gentlemen on this side who may desire to be heard.

When this matter came up on the Republican side of this Chamber, I was surprised, and I think many others were surprised, not so much at the extravagance and unauthorized expenditures which had been going on in all the Executive Departments, by confession, but I was surprised at the confession of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, made upon the floor of this House, that he knew that those expenditures were going on; that he knew that carriages were being illegally used and coachmen and chauffeurs and footmen illegally employed under the name of "skilled laborers," and the further confession which he made that he had been unable, when he had endeavored to do so, to procure information as to the extent of the abuse from the responsible heads of those great Departments.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this presents even a greater evil than the mere evil of governmental extravagance. Governmental extravagance authorized by the representatives of the people is one thing. Governmental extravagance, however, in these Departments, unauthorized by anybody, is much worse. Not only have we had this governmental extravagance and illegal expenditure, but it was incurred and carried on without any authorization whatever, and in spite of this fact the eminent chairman of this great and powerful Committee on Appropriations has been unable either to ascertain its extent or to put a stop to it.

Extravagance of that sort is carried on in the dark, carried on under a cloud of mystery, but without the knowledge of the people and without authority from any source, a kind of extravagance that this House should stop, too, and which the people of the country will not tolerate. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I introduced these resolutions, designed to obtain for this House and for the country specific information; and in the resolution which came before the House yesterday, or which should have come before this House yesterday, I asked for information as to what wages had been paid to these coachmen, chauffeurs, and footmen "during the past calendar year." The committee emasculated that resolution by striking out the period specified and laid themselves open to the suspicion—and I have no hesitation in saying it, Mr. Speaker—laid themselves open to the suspicion that they did not want to procure and lay before this House information as to the extent of the expenditures, illegal expenditures, that have been going on for the past year and longer, but desire to put the Executive Departments in a position to report simply what is existing now.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a reform may have occurred. It has been intimated to me—it is, in fact, an open secret in this town—that since these resolutions were introduced there has been a rattling of dry bones and of official carriages which have been turned in and turned over and given up. This resolution in its emasculated condition will enable these executive heads of the Departments simply to report to this House what is now in existence and to conceal previous extravagance and the illegal expenditures which have been in progress during the past year.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. Your resolution contemplated obtaining information covering merely the last year—the calendar year?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would like to know, is it not a fact that when the information comes to the House giving the date of the purchase of these carriages, if that does not include not only the calendar year, but the whole length of time during which this has been going on; if the resolution reported does not, in fact, get more information or call for more information than you yourself called for?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will reply to the gentleman by saying that each one of these committees has reported a substitute, which does purport to seek for the additional information, which purports to ask for information as to when these carriages were purchased, and I am told that it is the evident purpose to fasten upon some Democratic Administration, if possible, the responsibility for the purchase of these carriages that have existed.

Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to conceal anything. I approved that part of the substitute, and I am perfectly willing to put any responsibility where it belongs, upon a Democratic Administration as well as upon a Republican Administration; but when these committees come in here and emasculate these resolutions by striking out the inquiry for specific information as to the wages paid in the past year, then I think they have sought to conceal from this House one of the most important facts which should be revealed. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am through, and if the Republican side of this House desires to take the responsibility of concealing this important matter, well and good. I have introduced these resolutions for the purpose of getting light. I reserve the balance of my time, but yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. For a question, Mr. Speaker. As I understand, the object of your resolution is to prevent anybody "standing out from under" on account of the operation of the resolution or any possible action by Congress by turning in carriages, horses, etc., and then reporting that at the time of their report they had none?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is exactly it. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, this resolution, or substitute for the resolution, is in exactly the same language that was first reported to the House from the Committee on Ways and Means, calling for similar information from the Secretary of the Treasury, and the language followed by the others of the different committees which have thus far reported similar substitutes. That resolution, I understand, was considered by the Committee on Ways and Means and amended to meet the situation. To enter upon a change of phraseology in this resolution would be to call for a different kind of information from that which has already been called for from the other Departments of the Government. My understanding is that thus far the House has called for this information from the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Department of Commerce, and from the State Department. If, therefore, we should modify the language of the resolution which the Post-Office Committee now submits as to the inquiry made of the Postmaster-General, I presume that the gentleman from Nebraska would assume that he had further lease of life for notoriety in seeking additional information from each of the Departments that had already been inquired of.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is this substitute not reported unanimously from your committee?

Mr. OVERSTREET. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, at its meeting held this morning.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will you allow me one question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. There was so much disturbance on the floor I could not hear. Does your substitute cover the time of the inquiry for twelve months or two years?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The substitute is in the identical language of every resolution thus far passed by the House which covers the various Departments, with possibly the exception of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then one more question. If an officer had carriages two months ago, or one week ago, and has turned them in before this inquiry goes to him——

Mr. OVERSTREET. I can answer the question more quickly by reading the resolution.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Thank you; I could not hear it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I read from the resolution adopted by the House yesterday, calling for information from the State Department, and I substituted the "Postmaster-General" where the resolution has "Secretary of State:"

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to this House, at his earliest convenience, a statement showing the number of horses, carriages, and automobiles maintained at Government expense for the officials of his Department, together with a statement showing the cost of said horses, carriages, automobiles, and harness, the date of purchase, from what fund the payment was made, and the amount of wages paid to men acting as coachmen, footmen, and chauffeurs, whether carried on the rolls as such or in some other classification; also, the list of officials entitled to the use of such carriages and the date when such service was inaugurated.

That means the information up to the time he received this resolution.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Now, pardon me. If I understand your substitute, if he has turned that carriage in he does not have to report the date at which it was bought or the cost.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course he does.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Is that your construction of it?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am hardly prepared to even assume that any Cabinet officer is going to resort to a trick of that low character.

Mr. MADDOX. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MADDOX. Will you just answer a single question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do.

Mr. MADDOX. Do you construe your resolution, that is, the resolution from your committee, to cover all expenses from the time the service was inaugurated up to date? Is that the idea?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am following, or rather the committee is following, exactly the language of every other resolution thus far reported by the House.

Mr. MADDOX. I understand that.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Wait a moment. It is not, I think, fair now to frame a resolution which would be susceptible of a different construction, for this reason, if the House desires this information from the various Departments of the Government it should come to us under similar requests made of each, so that we will have the same construction on each one of the inquiries.

Mr. MADDOX. If the gentleman will permit me just a minute, I think if we can ever get order, and the Members of this House can understand what we are after, probably the trouble will be reached. What struck me was the vital question covering the idea suggested by the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. OVERSTREET. My construction is this: I will say to my friend that the date of purchase will limit the beginning of the inquiry. If they have any such articles in the Department then they will report them, together with the date of purchase. I do not care how far back it goes. It relates to the articles they have at the time they get the inquiry.

Mr. MADDOX. It is not to bring along with it the expense that has occurred from that date up to this time. That is what I am after.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I presume so.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will take time enough to read the original resolution of the gentleman from Nebraska——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to read for the information of the House the original resolution of the gentleman from Nebraska and call attention to the changes, and the only changes, that have been made in that resolution by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. The resolution is:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish this House at his earliest convenience a statement showing the number of horses, carriages, and automobiles maintained at Government expense for the use of officials in his Department, together with a statement showing the cost of said horses, carriages, automobiles, and harness.

Down to that point both resolutions are identically the same. Then the committee has added this:

The date of purchase, and from what fund the payment was made—

The rest of his resolution is the same—and the amount of wages paid to men acting as coachmen, footmen, and chauffeurs, whether carried on the rolls as such or in some other capacity; also the list of officials entitled to the use of said carriages.

It will be readily seen by the Members of the House that the substitute resolution is much broader and includes a great deal more than the original resolution. It includes all that the gentleman from Nebraska called for and a great deal more. The resolution reported by the committee will, if answered, give the House far more and fuller information on the subject to which the resolution relates.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would like to ask the gentleman——

Mr. OVERSTREET. I want to call the attention of the House to an additional amendment which further broadens the resolution. At the end of the resolution originally offered by the gentleman from Nebraska, and after the word "carriages" there have been inserted in each of the several resolutions the following language: "On the date when such service was inaugurated." So that the substitutes which have been thus far adopted by the House are much broader than the original resolutions. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask the gentleman from Indiana this question as to his own construction of the resolution as it stands. Suppose that somebody hitherto having a carriage or automobile, knowing that this inquiry was pending before the House and would be reported, were to dispose of the carriage or automobile. Then I ask the gentleman this question: Could he not then in his reply to this resolution of inquiry simply say: "January 27, 1904," or whatever date it was, "this division, or this bureau, has no carriage, has no automobile in its service, and therefore there is no date of the purchase of the automobile or carriage." Does not the gentleman think that might happen?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I answer that if that criticism should lie against this substitute, it would not only lie against each of the substitutes adopted by the House, but also against the original resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I am not talking about the original resolution. You have in some respects made the original resolution better. The question now is whether, with the original resolution as you have made it, you can not still further better it by admitting this language and avoiding the possibility of this loophole of escape when the replies are made.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I want a minute to ask the gentleman from Mississippi a question. Is not this resolution in the identical terms that it was reported from the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Certainly; and I voted for it. I am sorry the gentleman has asked that question, because it forces me to confess in public that I had not the insight nor the foresight of the gentleman from Nebraska, who has discovered this possible loophole and convinced me that it is a loophole.

Mr. TAWNEY. The insight and the foresight of the gentleman from Nebraska happens to be the gentleman's hindsight, because the gentleman from Nebraska did not discover it until afterwards.

Mr. DALZELL. Let me ask the gentleman from Mississippi if he did not participate in the discussion and make the suggestion——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes; I agreed to the resolution brought into the House from the Committee on Ways and Means at the time, and thought at the time that the resolution was broad enough, and the only suggestion I made was to broaden the original resolution which I voted for and to which I agreed.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The question was taken; and the substitute resolution was agreed to.

PRINTING BLANK FRANKS.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2121) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents."

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 23 of the Statutes of the United States entitled "An act providing for public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents," approved January 12, 1895 (28 Stat. L., p. 606), be, and is hereby, amended by inserting, after the words "blank franks" where they occur in the second paragraph of section 37 of said chapter, the following words: "printed on sheets and perforated, or singly, at the option of said Senators, Members, and Delegates."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana to explain this.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. The object of this bill is to authorize the Public Printer in preparing the frank slips for the use of the Senate and House to so perforate the sheets as to facilitate the addressing when the time comes to send out packages of seeds and public documents. The perforations will save a great deal of work, and the expense is practically nothing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PROCEEDINGS ON UNVEILING OF STATUE OF COUNT ROCHAMBEAU.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following concurrent resolution No. 4.

The Clerk read as follows:

Concurrent resolution No. 4.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed, and bound in the form such as is customary in the case of eulogies, 20,000 copies of the proceedings upon the unveiling of the statue of the Count de Rochambeau, of which 6,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 12,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 to be delivered to the ambassador of the Republic of France for such distribution as he shall think fit, the remaining 1,000, of which 200 shall be bound in full morocco, to be distributed, under the direction of the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library, to the guests invited from the French Republic and the speakers who took part in said celebration.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana why it is that the Senate, in the distribution of these documents, is given a great many more, in proportion to the number, than the House receives? The Senate gets 3,000 and the House 6,000. We have 386 Members and they have 90 members. I will ask if the committee considered that that was a fair distribution between the two Houses?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. The resolution is just as it came from the Senate. That question was not raised by anyone in the committee.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think the committee ought to raise the question of its own motion for the protection of the Members of the House in getting their share of the public documents.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] that this is not an unusual division. The division is somewhat arbitrary, and in the case of distributions previously made I understand this rule is followed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman if it is not done on the theory that Senators have a very much larger constituency than Members have, individually?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I should say that possibly that has something to do with it. The same distribution has been followed, Mr. Speaker, in similar publications provided for by the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution.

There was no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted, I would like to offer an amendment. I have no objection to the present consideration of the resolution, but I will offer an amendment placing the number to be distributed or placed to the credit of the Senate at 2,000 and the number to be placed to the credit of the House and the House document room at 7,000.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I have no objection to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "three" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two."

Also, in line 8 strike out "six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seven."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

TREATIES, LAWS, AND ORDERS RELATING TO INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate concurrent resolution which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound 3,000 copies of Senate Document No. 452, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, entitled "Treaties, Laws, Executive Orders, etc., Relating to Indian Affairs," as revised, 300 of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 800 for the House of Representatives, 200 for the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, 50 for the House Committee on Indian Affairs, 50 for the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, and the remaining 1,100 shall be sold by the Superintendent of Documents.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

CHARLES CARROLL AND JOHN HANSON.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate concurrent resolution which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound of the proceedings in Congress upon the acceptance of the statues of Charles Carroll of Carrollton and John Hanson, presented by the State of Maryland, 16,500 copies, of which 5,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 10,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 1,500 copies shall be for the use and distribution of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Maryland.

The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to have the copy prepared for the Public Printer, who shall procure suitable copper-process plates to be bound with these memorials.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask if the chairman of the Committee on Printing will not consent to an amendment to this resolution changing the ratio of numbers of copies for distribution between the two Houses, so that there will be 3,000 for the use of the Senate and 12,000 for the use of the House?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I have no objection to accepting the amendment, but I wish to say in this connection that this is the usual distribution which is made of documents of this nature.
